DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On December 31, 1980, Administrative Law Judge Benjamin Schlesinger issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, the General Counsel and Charging Party Charles E. Clendenin filed exceptions and supporting briefs; Henry J. Kaiser Company (herein also called Respondent Employer or Kaiser) and Journeymen Pipe Fitters Local No. 392, affiliated with the United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipe Fitting Industry of the United States and Canada, AFL-CIO (herein also called Respondent Union), filed answering briefs; and Respondent Union filed cross-exceptions.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order, as modified herein.

We agree with the Administrative Law Judge's finding that Respondent Union, inter alia, violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act by its unlawful failure to accept and/or process a grievance on behalf of its member Charles E. Clendenin.[2] However, we find that, in order to remedy that violation, the Administrative Law Judge should have included an order requiring Respondent Union to pursue Clendenin's grievance in good faith with due diligence and to make Clendenin whole for any loss of earnings he may have suffered as a result of Respondent Union's unlawful conduct.

The Administrative Law Judge found that it would be inappropriate to grant such a remedy here because the Company would most likely assert that Clendenin's grievance was now time barred and that Clendenin could not in any event demonstrate that his discharge was contrary to the collective-bargaining agreement. However, in devising an appropriate remedy for a union's unlawful refusal to process a grievance, the Board has not made a backpay award conditional on the merits of the grievance.[3] The fact that Clendenin's discharge may not have been unlawful, here, has nothing to do with the fact that Respondent Union violated the Act by failing to process Clendenin's grievance. As the Administrative Law Judge points out in his Decision:

> [M]erely because the Company took disciplinary action which does not violate the Act does not mean that an arbitrator might not have deemed the discipline unwarranted or too severe. An arbitrator is not bound by the same factual findings that I have made; he may do industrial justice and may effectuate a compromise of a grievance, whereas the Board may not.

It is uncertain whether the processing of Clendenin's grievance would have resulted in a milder form of discipline or any discipline at all. This uncertainty results from Respondent Union's unlawful action. Where, as here, such an uncertainty requires resolution, at least for the purposes of determining monetary responsibility, we deem it only proper to resolve the question in favor of the discriminatee and against the wrongdoer.[4] Since Respondent Union did not prove that had it processed Clendenin's grievance Clendenin still would have been terminated, we shall resolve the uncertainty in favor of Clendenin and find that Clendenin is entitled to at least some backpay. However, Respondent Union's backpay liability must be limited to any loss Clendenin suffered as a result of the refusal to consider and process his grievance. That grievance now appears to be time barred under the terms of the applicable collective-bargaining agreement, but

[1] Both the General Counsel and the Charging Party have excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Administrative Law Judge. It is the Board's established policy not to overrule an administrative law judge's resolutions with respect to credibility unless the clear preponderance of all of the relevant evidence convinces us that the resolutions are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, Inc., 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing his findings.

In the last paragraph in the section of his Decision entitled "The Union's Failure To Process the Grievance," the Administrative Law Judge inadvertently found that the "Union violated Section 8(a)(b)(1)(A) of the Act." This should read that the "Union violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act."

[2] The grievance concerned Clendenin's disciplinary discharge by Kaiser on or about January 28, 1980. Clendenin's discharge was also the subject of an 8(a)(3) charge which was consolidated with the instant charge, but was found to be without merit by the Administrative Law Judge herein.

Respondent Union may be able to prevail upon Kaiser to waive those time limits. Accordingly, we shall order Respondent Union to make Clendenin whole for any loss of earnings he may have suffered as a result of his discharge by Henry J. Kaiser Company from the date of his discharge, January 28, 1980, until the earlier of the following occurs: Respondent Union secures consideration of his grievance by Kaiser and thereafter pursues it in good faith and with due diligence, or Clendenin is reinstated by Kaiser or obtains substantially equivalent employment.[5] Centex Homes of California, supra; United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO (Inter-Royal Corp.), 223 NLRB 1184 (1976). ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge, as modified below, and hereby orders that the Respondent Employer, Henry J. Kaiser Company, Moscow, Ohio, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the said recommended Order, and that the Respondent Union, Journeymen Pipe Fitters Local No. 392, affiliated with the United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipe Fitting Industry of the United States and Canada, AFL-CIO, Cincinnati, Ohio, its officers, agents, and representatives, shall take the action set forth in the said recommended Order, as so modified:

1. Insert the following as paragraphs B,2,(a) and (b), and reletter the subsequent paragraphs accordingly:

"(a) Request Henry J. Kaiser Company to reinstate Charles E. Clendenin to his former position or, if it no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position. If Henry J. Kaiser Company refuses to reinstate him, ask it to consider a grievance over his January 28, 1980, discharge, and thereafter pursue his grievance in good faith with all due diligence.

"(b) Make Charles E. Clendenin whole for any loss of earnings he may have suffered as a result of his discharge by Henry J. Kaiser Company from January 28, 1980, until such time as he is reinstated by Henry J. Kaiser Company or obtains other substantially equivalent employment or Respondent Union secures consideration of his grievance by Kaiser and thereafter pursues it will all due diligence, whichever is sooner, together with interest, to be computed in the manner set forth in the Board's Decision and Order."

2. Substitute the attached Appendix B for that of the Administrative Law Judge.

APPENDIX B

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES AND MEMBERS
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

WE WILL NOT fail or refuse to fairly represent any employee we represent in the processing and filing of grievances.

WE WILL NOT coercively interrogate employees in preparation for defense of unfair labor practice proceedings without first obtaining voluntary participation by said employees and without first giving said employees assurances against reprisals if they choose not to participate in said interviews.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner restrain or coerce employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended.

WE WILL request Henry J. Kaiser Company to reinstate Charles E. Clendenin to his former position or, if it no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position. If Henry J. Kaiser Company refuses to reinstate him, WE WILL ask it to consider a grievance over his January 28, 1980, discharge and thereafter pursue his grievance in good faith with all due diligence.

WE WILL make Charles E. Clendenin whole for any loss of earnings he may have suffered as a result of his discharge by Henry J. Kaiser Company from January 28, 1980, until such time as he is reinstated by Henry J. Kaiser Company or obtains other substantially equivalent employment or we secure consideration of his grievance by Kaiser and thereafter pursue it with all due diligence, whichever is sooner, together with interest.

[5] Counsel for the General Counsel further asserts that attorney's fees should be granted to Clendenin in order that he might be represented by his own attorney during any grievance arbitration proceeding. We find, however, that our modified Order herein provides adequate incentive for Respondent Union so that it will responsibly represent Clendenin's grievance.

If Respondent Union secures consideration of Clendenin's grievance by Kaiser, Member Fanning would terminate Respondent Union's backpay liability at that point unless Respondent Union fails to process the grievance in good faith and with due diligence.

[6] See, generally, Isis Plumbing & Heating Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962). Member Jenkins would award interest on backpay due based on the formula set forth in his partial dissent in Olympic Medical Corporation, 250 NLRB 146 (1980).

JOURNEYMEN PIPE FITTERS LOCAL NO. 392, AFFILIATED WITH THE UNITED ASSOCIATION OF JOURNEYMEN AND APPRENTICES OF THE PLUMBING AND PIPE FITTING INDUSTRY OF THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA, AFL-CIO

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

BENJAMIN SCHLESINGER, Administrative Law Judge: This proceeding was heard by me in Cincinnati, Ohio, on September 8-10, 1980. Based on two unfair labor practice charges filed by Charles E. Clendenin on January 28, 1980, two complaints issued, one on March 18, 1980, against Henry J. Kaiser Company, herein the Company, and the other on March 20, 1980, against Journeymen Pipe Fitters Local No. 392, affiliated with the United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipe Fitting Industry of the United States and Canada, AFL-CIO, herein the Union, which complaints were consolidated by order of the Regional Director for Region 9 on March 20, 1980.

The consolidated complaints allege that the Company violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act by terminating Clendenin on January 28, 1980, and that the Union violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act by declining to process Clendenin's grievance complaining of his termination. In addition, the complaint against the Company alleges that it assigned overtime to members of the Union on a preferential basis and that, when the attorneys for the Company and the Union were preparing for the instant proceeding, they interviewed prospective employee witnesses without giving the notice required by Johnnie's Poultry Co. and John Bishop Poultry Co., 146 NLRB 770 (1964), enforcement denied 344 F.2d 617 (8th Cir. 1965). Both the Company and the Union denied that they violated the Act in any respect.

Upon due consideration of the entire record herein, including the demeanor of the witnesses and the briefs of the General Counsel, the Company, and the Union, I hereby render the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

A. The Company

The Company, a Nevada corporation, is engaged in the construction industry as a general and a design contractor and has an office and place of business in Moscow, Ohio, where it is a contractor at the Wm H. Zimmer Nuclear Power Station construction site.[1] During the 12 months preceding the issuance of the complaints herein, a representative period, the Company, in the course and conduct of its business operations, purchased and received products, goods, and materials valued in excess of $50,000 which were shipped to its Moscow, Ohio, construction site directly from points outside the State of Ohio. Accordingly, I find and conclude, as the Company admits, that it is and has been an employer engaged in commerce and in operations affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

B. The Union

I also find and conclude, as the Union admits, that it is and has been at all times material herein a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act. Both it and the Company, as a member of the National Constructors Association, are bound by the provisions of a collective-bargaining agreement covering the terms and conditions of the employment of the Company's employees.

II. THE DISCHARGE OF CLENDENIN

A. Preliminary Facts

Clendenin was terminated upon recommendation of his foreman, Tom Watson, on January 28, 1980, for being out of his work area and, the Company contends, for nonproductivity. That morning, Clendenin reported at the fifth floor of the reactor building for the regular 7:30 Monday morning safety meeting, a gathering of employees where a safety memorandum was distributed for reading and discussion by the employees. What transpired between 7:30 a.m. and an hour or so later, when Clendenin was discharged, is subject to dispute because the three principals, Watson, Clendenin, and his working partner, Alfred A. Thompson (Double A),[2] testified to three somewhat differing series of events.

What is not at issue is that after the safety meeting, which lasted approximately 15 minutes, employees were required to go to work; that Thompson, but not Clendenin, began to work after the meeting; that, at or about 8:10 a.m., Watson found Clendenin not at his worksite and directed him to go to work with Thompson; that Clendenin refused, saying that he had to use the toilet facilities; that Watson once again directed Clendenin to report to work; and that Clendenin again refused and left the worksite to go to a facility with flush toilets. As Clendenin was returning, Watson called to him to report to the Company's trailer-office, where Clendenin was terminated by General Foreman Oscar Willingham.

The General Counsel's attack upon Clendenin's discharge is two-pronged. First, the General Counsel claims the discharge was not for just cause because no employee had ever before been discharged for going to the bathroom. Second, the General Counsel claims that, even if there was merit to the discharge of Clendenin, the just cause was merely a pretext for Clendenin's protected and concerted activities of openly criticizing what he thought was the Company's illegitimate practice of assigning overtime work to members of the Union, rather than to "travelers," members of other locals of the same International union (Clendenin is a member of Local 789, located in Tulsa, Oklahoma).

[2] Normally, a pipefitter (Clendenin) will work with a welder (Thompson).

B. Just Cause

Clendenin testified that, when the safety meeting ended, he ascertained from Thompson that he would be working at the same site that he worked at the previous Friday.[3] He had also ascertained that, on the Saturday before, when he did not work, Watson had "changed hats" from a foreman to an employee and worked with Thompson, a job which Clendenin claimed as his own. In any event, Clendenin was notified by Thompson that he was going to obtain some tools from the toolshed, located outside the reactor building, and would meet Clendenin back at the worksite—a pipe chase located above the fourth floor of the reactor building reached by climbing a 30 foot scaffold from the fourth floor or descending onto the scaffold from a rear stairway on the fifth floor.

Clendenin then went to the toolbox, pulled out some grinders, and went to the worksite. There, he checked the equipment which had been left and found that Thompson had not yet arrived. Knowing that he could not get anything done by himself and needing to go to the bathroom, Clendenin descended from the scaffold to the fourth floor landing, returned to the fifth floor to get his coat, and came back to the fourth floor landing, where he waited to tell Thompson that he was going to the bathroom.

As he waited, along came Watson, whose view of Clendenin's activities up to that time was entirely different. According to Watson, Clendenin paid little attention to the safety meeting, conversing instead with other employees. When the meeting ended, and all of Watson's crew had dispersed, Clendenin continued his discussions, eventually sauntering over to Watson's desk to pick up and read the safety memorandum which the other employees had read 15 minutes before. Watson watched Clendenin until about 8 a.m., never mentioning to him to get to work. Then, Watson left the fifth floor, attended to other business, and returned to the fifth floor to check whether Clendenin had gone to work. Not seeing him there, Watson proceeded to the fourth floor, where he saw Clendenin talking with two other employees. It was then about 8:05 a.m.

In reviewing the testimonies of Watson and Clendenin, the conflict is clear; at least up to 8:05 a.m., Clendenin says that he was performing his normal duties. If he had to use the toilet facilities, I am satisfied that the Company's practices allowed an employee to go to the bathroom (either a portable urinal, located on various floors of the reactor building, or a heated bathroom with flush toilets, located about a quarter mile from the reactor building), at any time, without a supervisor's permission, and only upon notifying his work partner of his whereabouts. On the other hand, if Watson's testimony was accurate, Clendenin was being wholly and inexcusably derelict by failing to perform any services.

Watson and Clendenin agree that, when Watson appeared at the fourth floor, Clendenin (who implied that he was alone) asked whether Watson was going to continue to work with Thompson as he had the prior Saturday. There may have been mention of whether Watson was wearing his foremen's hat or employee's hat. Clendenin also testified that Watson stated that, because he was a union member, he could do whatever he wanted. Watson denied saying this and I credit his denial. Both principals agree that Watson's answer was clear. Watson climbed up the scaffold to get to the pipe chase, saw Thompson working there alone, and directed Clendenin to go to work. Clendenin announced, according to him, that he was going to the bathroom; according to Watson, that he was going to "take a piss," the difference being that the former entailed a quarter-mile walk and the latter only a short distance away on the fourth floor. Watson again directed Clendenin to start working, and Clendenin walked away, proceeding in a direction opposite to the closest urinal, where Watson supposed that Clendenin was going. In fact, Clendenin proceeded to the flush toilets.

That ends the discussion of Clendenin's acts that morning, at least up to the time of his discharge. Watson's story, however, continues. After seeing Thompson working alone in the pipe chase and doing work which should have been done by two men, Watson, concerned about Thompson's safety, instructed him to stop working. Watson then left the pipe chase, went to attend to other duties, and (still thinking that Clendenin had gone to the urinal) returned to the chase some 5 minutes later to see whether Clendenin had returned. Again seeing Thompson alone, Watson again told him to stop working and that if another supervisor wandered by to inform the other supervisor that he was not working on Watson's directions. Watson also determined that he had had enough of Clendenin and went to the Company's trailer-office to recommend to Willingham that Clendenin be fired.

Finding the facts herein might have been made easy if only Thompson had corroborated the testimony of either Clendenin or Watson. Unfortunately, that was not the case. Located in the pipe chase, Thompson was able to see or hear little of what was going on outside the chase, on the scaffold, or below on the fourth floor landing, but what he heard amounted to a factual recitation partially at odds with both principal disputants. First, affirming Watson's testimony that he visited the pipe chase twice, Thompson testified that Watson, in his first visit, asked where Clendenin was. That obviously conflicts with Watson's testimony that he had seen Clendenin engaging in conversation with two other employees and had himself talked with Clendenin on his way up the scaffold. Thus, there would have been no reason for Watson to ask Thompson of Clendenin's whereabouts. Second, Thompson stated that Watson never told him to stop working, contradicting Watson's professed concern for [3] Thompson testified that he spoke with Clendenin about this before the meeting started. However, Clendenin knew that Thompson had been asked to work the prior Friday.

Thompson's safety. Third, Thompson testified that, between the first and second visit by Watson, he heard Clendenin yell, "I'll be back, Double A." This contradicted Clendenin, who said that he yelled to Thompson before leaving to get his coat on the fifth floor and before Watson had arrived.[4] Fourth, Thompson told Clendenin at the safety meeting that all the necessary tools were at the worksite, other than those he was going to get from the toolshed. Clendenin's testimony conflicts with Thompson's: he stated that, after the meeting, he went to get the necessary tools from the toolbox—but only Thompson had a key—and went to check what tools were at the site, although Thompson had already told him that all the tools were there. Further, if Clendenin's testimony were truthful, that he arrived at the worksite 5 minutes after the meeting, he surely would have met Thompson, who arrived there at or about the same time and lifted the tools in buckets from the fourth floor to the chase and commenced working. Yet Clendenin testified that he saw the buckets (which should have already been lifted) and still insisted that Thompson was not present. I find that most improbable.[5]

Thompson was not otherwise favorable to Clendenin, depicting him as often engaged in talk, particularly with one other employee, at locations other than the worksite, thus delaying Thompson's completion of jobs. I found Thompson to be sincere and, of the three principal witnesses, the only one who had no reason to favor either party with his testimony. On the other hand, I am persuaded that some of his perceptions were simply inaccurate and, based on the probabilities, specifically discredit his testimony that Watson, at the time of his first visit, asked where Clendenin was, finding it more probable that Watson asked him whether Clendenin had worked up to that time, and discredit his testimony that Clendenin yelled that he would be back, finding that Clendenin's shout probably occurred, if it did at all, at the time of Watson's first visit, as Clendenin left for the toilet.

I am equally persuaded that Thompson would have no reason to misrepresent Clendenin's work habits. That Clendenin was loquacious was evident at the hearing, and even he admitted that he had been cautioned two or three times before his discharge about not doing his work quickly enough, which I attribute to his lack of attention to his work. Willingham had advised him previously that he ought to take more interest in his job; and Watson was always "jiving" him about his work. Finally, I note that on the day of his discharge, Clendenin, who is also an attorney, spoke not one word in his own defense in reply to at least the one charge he admitted knowing about—being out of his work area.

In sum, there is sufficient evidence on its face to support a conclusion that the Company had at least some independent basis for disciplining Clendenin. Thompson was at his job for 15-20 minutes before Watson's first visit; Clendenin was not, despite the ample time he had to join Thompson in the pipe chase. Instead, he searched for tools that he did not need, relied upon an excuse of going to the bathroom (after being at the job for about 40 minutes) to disobey a direction of his supervisor to commence working, and would not have been able to perform his first minute of work until more than an hour after the workday began.

C. Pretext

I am persuaded that Clendenin complained, at least earlier in his employment, about the fact that he was not given adequate overtime, and I conclude that he was engaged in protected activity. Clendenin's involvement with the issue of overtime commenced shortly after July 5, 1979, when he was reassigned to the "flush crew," a crew of employees under the supervision of Foreman Adam Kleinholz engaged in testing pipes and joints. Clendenin testified that he discovered that overtime work on the flush crew, which was composed primarily of members of the Union, was regularly assigned to union members (including those who did not work on the flush crews), rather than to travelers. Kleinholz, a member of the Union, maintained at his desk an overtime list which (according to Clendenin) contained the names only of union members who came to Kleinholz during the day to ask for overtime assignments. When Clendenin, a traveler, questioned Kleinholz on several occasions as to when he was going to have his own name placed on the overtime list, Kleinholz replied that Clendenin was only in the "triple A league" and that when he got into the "major league," his name would be put on the overtime list.[6] I agree with the General Counsel that the clear import of what Kleinholz was stating—Kleinholz did not testify—was that Clendenin or any other traveler would have to be a member of the Union before receiving preferential overtime assignments.

The record of overtime given to the flush crew does not fully sustain the General Counsel's position. Admittedly, although the composite exhibit purports to cover the period from July 16 through August 21, 1979, the day after Clendenin had been reassigned to the hanger crew, no time records were produced for 5 days in July and a full 2 weeks in August.[7] The remaining records show that Clendenin worked overtime on 3 of 11 days that overtime was worked, demonstrating that discrimination against him was not complete. The exhibit, however, shows that many union members worked overtime on the flush crew, even though they did not work on that crew during regular hours. Union members worked overtime on 57 occasions, while travelers worked only 14 times, a far greater ratio than the number of times regular hours were worked by union members and travelers (48 versus 31, respectively). A number of union members whom Clendenin heard making requests of Kleinholz for overtime received overtime assignments.

[4] I reject the General Counsel's contention that Thompson's testimony corroborates Clendenin's assertion that he was leaving for the bathroom. Clendenin testified that he yelled to Thompson only, "Hey, Double A" to check whether Thompson was already in the pipe chase. Further, in light of Clendenin's insistence that he was waiting for Thompson to arrive, it is improbable that he would indicate to someone who was not there that he was leaving. Finally, the substance of Clendenin's message was not necessarily that he was going to the bathroom. It could have meant solely that he was leaving the location to talk with the employees whom Watson saw Clendenin with a few minutes later.

[5] I note that it was possible, as Clendenin recognized, to approach the worksite from the fifth floor and along the scaffold, bypassing the fourth floor. In light of that fact, it is peculiar that Clendenin chose to wait for Thompson on the fourth floor, where he might miss him. Moreover, because of Thompson's testimony of his own whereabouts and his preparation for work, I conclude that Clendenin made little, if any, effort to go to work.

[6] The Company objected to this evidence in its brief on the basis that these conversations are not within the 6-month time limitation prescribed in Sec. 10(b) of the Act. It is well established that, although no findings of unfair labor practices may be based upon acts occurring more than 6 months prior to filing of an unfair labor practice charge, such facts may be used as background to establish motivation as well as to explain the alleged violations occurring within the 6-month period. Local Lodge No. 1424, International Association of Machinists AFL-CIO; and International Association of Machinists, AFL-CIO [Bryan Manufacturing Co.] v. N.L.R.B., 362 U.S. 411, 416, fn. 6 (1960).

It is true that all or many of the regular crew members may have declined to accept overtime, thus explaining why other employees worked. Some union crew members (for example, Andrews, Young, and Begley) worked even less overtime than did Clendenin. Two travelers, Gering and East, who were not members of the regular crew, worked more overtime than all but three union members, which included Foreman Kleinholz. However, it remains undenied that Clendenin frequently requested overtime from Kleinholz and was not given it, whereas others were. There is clearly a prima facie case of discrimination against him because of his status as a traveler; and the Company neither rebutted it nor explained it in any way. I conclude not only that the General Counsel's allegation was proved, Motor City Electric Company, 204 NLRB 460 (1973), enfd. as modified 512 F.2d 719 (5th Cir. 1975), but also that a necessary predicate for Clendenin's later actions was sufficiently established.

As stated above, on August 20, 1979, Clendenin was transferred to the hanger crew, which, unlike the flush crew, was composed almost entirely of travelers. His reputation as one who complained of lack of overtime apparently preceded him. Employee Charles Sears testified that on the same day he heard both Watson and Foreman James Robinson protest to Willingham that Clendenin should not be transferred to their own crews because he was a "troublemaker." Despite the denials of this conversation by both Willingham and Watson, I credit Sears, finding that he was genuinely sincere and unbiased and that, in this instance, his recall was precise and his testimony was probable. Although the General Counsel does not allege any separate violation, the circumstances of the transfer to the hanger crew were suspect, coming only a few days after Clendenin had not been given an overtime assignment that C G & E had wanted him and Marvin Ellison, his partner and another traveler, to work. Because of the Company's assignment of that work to union members, Clendenin complained, and his complaints resulted in two union members being taken off that job and Clendenin and his partner being given the overtime work on August 17, 1979. As a result, Clendenin did "make trouble," and Watson's and Robinson's comments were likely the result.

Clendenin worked on the hanger crew from August 20, 1979, until he was terminated. Apparently, the employees on that crew also had their difficulty with the assignment of overtime, but the problems that they encountered and raised were different from the alleged complete denial of overtime on the flush crews. Rather, the employees complained that they did not receive an equitable share of overtime when compared with other crews, such as the flush and pipe crews, which consisted primarily of union members, and that often, when they were asked to work overtime, they would be asked so late in the day that they found it difficult or impossible to accept. There is no question that these two grievances were raised (but not by Clendenin) at one and possibly two meetings conducted or attended by Willingham in late August or early September or November 1979.[8]

On his last day of employment, Clendenin asked Watson whether he had worked overtime with Thompson during the weekend and whether he was going to continue as an employee that Monday. The General Counsel contends that Clendenin's taunting—described by Watson as "smart aleck" and "arrogant"—was the direct motivation for Clendenin's discharge. Thus, the General Counsel contends that had not Clendenin griped about Watson's having worked overtime in Clendenin's place Watson would have permitted Clendenin to use the toilet, would not have ordered him to commence working, and would not have recommended his discharge. Rather, Watson merely seized upon Clendenin's failure to work to conceal his real motive; i.e., to get rid of a "troublemaker."

The theory that the reason for the discharge was merely a pretext is not wholly without support in the record. In addition to the "troublemaker" remarks, which Watson denied, Willingham conceded that at one time he counseled Clendenin about worrying so much about overtime that he would not work during the day. Further, there is some record support for the proposition that Watson should not be believed. I have noted a number of instances where I have not credited Watson, including his failure to request Thompson, whom he found alone on January 28, to stop working as a result of a possible safety hazard. That appeared to be a major reason for Watson's actions that morning and, by discrediting this testimony, his motivation is somewhat suspect.

Further, I am not entirely satisfied with the events of January 25, 1980, and the Company's explanation of why Clendenin was not offered overtime while Watson worked on Saturday in the position occupied by Clendenin the prior day. The testimony of Watson, in particular, was conflicting and inconsistent, and appeared to contradict that of Willingham. Watson shifted from a statement that he did not ask Clendenin to work (because he was not at his worksite), to a statement that he did ask Clendenin, to a statement that he asked him even though he would not have been eligible for overtime because he was absent the prior Wednesday and Thursday. Willingham assumed that all employees had been asked, but wanted Watson to work, although he could not recall why, except that he believed that there might have been insufficient time to notify employees.

[7] The General Counsel does not contend that an adverse inference should be drawn from the absence of company records.

[8] The General Counsel contends that, at these two meetings, Willingham specifically stated that union members would receive overtime before travelers. I discredit such testimony, finding instead that Willingham merely referred to priority in assignments being given to foremen because a foreman was required to be on the job at all times. I note that there were not only union members who were foremen on the hanger crew, but also travelers. Moreover, the documentary evidence does not prove that preference was given to union members on the hanger crew. Rather, for the period from August 22, 1978, to November 16, 1979, only one union member (not a foreman) worked overtime twice. Thereafter, overtime was worked on 7 days by a substantial majority of travelers.

On the other hand, Clendenin was not wholly believable either. His dislike of the Company caused him to level a series of broadsides, contending that his lack of productivity could not have been a reason for his discharge because the Company was not concerned with it. Employees were encouraged, when there was no work to do, to hide themselves. Relative to seniority, Clendenin insisted that there was plantwide seniority for union members, but only crew seniority for travelers, despite the fact that the record does not really support this contention. When faced with the fact that, even on the flush crew, he was given overtime, Clendenin explained that it was due to his reputation as an attorney that certain engineers recommended him. But the reputation was meaningless in light of Clendenin's explanation that he was given only the "dirty" and "nasty" tasks that union members refused to do. When pressed for details, Clendenin refused to name the engineers for fear that the Union would have them terminated.

Based upon a review of the entire record, I find that the General Counsel has failed to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that Clendenin's discharge was motivated at all by his complaints. Indeed, Clendenin tended to exaggerate the extent of his complaints that he was discriminated against because he was a traveler. The record demonstrates that only one minimal complaint was made by him from the time that he was transferred to the hanger crew until the Monday on which he was discharged.[9] More importantly, there is little to show that Watson's recommendation that Clendenin be discharged was made because Clendenin had complained about Watson's having assumed his overtime. Rather, Watson went to Clendenin's worksite not because of Clendenin's complaint but because he observed that Clendenin was not working. His directive to Clendenin to commence working was merely a followup to the reason he went there in the first place—to ensure that Clendenin was performing work for the wages which the Company was expected to pay.

There is no dispute that by at least 8:30 a.m., according to Clendenin, he had not performed any work. According to other witnesses, the time of Clendenin's discharge was some 10 minutes or more later. In any event, the General Counsel contends that the Company originally discharged Clendenin solely for being out of his work area, arguing that no employee had ever before been dismissed for using the restroom facilities. Although I am persuaded that employees were free to use the facilities, as long as they notified their partners, and that Clendenin did not breach this rule per se, Clendenin clearly sought to use the rule to avoid work and, in that sense, since he was successful, the Company properly indicated that he was discharged for nonproductivity.[10]

I have assumed, arguendo, that Clendenin's activities were both protected and concerted. I conclude that there is a sufficient basis that his conduct was concerted. There were a number of employees who were disturbed about the distribution of overtime to the hanger crew and who believed that union members were taking advantage of their union membership to the detriment of the travelers. Although the General Counsel conceded that there was nothing inherently illegal about a foreman assumfng a journeyman's functions, as Watson did on January 26, it was Clendenin's suspicion that the taking away of his overtime was part of the same scheme of denial of overtime to travelers because they were not union members. Actually, in the circumstances, that might not be so; rather, Watson's working overtime could be equally due to his being a foreman. In any event, Clendenin's complaint was merely an extension of the same kind of complaint that other travelers had made; and I find that, because his complaint may have tended to redound to the benefit of all the travelers, it constituted protected concerted activity. ARO, Inc., 227 NLRB 243 (1976), enforcement denied 596 F.2d 713 (6th Cir. 1979).[11]

I also find that Clendenin's implied adverse criticism of Watson was protected, since it constituted a complaint concerning working conditions, that is, Watson's assumption of an employee's overtime. But I find little in the manner in which Clendenin expressed his complaint to be protected. The initial questions he put to Watson were clearly within appropriate bounds. But, upon receiving Watson's answer that he had resumed his foreman's hat, and was not working as a journeyman, Clendenin had no right to protest Saturday's actions by refusing to work on Monday. By so holding, I reject Clendenin's claim that, at that moment, he had to use the bathroom and could not go to work. Rather, Clendenin admitted that despite his contention that he had diarrhea, a condition he suffered from the prior Wednesday and Thursday, his need to go to the bathroom was not that "imminent." Indeed, none of his actions indicated any crisis; on finding that Thompson was not at the worksite at Clendenin's first visit, Clendenin, despite having to attend to his bodily needs, returned to the fifth floor to get his jacket and then to the fourth floor to await Thompson's arrival. Considering that he had ample time all morning to take care of himself, that he was well enough to return to work the prior Friday, and the otherwise untrustworthiness of his testimony, I conclude that pique, not physical illness, caused Clendenin's actions. His refusal to work and defiance of Watson's instructions to go to work was unprotected. As a result, I conclude that the Company's termination of Clendenin was not for reasons violative of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

[9] Clendenin testified that after the meeting in late August or early September he told Willingham that something ought to be done about the overtime situation.

[10] The General Counsel also argues other facts testified to by Clendenin made his termination suspect—that Willingham, when he stated that he was going to terminate Clendenin, looked to Union Steward Walt Hamm, Jr., who nodded his approval; that Willingham filled in on the termination slip that Clendenin was discharged only for being out of his work area, and not for nonproductivity; and that there was no discussion by Watson of the reasons for the recommended discharge, other than his statement to Willingham that Clendenin was out of his work area. I credit none of Clendenin's testimony in these respects, noting that Clendenin's recollection was at this time imprecise, and that Clendenin admitted that events were moving too fast for him to recall.

[11] Clendenin earlier attempted to file a grievance with the union steward about his failure to receive equal overtime opportunities on the flush crew. The steward told him that if he did not like it he should "hit the road."

D. The Union's Failure To Process the Grievance

When Clendenin had been told that his employment was terminated, Clendenin went to Union Steward Hamm for a grievance form because he wanted to file a grievance. Hamm asked Clendenin why he needed a grievance form, stating, "if you don't like it, hit the road."[12] Clendenin filed the unfair labor practice charge within a few hours of his conversation with Hamm. The General Counsel claims that Hamm's statement constituted a refusal to process a grievance, in violation of Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act. I agree. Clearly, Hamm, as the union steward and admittedly a representative of the Union, summarily rejected a request for representation, without investigation, peremptorily and perfunctorily. That Clendenin asked for a grievance form, rather than stated that he desired to file a grievance, if of no moment; Hamm, as hereinafter shown, knew exactly what Clendenin was asking of him.

The Union contends, however, that when its business manager, Robert Sullivan, was advised of Clendenin's discharge, he immediately investigated the discharge and, only after such investigation, determined that Clendenin's discharge was proper and that no further grievance procedures were warranted.[13] The proof demonstrates, however, that Sullivan was much more concerned with the unfair labor practice charge that Clendenin had filed than with the substance of Clendenin's grievance.

Sullivan was offended that any employee should immediately file an unfair labor practice charge against the Union rather than take up the matter with Sullivan personally. Indeed, the Union's brief takes the position that it was required for Clendenin to consult with Sullivan before filing the charge and that the charge is defective in that no refusal to process Clendenin's grievance was even ripe at the time of its filing. I find no factual or legal support for its position. The latter contention, in particular, is belied by Sullivan's testimony that Hamm immediately advised him on January 28 that Clendenin wanted to file a grievance.

As a result of his receipt of Clendenin's unfair labor practice charge, Sullivan went to the Company's jobsite on Friday, February 1, and spoke with Watson and Willingham about Clendenin's discharge. Seemingly convinced by their representations,[14] Sullivan wrote to Clendenin on February 4, 1980, requesting his position before coming to a final conclusion on the validity of his grievance. Clendenin then conferred with the Union's attorney, Harold G. Korbee, who agreed with Clendenin that he would not personally meet with Sullivan but would submit his position in writing. As a result, Clendenin forwarded a full statement of the facts by letter dated February 7, 1980. By letter dated February 13, 1980, David Jeffers, a union business agent, acknowledged receipt of Clendenin's letter and notified him that Sullivan was then out of town and would not be expected back until February 18, 1980, at which time he would have an opportunity to review Clendenin's letter. On February 27, 1980, Clendenin, not having heard from Sullivan and noting that in Sullivan's February 4 letter directed to the Company the Union had requested that the Company waive any timetable requirements imposed by the agreement's grievance procedure until February 25, 1980, asked Sullivan what had happened to his grievance. Clendenin also stated, as he had previously indicated to Korbee on February 6, 1980, that if there were any further inquiries regarding his discharge, someone should call him so that his grievance could be fairly presented.

On February 29, 1980, Sullivan at last replied, stating, in part, as follows:

> In connection with the investigation of your grievance, and our response to the charges you have filed with the Labor Board, we would appreciate receiving from you as soon as possible a statement of any facts upon which you base your claim that the Union has refused to "process a grievance filed by Charles Clendenin because he had made complaints concerning mistreatment of Union members on traveler's status and/or because he is a member on traveler's status."
> None of the officers of the Local Union have any knowledge or record of any such "complaints" that you have filed with the Union.
> As you must know, the Union is most interested in effectively representing employees who work under its bargaining agreement. However, the Union feels somewhat handicapped in this matter, since you appear to allege facts about which I have had no notice, record or information upon which to make any judgment.

On March 6, 1980, Clendenin acknowledged receipt of the above-quoted letter and again asked Sullivan whether a grievance had been filed on his behalf. He ended his letter with the following:

> Please tell me what the union steward and yourself decided to do regarding my grievance so I will know when I will be getting back to work at Kaiser, because there is no way a man could be discharged for going to the restroom and have it stick even if he is a Traveler. Please call me and we can set a time to prepare my case for the grievance hearing against Kaiser.

[13] The Union, in its brief, contends for the very first time that this allegation should be dismissed because the collective-bargaining agreement provides as follows: "Layoffs and terminations shall be at the sole discretion of the Employer." Had this provision been relied upon by Hamm or Sullivan, the Union's argument might have been difficult to overcome. Since the Union did not rely on it, but was motivated by invidious reasons, I find a violation of the Act.

[14] Sullivan's letter to Clendenin, dated February 4, 1980, stated: "The information that they gave me seems to justify your discharge."

Sullivan's final letter to Clendenin was dated March 28, 1980, after the unfair labor practice complaint had been issued against the Union. Sullivan stated that it had been his experience as a business manager that employees who require or request the assistance of the Union in implementing the grievance procedure provided for in the applicable bargaining agreement generally come to the union hall and inform him or one of the business agents of their problem. Only then does the Union begin its investigation of the dispute and implement the applicable grievance procedure. Sullivan thought that Clendenin's situation was "probably the first one that I ever recall in which an employee filed charges with the NLRB before even coming to the Hall to request our assistance." Sullivan stated that on February 29 he wrote to Clendenin asking him for additional information which Clendenin did not supply. Based upon the investigation and information that the Union had, it was the Union's "opinion that [Clendenin's] discharge was justified and that there is insufficient evidence to warrant carrying the grievance to the second step which would involve bringing in the United Association International Representative."

The foregoing reveals that the Union had little interest in fairly representating Clendenin. Sullivan was upset at Clendenin's having filed an unfair labor practice charge against the Union and his attitude was thereafter tempered by the fact that such a charge had been filed. This is demonstrated by two facts: First, while Clendenin and Korbee had agreed that Clendenin would explain his position solely in writing, Sullivan ultimately held it against Clendenin for refusing to see him personally; second, instead of seeking additional information which may have been relevant to Clendenin's grievance, Sullivan tried to obtain Clendenin's position on his unfair labor practice charge before processing the grievance, and Sullivan's letter of March 28, 1980, demonstrated that he deemed the failure of Clendenin to supply the irrelevant information was determinative.

The result is that the Union gave Clendenin's case merely a minimal effort, perfunctory at best even if Sullivan is to be believed, and no effort at all if Sullivan is not to be credited. Although I have found that the Company did not violate Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act by discharging Clendenin, I do not make that finding for the purpose of my discussion of the Union's liability herein. Rather, merely because the Company took disciplinary action which does not violate the Act does not mean that an arbitrator might not have deemed the discipline unwarranted or too severe. An arbitrator is not bound by the same factual findings that I have made; he may do industrial justice and may effectuate a compromise of a grievance, whereas the Board may not. In this case, the Union did little to help its unit's employee, solely because Clendenin filed an unfair labor practice charge against the Union. I find that the Union violated Section 8(a)(1) and (b)(1)(A) of the Act. Penn Industries, Inc., 233 NLRB 928, 941-942 (1977).

E. The Assignment of Overtime

One of the General Counsel's complaints was the systematic denial of overtime assignments to Clendenin, whereas assignments were routinely given to members of the Union. I again note that Kleinholz did not testify. Because Clendenin's testimony in this respect is probable and not inherently inconceivable, I credit his testimony relating to Kleinholz' maintenance of an overtime list containing only the names of Local 392 members. From that fact, Clendenin's testimony about various individual union members asking for overtime work, and a document which shows that those individuals were given overtime work, I conclude that Clendenin was discriminated against during the course of his working on the flush crew in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

When Clendenin was transferred to the hanger crew, the General Counsel admits that distribution of overtime to union members "was less significant." However, the General Counsel contends that Watson, on the Saturday before Clendenin was discharged, bumped into a journeyman's position, with another union member (a foreman of another hanger crew) being appointed as foreman, all to the detriment of Clendenin. On the other hand, it must be noted that overtime on the hanger crew was worked primarily by travelers. Indeed, Clendenin's name appears on the overtime list nine times,[15] and the General Counsel has failed to point out how Clendenin, after August 21, 1979, was treated any differently from other individuals who were members of the Union or were travelers employed on the hanger crew.

I am satisfied with the Company's explanation that denial of overtime to Clendenin and other travelers was not due to their lack of membership in the Union. C G & E assigned overtime. That it did so late in the day was not the fault of the Company, which made assignments only when C G & E authorized it to do so. There is no credible proof in this record to demonstrate that travelers were requested later in the day to work overtime in order to discriminate against them because they were not members of the Union. Nor do I find that the method of distributing overtime to employees was inherently destructive of employees' Section 7 rights. The method, instead, sought to protect the principle of equitable distribution of overtime within the crews and sought to give overtime to members of the crews who were working during regular hours on the projects which required overtime. That was not violative of the Act.

Finally, implicit in the complaints of the emoloyees, if not in the consolidated complaint herein and supporting brief, was that by the nature of the work being done other crews (populated by union members) were receiving overtime and the hanger crew was not. The record lacks any documentary proof of that fact. Although the travelers may have been correct, even to the extent that they were assigned to the hanger crew solely to deprive them of beneficial overtime, the proof is lacking. I dismiss this allegation of the complaint pertaining to the hanger crew.

[15] In addition, Clendenin refused offers of overtime on several occasions and was absent on days that overtime was worked.

F. The Interview of Prospective Employee Witnesses

On Friday, September 5, 1980, employees Earl Crawford and Charles Sears were summoned to the personnel office of the Company where they were interviewed by both Korbee and Bruce E. Allen, counsel of record for the Union and Company, respectively, in the presence of company and union officials. Both employees testified that they were not told that their attendance was voluntary nor that there would be no reprisals taken against them if they declined to participate or cooperate with the interviewers. Both testified that whatever assurances which were given to them were stated only after they both had declined to comply with Korbee's request for their versions of the facts concerning this proceeding and the testimony they were to give at the instant hearing. It was then that Allen stated to them that it was their prerogative not to answer and nothing would happen to them.

I credit the testimony of the two employees, noting that Billy Joe McGuffy, the Company's senior accountant, basically corroborated the employees' testimony, changing his recitation only after being led by the Company's counsel. In any event, Korbee conceded that at no time did he tell the employees prior to the interrogation that their participation in the interview was voluntary and that they did not have to be present before the interrogation began.[16] I, therefore, find a violation by the Company of Section 8(a)(1) and by the Union of Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act. In doing so, I reject the Union's claim that a violation of Johnnie's Poultry Co., supra, may be found only against an employer. St. Louis Harbor Service Company, 150 NLRB 636 (1964). This conclusion is not to be deemed merely a formalistic application of the Johnnie's Poultry rule. The coercive effect of the interrogation, without the necessary precautions required by law, was perfectly evident from the record. Even Respondents admit that the employees were scared. That they were later advised that their silence would not be held against them did not relieve the coerciveness of the initial part of the interview. A violation must be found and all of the Company's employees must be so advised by an appropriate notice.

III. THE EFFECTS OF THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES UPON COMMERCE

The activities of the Company set forth in section II, above, occuring in connection with the operations of the Company herein, described in section I, above, have a close, intimate, and substantial relationship to trade, traffic, and commerce among the several States and tend to lead to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow thereof.

THE REMEDY

Having found that the Company and the Union have violated the Act, I will recommend that they cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

Because I have found that the Company has discriminated against Clendenin in the assignment of overtime because he was a traveler, I shall recommend that the Company be required to make him whole for any financial loss he may have sustained during the period from July 28, 1979, to August 19, 1979, that being the only period for which discrimination has been found within the applicable 10(b) period. Any backpay due hereunder shall be computed on the basis of the number of overtime opportunities lost during the above period, Newport News Printing Pressmen's and Assistants' Union, Local No. 288, International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union of North America, AFL-CIO (The Daily Press, Inc.), 188 NLRB 475 (1971), with interest thereon to be computed in the manner prescribed in Florida Steel Corporation, 231 NLRB 651 (1977).[17]

The finding that the Union violated its duty of fair representation would normally require that the Union proceed to arbitrate Clendenin's discharge or, if the Company refused to arbitrate, to make Clendenin whole for his loss of earnings. It is clear, however, that the time limits provided by the collective-bargining agreement's grievance machinery have long since expired. If the Union were ordered to proceed to arbitrate the dispute, the Company would most likely invoke the time limits and the provision which gives it the right to terminate employees for any reason. In these circumstances, because the agreement is clear, it would be inappropriate to grant the usual remedy of a make-whole order. That remedy would grant to Clendenin backpay which he had no right to receive, for he cannot demonstrate in any event that his discharge was contrary to the agreement. Hines v. Anchor Motor Freight, Inc., 424 U.S. 554, 570-571 (1976).

On the basis of the foregoing findings of fact, conclusions of law, and upon the entire record, and pursuant to Section 10(c) of the Act, I hereby issue the following:

ORDER[18]

A. Respondent Henry J. Kaiser Company, Moscow, Ohio, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Discriminating against employees in overtime assignments because they are travelers or are not members of the Union.

[16] Crawford and Sears were brought to the interview by Union Steward Walter Hurd, who related to them en route words to the effect that as long as they told the truth, their jobs would not be affected. This did not constitute adequate warning that the employees' jobs were secure, because the assurance was linked to the employees' telling the truth. This is not to say that an employer must condone the telling of falsehoods; rather, the statement leaves the judgment to the Company or the Union, or both, of whether the employee is telling the truth, with unspecified discipline a distinct possibility. Further, there is inherent in Hurd's statement the possibility that employees may be coerced into giving misstatements in order to ensure the continuation of their employment—i.e., to tell their employer not what happened, but what the employer desires to hear.

[18] In the event no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Rules and Regulations of the National Labor Relations Board, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order herein shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules and Regulations, be adopted by the Board and become its findings, conclusions, and Order, and all objections thereto shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

(b) Coercively interrogating employees in preparation for defense of unfair labor practice proceedings without first obtaining voluntary participation by said employees and without first giving said employees assurances against reprisals if they choose not to participate in said interviews.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights which are guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action which is designed to effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Make Charles E. Clendenin whole for any loss of earnings or benefits suffered because of the unlawful denial of overtime work to him, to be computed as set forth in the section of this Decision entitled "The Remedy."

(b) Preserve and, upon request, make available to the Board or its agents, for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records (including records of overtime worked) required to determine the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(c) Post at its premises in Moscow, Ohio, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix A."[19] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 9, after being duly signed by the Company's representative, shall be posted by the Company immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Company to ensure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(d) Notify the Regional Director for Region 9, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps the Respondent Company has taken to comply herewith.

B. Respondent Journeymen Pipe Fitters Local No. 392, affiliated with the United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipe Fitting Industry of the United States and Canada, AFL-CIO, its officers, agents, and representatives, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Failing or refusing to fairly represent any employees represented by the Union in the processing and filing of grievances.

(b) Coercively interrogating employees in preparation for defense of unfair labor practice proceedings without first obtaining the voluntary participation by said employees and without first giving said employees assurances against reprisals if they choose not to participate in said interviews.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights which are guaranteed to them in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action which is necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Post at its offices and meeting halls, including the Company's trailer-office where the union steward has a desk, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix B."[20] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 9, after being duly signed by the Union's representative, shall be posted by the Union immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees of the Company and members are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Union to ensure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(b) Notify the Regional Director for Region 9, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps the Respondent Union has taken to comply herewith.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the complaints be dismissed insofar as they allege violations of the Act other than those found herein.

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On March 31, 1981, Administrative Law Judge Hubert E. Lott issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, the Charging Party filed exceptions.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings, and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order.[1]

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge and hereby orders that the complaint be, and it hereby is, dismissed in its entirety.

---

[1] In the absence of exceptions to the Administrative Law Judge's of finding that Toombs' interrogation of Nowak, concerning the latter's contact with the Union regarding supervisors performing unit work, was de minimis and thus did not warrant issuance of a remedial order, we adopt, pro forma his dismissal of the allegation that such conduct violated Sec. 8(a)(1) of the Act.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

HUBERT E. LOTT, Administrative Law Judge: This case came to hearing before me in St. Louis, Missouri, on December 9, 1980,[1] upon an unfair labor practice charge filed on October 8, by Bernard B. Nowak, an individual, against Clarklift of St. Louis, Inc., herein called Respondent, and on a complaint issued by the General Counsel on October 29. The issues in the case are whether Respondent, on or about August 15, interrogated the Charging Party concerning his union or concerted activities, and whether Respondent discharged Charging Party Bernard B. Nowak because of his union activities in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended.

Upon the entire record,[2] including my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and after due consideration of the briefs filed by the General Counsel and Respondent, I make the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent, a Missouri corporation, is engaged in the sale, distribution, and repair of material handling equipment at its St. Louis County, Missouri, facility. In the course and conduct of its business operations, Respondent derived gross revenues in excess of $500,000 and purchased and received goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000 which were delivered to its place of business in Missouri directly from points located outside of the State of Missouri. Respondent admits, and I find, that it is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

Respondent admits, and I find, that International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, District No. 9 and its Local No. 777, herein called IAM and Local 777, respectively, are and have been at all times material herein labor organizations within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Background

Respondent is engaged in the sale and servicing of forklift vehicles as a franchise distributor for Clark Equipment Company. Respondent's present owners purchased the Company in April 1979, renaming the Company Clarklift of St. Louis Inc., from AAA Equipment. Those employees of Respondent who perform service and repair work on vehicles are represented by Lodge 777, IAM. At the time of the purchase of the Company by its present owners Respondent assumed collective-bargaining agreements for its mechanics with the IAM and for its parts department employees with Teamsters Local No. 618. During the negotiation of the Company's acquisition, Teamsters Local No. 618 gained the right to represent the office workers. In October 1979, Respondent executed a collective-bargaining agreement with Teamsters Local No. 618 covering the office employees. Currently both of the Teamsters bargaining units have shop stewards employed by Respondent.

B. The Interrogation and Discharge of Bernard Nowak

The General Counsel contends that Bernard Nowak was interrogated and subsequently discharged on August 15, because he vigorously pursued his duties as shop steward for the IAM, who represented the mechanics unit. Respondent corrected or amended its answer to the complaint to reflect that it suspended Nowak on August 15 and discharged him on August 18 because he instructed employees to misrepresent their time on customer work orders, threatened a supervisor with union trouble or problems if he did not receive foremen's wages, and lied to Respondent's vice president and general manager when questioned about these incidents.

Bernard Nowak was at the time of his discharge an 8-year employee, and since January 1979 had been the IAM shop steward for the mechanics. Nowak returned to work from sick leave on June 23. On June 26, Samuel Modica, Respondent's service manager since April, assigned Nowak and another employee the task of installing an upright on a forklift. Nowak became upset and refused to perform the work claiming that the Company's 2-ton overhead chain hoist was not strong enough to lift the 5-ton upright and side shifter. Nowak threatened to call OSHA if the Company persisted in its attempt to use the overhead chain hoist. After consulting with John Browning, Respondent's service supervisor over mechanics, Modica abandoned this effort in favor of calling in a wrecker which did the job. No grievance was filed over this incident.

Sometime in late June or July[3] Nowak made an inquiry to Modica concerning the restoration of employee Leonard Richmond to journeymen rate. About a year earlier Richmond had experienced knee problems. The condition of Richmond's bad knee had left him unable to use a ladder to paint forklifts. Officials of the Company and the Union had then met and determined to freeze his pay rate for 1 year (at mechanic trainee 3-year level) to give Richmond time to rehabilitate his knee. A letter of agreement to this effect was signed by the Company and the Union on May 16, 1979. Sometime after the 1-year period had expired, Leonard Richmond reminded Modica that the agreement period was up and that he should be returned or restored to journeymen's wages. Modica said he would check into it. Modica then called Roger Poole the Union's business agent, however, in the meantime Nowak came to Modica and inquired about what the Company was doing about Richmond. Modica told Nowak that he had a call in for Roger Poole and that when Poole returned Modica's call, they would work out some kind of arrangement and let Nowak know about it. Shortly thereafter Poole and Modica discussed the situation and the Company paid Richmond retroactive wages and restored him to the journeymen rate. No grievance was filed over this matter.

On August 13, Nowak, who was not at work due to an injury, received a telephone call from employee Darron Forrest, who said that he had been fired. Nowak went to Respondent's facility and spoke with Modica and Vice President and General Manager Larry Toombs. Nowak had previously spoken with Modica about this and asked him not to do anything until the regular business agent returned from vacation. But, Respondent was adamant that Forrest leave the premises and take his tools with him. Nowak told Forrest not to remove his tools until the matter was straightened out with Respondent. Nowak then assisted Forrest in preparing a grievance and submitted it to Respondent. On Friday, August 15, Nowak reported to work from sick leave. He worked for approximately 10 minutes when Sam Modica asked him to come to his office. John Browning, Sam Modica, and Larry Toombs were present, however, Larry Toombs did all of the talking. According to Nowak, Toombs asked him a series of questions: Had he ever called OSHA? Did he ever tell any employee to hold back time? Did he ever call the hall on any of the Company's salaried men and tell them not to move any equipment or drive forklifts around? Had he ever telephoned one of the supervisors and threatened that if he did not get a raise, he would cause trouble in the shop? Had he ever asked another mechanic to misrepresent hours? To all of these questions, Nowak answered no. After the questioning, Nowak was suspended and received a mailgram on August 19 which stated that he had been discharged as of August 18.

Bernard Nowak testified that after his discharge he filed a grievance. He further testified that he had never been warned or reprimanded before by Respondent and that under the contract the first offense called for a warning letter, second offense a suspension, and the third offense within a year, automatic discharge.[4] Rufus Haney and Darron Forrest, mechanics, testified that they were familiar with the terms "holding back time" or "transferring time." Thus, when a work order comes to the shop from the sales department, it has, under the "shop instructions section," the estimated time that it should take to complete the job. If the job requires more actual worktime than is estimated by the sales department, then, on some occasions, the shop foreman will instruct the mechanic to transfer the excess time to another work order where the job was performed in less time than was estimated by the sales department which would even-out productive time. Haney and Forrest testified that on occasion Shop Foreman John Browning has instructed them to transfer time to other work orders.

C. Respondent's Defense

Larry Toombs, Respondent's vice president and general manager, testified that on August 11 he was called into Robert Whittingham's office. President Whittingham had three work orders on his desk, 35831, 35833, and 35835 (Resp. Exhs. 1, 2, and 3). Whittingham told Toombs that there was something wrong because he remembered asking mechanic Michael Troutman to perform work (cut down load back rests) on three forklift trucks and asked him if he could complete the work in 1 day. After Troutman had completed the work in 1 day he remembered congratulating him for doing a good job in the required time. After reviewing the three work orders involved on Troutman's job, he discovered that the number of hours indicated on the work orders showed that Troutman did not complete the work in 1 day but rather in 3 days, taking a total of 20 hours instead of 8 hours. Whittingham asked Toombs to investigate this discrepancy. Toombs in turn asked Service Manager Samuel Modica to investigate the discrepancies on these three work orders. Modica in his investigation questioned Shop Forman John Browning and mechanic Michael Troutman. Troutman told Modica that he had been instructed to transfer hours from a customer work order by Nowak. Modica reported what he had discovered back to Toombs who decided to meet with Troutman on August 12 to get a more complete explanation of what actually happened. At the meeting on August 12 with Toombs, Troutman explained that Whittingham on July 30 or 31 asked him if he could modify three forklift trucks in 1 day because they were promised to a customer on a certain day. Troutman said that he thought he could do the job in 1 day. Thereafter, Troutman completed the work on the three work orders 35831, 35833, and 35835 in 1 day, using the total of 8 hours. After Troutman completed the work on the three work orders he turned them over to Nowak who told him that from now on they were going to use the full time on the tickets (i.e., not the actual time worked but the estimated time for the job, which in this case was 8 hours per work order or 24 hours estimated time). Troutman went on to explain to Toombs that he added 12 hours to the three internal work orders, taking the time from a customer work order, on Nowak's instructions because he did not want to have any trouble with the Union.[5] Troutman further told Toombs that after Respondent stopped inserting estimated time on the work orders which was somewhere around July 31, Nowak told Troutman that they should run the tickets over and see what the Company said about that. He also told Troutman that they should always use maximum time.[6] After hearing Troutman's story about what had transpired with the work orders, Larry Toombs decided to check further with his management to find out whether or not other situations existed that he was unaware of. He talked to Sam Modica who related to him that on or about July 9 Elmer Justus came to him and complained that Nowak had told him to use up the entire estimated time on the job. Modica told Justus to use only the time it took to do the job and that is what he did. Toombs asked Modica why he had not brought this situation to his attention sooner and Modica replied that Justus had told him that he would deny the conversation with Nowak if it ever came up again and that he would not put it in writing.[7] [3] The dates for this incident as well as the preceding incident were taken from Respondent's witnesses' testimony since Nowak was unsure of the dates involved and could only fix the time by responding to leading questions.

[4] Although the collective-bargaining agreement covering Nowak was not introduced into evidence, it should be noted that after Nowak's grievance was denied by Respondent, the union membership chose not to pursue it further.

During this same time period but prior to Nowak's discharge Toombs also learned from Modica that during July Nowak had threatened Modica with a picket line and a call to OSHA if he was not allowed to take his invalid wife to the hairdresser every Thursday on company time. At first Modica refused his request, but later on during that day he agreed to let Nowak take his wife to the hairdresser every Thursday in the morning.[8] Toombs also learned during the same period of time that Gary Hull, the used equipment manager, had received several telephone calls at home from Nowak. Hull testified that these telephone calls were received at night from Nowak and one particular call that he remembered occurred in January shortly after Dennis Metz was made working foreman. Nowak told Hull that he was entitled to leadman's pay in the equipment get ready department. Hull told Nowak that there was not enough volume to justify paying Nowak leadman's pay and that since Nowak was a shop steward there might be a conflict of interest. After Hull denied Nowak foreman's pay, Hull stated that Nowak became obnoxious and said that he had worked well with Hull in the past with the Union, but he would use the Union against him in the shop. Hull further stated that although he told John Browning about the phone call shortly after it occurred Browning told him to "sit on it" and he did not repeat the conversation to anyone else because he felt that Nowak was intoxicated at the time he made the call and he felt sorry for him. Hull stated that he related the conversation to Toombs sometime after Nowak was suspended but before he was discharged. Toombs testified that, after receiving all of this information concerning Nowak during the week of August 11, he decided to schedule a meeting with him at the earliest possible time. Nowak was absent from work on August 13 and 14 with an injured hand, however, he reported to work on Friday, August 15. Within 5 or 10 minutes after the shift began that morning, Toombs requested that Nowak report to Modica's office. In Modica's presence Toombs asked Nowak a series of questions: (1) He asked Nowak whether he had ever asked a mechanic at any time to report on a work order more hours than had actually been worked. Nowak denied that he had ever done that. (2) He asked him if he had ever asked any mechanic at any time, or if he had ever told any mechanic at any time that it took 8 hours to cut down a load back rest, when it actually could have taken less. Nowak said he had never done that. (3) He asked Nowak if he had ever told a mechanic at any time that it took 8 hours to cut down the drivers overhead guard, when it actually could have taken less. Nowak said he had never done that. (4) He asked

[5] Transferring hours from customer work orders to internal work orders does not affect an employee's wage. However, only customer service hours generate revenues. When an employee actually spends his time on customer service work but records his hours as internal time the Company loses customer service revenues. Hours allocated as internal time cost the Company money by increasing overhead expenses. During this period of time, internal work orders which were used to prepare new trucks for delivery were cost-priced at a rate of $19 an hour, while the rate charged on customer service orders was $32 an hour. The effect of transferring 12 hours on a customer service order to an internal make-ready order would be to reduce the charges to the customer by $612 while increasing the cost of preparing truck for delivery by $228.

[6] Nowak denied all of these conversations with Troutman having to do with transferring time and using maximum time. However, Troutman testified to these conversations and Toombs, Modica, and Browning testified that Troutman related these conversations to them.

[7] Elmer Justus testified that some time after the Company removed estimated times from the work orders, Nowak handed him a work order and said, "there were 8 hours to do the job." He further testified that during the same time period Nowak told him that if the Company thinks it took a lot of time to do the jobs now, just wait until later. Justus further testified that the only people who were authorized to distribute hours on work orders were John Browning and Sam Modica. Nowak, according to Justus, was upset and made these statements to him because the Company had removed the allotted times from the work orders. Nowak denies these conversations with Elmer Justus.

[8] Nowak agreed that a conversation between him and Modica took place sometime after Modica assumed the duties of service manager. He further agreed that the conversation dealt with taking his wife to the hairdresser and that although Modica at first refused to allow him to do it, he later agreed to let Nowak take off during the day to perform the service. However, Nowak denied ever threatening Modica with a picket line or a call to OSHA. Modica's testimony supports Toombs' version.

Nowak if he had ever told the mechanics to take home their impact wrenches. Nowak replied that it was the Company's responsibility to furnish the impact wrenches. (5) He asked Nowak if he had ever called a supervisor at his home and threatened that if he did not get leadman's pay he would cause trouble in the shop. Nowak denied ever doing this. (6) He asked Nowak if he had ever called the Union with regard to the salaried supervisors moving machines around in the shop. Nowak stated that he had done this. Finally, Toombs asked Nowak whether or not he had ever threatened the Company with calling OSHA. Nowak said that he had never done that. Nowak stated, however, that he had threatened to call OSHA because he was mad at Sam Modica because Modica would not allow him to take his wife to the hairdresser. After completing the interview with Nowak, Toombs made the decision to suspend him. Toombs further testified that after suspending Nowak he discussed the situation with the mechanics, management personnel, and Whittingham. He stated that some of the things that he heard such as the hairdresser incident were totally unbelievable to him and he questioned the rationality of Nowak. He stated that after learning the things that he had, he could not understand what Nowak was trying to do to Respondent. After another discussion with Whittingham on August 18, it was agreed between the two of them that they would discharge Nowak for directing mechanics to misrepresent hours, for calling the supervisor at home and threatening him, and for denying or being dishonest with him on these points. Toombs indicated that the other things raised in the interview did not enter into his decision to discharge Nowak; i.e., calling OSHA, the impact wrenches, or calling the union hall about supervisors doing unit work. Toombs categorically denied that Nowak's activities as a shop steward had anything to do with his discharge.

Toombs testified that since September 1979 Respondent had discharged four mechanics, one of whom was Harry Poole. Poole was discharged for misrepresenting time turned in for payment. He turned in hours for work that he claimed he did while on the road repairing customers equipment when, in fact, the work was never performed for a customer. Customers complained and their complaints were brought to the attention of Toombs who confronted Poole over the telephone and discharged him on the spot. According to Toombs, two grievances were filed by employees in the parts department unit since September 1979 with the assistance of the Teamsters shop steward. Toombs further stated that Michael Troutman was given a disciplinary letter (Resp. Exh. 6) dated August 14 for misrepresenting hours. The letter reads:

> This letter is to serve as a warning to Michael Troutman for misrepresenting hours on three work orders 35831, 35833, 35835 on 7/31/80. Mike followed the instructions of the shop steward, Bernard Nowak, who had no authority to delegate hours.

Shop Foreman John Browning testified that only he and Sam Modica have the authority to allocate hours. He testified that only about 10 percent of all jobs require the allocation of hours and that Nowak has no role in this procedure. He stated that the allocation of hours generally involves the transfer of cost overruns from the customers service labor ticket to an internal labor ticket. He stated that Respondent does not charge its customers for cost overruns. The customer only pays the price that the salesman has calculated by estimating the amount of time required for the new truck get ready department to prepare the vehicle for customers use.

D. Analysis and Conclusions

Where there is a conflict in testimony, between Nowak and Respondent's witnesses, I have credited Respondent's witnesses because for the most part their testimony was corroborated, less evasive, and more on point. Larry Toombs, who played a major role in the interrogation and discharge of Nowak, was a very credible witness. Therefore, I find that Bernard Nowak participated in the activities and made the statements attributed to him by Respondent's witnesses. Furthermore, I find that most, if not all, of Nowak's activities came to the attention of Toombs during the week of August 11. I also find that Toombs suspended and later discharged Nowak not because of his protected shop steward activities but because of his unprotected activities. International Wire Products Company, a Division of the Carlisle Corporation, 248 NLRB 1121, 1123 (1980).

The gravamen of this case is that Nowak in my opinion abused his position as union shop steward. He was, therefore, disciplined more harshly than Troutman because as a shop steward he is held to a higher standard of conduct than the average employee. Midwest Precision Castings Company, 244 NLRB 597 (1979). Therefore, the terms of the contract dealing with discipline do not necessarily apply in this case. The General Counsel offered, through Nowak's testimony, some evidence that the contract calls for progressive forms of discipline beginning with a written warning for a first offense and ending with discharge for a third offense in the same given year. However, since the contract was not offered into evidence I am not bound by Nowak's testimony and I reject it.

I find that one of the reasons for Nowak's discharge was his conduct which, in effect, can only be described as advocating a slow down among unit employees. This in my opinion was reason enough for Respondent to discharge Nowak notwithstanding his legitimate activities as a shop steward. In this regard, Respondent met its burden of proof in establishing that Nowak would have been discharged had he not engaged in any protected activities. Wright Line, a Division of Wright Line, Inc., 251 NLRB 1083 (1980).

An element also lacking in the General Counsel's case is union animus on the part of Respondent. The record indicates that Respondent has a good labor relations history with no record of unfair labor practices. It recognizes two unions and maintains three collective-bargaining agreements covering three separate units of employees. Moreover, many of the supervisors who testified had, themselves, been members of a union for many years prior to promotion into management. It is also noteworthy that the Union never presented any witnesses or participated in this hearing in an effort to demonstrate Respondent's antiunion stance. Coupled with these factors is Nowak's testimony. He concluded his rebuttal testimony by stating that everybody at the Company always treated him as a human being and that he never had any problems with the supervisors who always treated him fairly.[9] After this testimony, I became somewhat perplexed as to why we were holding this hearing. So I asked Nowak the following questions and he responded accordingly:

> JUDGE LOTT: Let me ask you a question. Why do you think the company fired you?
> THE WITNESS: Well, on the testimony—
> JUDGE LOTT (interrupting): No, no, just—
> THE WITNESS (interrupting): Well, I think that they claim that I told certain parties to hold back time.
> JUDGE LOTT: Is that why you think they fired you?
> THE WITNESS: That is the only reason that I think it was.
> JUDGE LOTT: Do you think it had anything to do with your being the shop steward?
> THE WITNESS: No, I don't believe they would hold that against me.

While, I did not accord Nowak's answers controlling weight in this decision, they at least helped put this case in its proper perspective with respect to motive. Accordingly, I find that the General Counsel has not established by preponderance of the credible evidence in this record that Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by discharging Bernard Nowak.

The two allegations of interrogation have to do with Toombs questioning Nowak about threatening to call OSHA and calling the Union with regard to salaried supervisors moving machines around in the shop. The first allegation has to do with an unprotected activity; namely, threatening to call OSHA when Modica would not allow Nowak to take his wife to the hairdresser. I therefore dismiss this allegation. The second allegation, which was admitted, is without doubt a violation of Section 8(a)(1). However, under the circumstances of this case, not the least of which is Respondent's labor relations history, I find the interrogation to be de minimus, and accordingly dismiss this allegation as well.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.
2. The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.
3. Respondent has not engaged in any violations of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact, conclusions of law, and the entire record in this case and pursuant to Section 10(c) of the Act, I hereby issue the following recommended:

ORDER

It is hereby ordered that the complaint be, and it hereby is, dismissed in its entirety.

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On June 15, 1981, Administrative Law Judge Claude R. Wolfe issued the attached Decision in this proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not violated the Act, and dismissing the complaint in its entirety. Thereafter, the General Counsel filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the Respondent filed limited cross-exceptions and a supporting brief, and a motion to correct certain clerical errors in its answering brief.[1]

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The National Labor Relations Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions, cross-exceptions, and briefs and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings, and conclusions[2] of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge and hereby orders that the complaint be, and it hereby is, dismissed in its entirety.

[1] In the absence of opposition to Respondent's motion, we hereby grant such motion and make the requested clerical corrections in all copies of its answering brief.

[2] Member Jenkins does not rely on Wright Line, a Division of Wright Line, Inc., 251 NLRB 1083 (1981), for the principle that the General Counsel has the burden of proving a prima facie case; that principle was established generations before Wright Line.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

CLAUDE R. WOLFE, Administrative Law Judge: This case was heard before me in Fort Wayne, Indiana, on January 12 and 13, 1981, pursuant to charges filed on July 24, 1979. A complaint issued August 22, 1979, and was subsequently amended on February 12 and 15, 1980. As amended the complaint alleges that 28 employees were refused recall from layoff status on or about May 7, 1979, because of their union activities, all in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act. There is no allegation or evidence of any other violations of the Act.

259 NLRB No. 3

Upon the entire record,[1] together with my careful observation of the demeanor of the witnesses as they testified, and after consideration of the post-hearing briefs submitted, I hereby make the following:

FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent, an Indiana corporation, has maintained its principal office and place of business at Fort Wayne, Indiana, and has been at all times material engaged at said location in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of toys and related products. During the 12 months preceding issuance of the complaint, a representative period, Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business operations, purchased, transferred, and delivered to its Fort Wayne facility, goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly from points located outside the State of Indiana. Respondent is now, and has been at all times material herein, an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION

The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. SUPERVISORY STRUCTURE

At all times material herein, the following-named persons occupied positions set opposite their respective names and have been, and are now, agents of Respondent, acting on its behalf, and are supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(11) of the Act:

Norman Meyers	Executive Vice President
Cornell Etoll	Shop Superintendent
Robert Neff II	Foreman
Fred Robinson	Shop Superintendent from on or about January 2, 1979, to the present

IV. ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

The complaint alleges the following as unlawfully refused recall:

Selena Arrington
Linda Cartwright
Pam Falls
Rose Gase
Kristin Gennari
Diane Hall
Anne Headen
Mildred Jackson
Darlene Jaggers
Maxine Johnson
Olgia Johnson
Karen Keesler
Karen Kieper
Leona Laird
Willie Larry
Debra Lewis
Karen Lunde
Maria Mauricio
Rita Mercer
Karen Miller
Janice Minick
Cynthia Murphy
Joette Nicole
Brenda Parnin
Benita Perez
Olivia Perez
Sheri Robbins
Tina Underwood

By mailgram of November 17, 1978, the Union advised Respondent the following were members of its organizing committee:

Selena Arrington
Pamela Falls
Maxine Johnson
Rose Gase
Kristin Gennari
Diane Hall
Ann Headen
Mildred Jackson
Darlene Jaggers
Olgia Johnson
Karen Kieper
Leona Laird
Willie Larry
Debra Lewis
Karen Lunde
Rita Mercer
Karen Miller
Cynthia Murphy
Brenda Parnin
Olivia Perez
Janet Ramos
Sheri Robbins
Tina Underwood

About 2 weeks before the December 8, 1978, election in Case 25-RC-7033, the Union issued a pamphlet containing all the above names as members of its organizing committee plus Linda Cartwright, Karen Keesler, Maria Mauricio, Janice Minick, Joette Nicole, Michael Payton, and Berita (Benita) Perez.

At the hearing, the General Counsel withdrew the allegation with respect to Diane Hall, and the General Counsel and Respondent stipulated that the following employees were discharged on or about November 27, 1978:

Shelly Johnson
Sheri Gaff
Linda Cartwright
Tina Blair
Jeanette Nicola[2]
Martin Klug
Maria Mauricio
Marjorie Bellinger
Benita Perez
Maxine Johnson
Cynthia Murphy
Connie Gibson
Rose Gase

Of the 30 person organizing committee listed by the Union in its mailgram and pamphlet, only Michael Payton and Janet Ramos were not alleged as discriminatees. The record is silent as to what happened to Payton but his name does not appear on the various lists in evidence, and I conclude he did not work in January 1979 or later. The General Counsel attempted to adduce, but failed to do so, that Ramos had defected from the Union. Of the remaining 28 committeemen, the allegation as to Diane Hall was withdrawn, and 7[3] were terminated in November 1978, more than 6 months prior to the filing of the charge,[4] which leaves 20 committee members as alleged discriminatees:

Selena Arrington
Pamela Falls
Kristin Gennari
Ann Headen
Mildred Jackson
Darlene Jaggers
Willie Larry
Debra Lewis
Karen Lunde
Rita Mercer
Karen Miller
Janice Minick
Olgia Johnson
Karen Keesler
Karen Kieper
Leona Laird
Brenda Parnin
Olivia Perez
Sheri Robbins
Tina Underwood

Of these 20, the General Counsel seeks backpay, and presumably reinstatement, for 18 of them, leaving out Darlene Jaggers and Karen Kieper.

The parties stipulated that 23 employees were laid off on November 27, 1978, of whom 8 were organizing committee members.[5]

After the November layoffs and discharges, a Board election was conducted on December 8, 1978, among Respondent's employees, pursuant to an October 31, 1978, election petition filed by the Union in Case 25-RC-7033. The Union lost 62 to 28, with 3 challenged ballots. Thereafter, on December 15, 1978, Respondent laid off all of its remaining employees.

On or about January 2, 1979, Respondent recalled three of the employees laid off the previous November. They were Committee Members Karen Miller and Kristin Gennari, together with Ann Wormbly who was not on the committee. By January 4, 1979, Respondent had recalled 53 rank-and-file employees, of whom 9[6] were committee members. The plant again shut down on January 10, 1979.

In April 1979, Respondent again commenced operations. By May 5 it had a total of 20 employees. This rose to 45 employees on May 7, and 77 employees on June 26. During this period only 4 of the 23 employees laid off the previous November reappear on the payroll.[7] Moreover, of the 77 employees on June 26, 1979, only 34 were employed by Respondent at the time of the December and January shutdowns. The plant again shut down on or about July 1, 1980, and was not in operation at the time of the hearing.

Of the 20 alleged discriminatees remaining, Respondent presented uncontroverted testimony from Vice President Norman Meyers that Selena Arrington, Karen Kieper, Debra Lewis,[8] and Karen Lunde quit their employment with Respondent and Sheri Robbins either quit or was terminated.[9] The list of possible discriminatees thus diminishes to 15. It shrinks to 14 by virtue of Meyers' credible uncontroverted testimony that Darlene Jaggers was not recalled in May 1979 because of her attitude, attendance, workmanship, and a refusal to sign a 3-day suspension notice given her by Respondent. Karen Miller went in to work on the second shift January 2, 1979, but was sent home along with others after 4 hours because there was a problem with the heating system.

[2] I conclude that Joetta Nicol and Jeanette Nicola are the same person.

[9] I credit Meyers, noting that no adverse inference may be properly drawn from his failure to proffer supporting documentation into evidence because Respondent's personnel files relating to the discriminatees were present at the hearing, made available to the General Counsel, and some were utilized by the General Counsel in his examination of witnesses as the record clearly shows. I must conclude the General Counsel found nothing in the records to contradict Meyers.

She was told to listen to the radio to find out if the heat problem was solved. Her supervisor, Bob Neff, called her on January 4 and asked her if she was returning to work or preferred staying on layoff. She told Neff she would stay on layoff. At the hearing, she asserted her reason for not returning was an inability to work the second shift because she had two children at home. There is no showing she communicated this to Neff or ever again contacted Respondent to advise it that she was available for work until she was recalled in August 1979 pursuant to the commencement of the action before me. In the circumstances I am persuaded that Respondent had no obligation to try to recall her in May 1979, before any charge was filed, or to even believe she was again available for employment.

There is no evidence on the reasons for not recalling Mildred Jackson, Rita Mercer, or Brenda Parnin in May 1979.

With respect to Janice Minick, Meyers credibly testified that she did mediocre work, which gains some support from a timestudy of October 20, 1978, which notes she was too slow for the work she was performing and looked around too much.

According to Meyers, he instructed someone to recall Leona Laird in May 1979, and he believes efforts were made to contact her by phone. This is not overly strong evidence, but it is all the evidence presented on the matter. Meyers did not appear to be dissembling and I am persuaded some effort was made to recall Laird.

Meyers testified that Karen Keesler was not recalled in May because she was not one of the best employees Respondent had. This opinion was neither proved nor disproved by the evidence.

Meyers testified Pamela Falls was not recalled in May because her work performance was inadequate. An October 1978 timestudy shows her work was slow. Falls' recollections were vague and unreliable. She did not impress me as a witness whose memories should be credited in view of their fragmentary, inconsistent, and selective nature.

Meyer asserts Olgia Johnson was not recalled in May because she gave false information to Respondent with regard to the events leading to Cynthia Murphy's termination in November 1978. Johnson was recalled in January 1979. Johnson does not deny giving the false information in regard to Murphy.

Willie Larry conceded her absence record was poor and she had been twice warned about it. She also asserts she was told in February 1979 she would not be called back because her wages had been garnisheed. Meyers testified she was not called back because of her attendance and inability to perform the work.

Ann Headen had never worked on the Etch-A-Sketch line and Meyers testified that experience on that line was a prerequisite for recall in May.

Kristen Gennari was offered second-shift employment, which she declined, when she was laid off in November 1978. Kenneth Folk testified that she told him in January 1979 that she would not be available for recall because she was returning to the east coast. Gennari is a native of Massachusetts and states she returned to Massachusetts over the 1978 Christmas holiday but then returned to Fort Wayne, Indiana, and worked for Respondent the following January. She denies any conversation with Folk about her return to the east or her availability for employment. I credit Gennari that she went to Massachusetts over the Christmas holiday, but I do not credit her assertion that she never talked to Folk about returning east or her availability for employment. Folk impressed me as a certain witness on this point and his testimony on his January conversation with Gennari is believable and credited. That Gennari may not have followed through on her intention to return to Massachusetts permanently does not mean she did not have that intention in January when she talked to Folk.

Tina Underwood credibly testified she was not recalled in May 1979. Meyers states Underwood was a good employee and he was told that someone at Respondent's facility had tried to recall her. Meyers thus has only hearsay information as to whether or not an effort was made to recall her.

Meyers testified Olivia Perez was not recalled because of her attendance and inability to get along with other employees. Perez agrees her attendance was poor. Folk credibly named four employees who had complained about Perez and avers Perez had trouble getting along with other employees.

The reasons given by Respondent for not recalling some few of the alleged discriminatees are not entirely free from question, but this provides no support for the General Counsel's case.

This case is singularly free from any evidence of unlawful motivation. All that Respondent did, to express its attitude on the Union so far as the record shows, was to issue a letter from Meyers to all employees on November 28, 1978,[10] which contains nothing of an interfering, restraining, or coercive nature, and certainly no threat of reprisal or force or promise of benefit. The letter clearly falls within the ambit of Section 8(c) of the Act and is not probative evidence supporting the General Counsel's case.

In addition to the total absence of any direct evidence of unlawful motivation, the timing of Respondent's failure to recall some 5 months after the Union had lost the election by a more than two-to-one margin, and 4 months after Respondent had indeed called back known union adherents, suggests no plot to retaliate against those employees for past union activities. Moreover, there is no showing of any continuing union activity after the December 1978 election.

Contrary to the General Counsel, Great Dane Trailers[11] is not applicable to the facts before me. The 28 possible discriminatees whom the General Counsel alleged in the complaint and in his opening statement dwindled, by way of stipulations and credible uncontroverted testimony, to a very charitable 14. Of the remaining 14, Respondent had reason to believe Miller and Gennari were not interested in recall, made an effort to recall Laird, and may have tried to recall Underwood. The 28 has now shrunk to 11 at most, and perhaps to 10. Why the General Counsel yet persists in a Great Dane theory I do not know, but I find that the General Counsel has not shown any employer conduct "so inherently destructive of employee interests" that proof of motivation is unnecessary. There is no showing that Respondent distinguished between employees to be recalled on the basis of their union activities,[12] and there is no reason in law or logic on the evidence before me to conclude that Respondent's conduct on its face is prima facie unlawful, or that employee rights have been adversely affected.

Leaving Great Dane and turning to Wright Line,[13] I find and conclude the General Counsel has not made a prima facie showing sufficient even to support an inference that protected conduct was a motivating factor in selection for recall. Consequently, Respondent has no burden of justifying those selections. That it has chosen to do so, and in most cases clearly has, serves only to emphasize the weakness of the General Counsel's case. What the General Counsel appears to be urging is that unless Respondent comes forth with totally unassailable reasons for failing to recall each laid- off committee member, voila! unlawful motivation is clear. Not so at all. Respondent is under no obligation to justify its conduct unless and until the General Counsel shows by direct or circumstantial evidence that Respondent's failure to recall sprang from a motive to discourage union activity. The General Counsel has not so shown, and nothing brought forth at the hearing can be maneuvered into the vaguest semblance of a prima facie case requiring rebuttal by Respondent.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of the Act.
2. The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of the Act.
3. The General Counsel has not established by a preponderance of the evidence that Respondent has violated the Act as alleged in the complaint or in any other manner.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact and conclusions of law, and pursuant to Section 10(c) of the Act, I make the following recommended:

ORDER[14]

The complaint is dismissed in its entirety.

---

[12] There was no reason in May 1979 for Respondent to do so. The Union was gone and no longer a matter of concern.

DECISION, ORDER, AND DIRECTION

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On April 28, 1981, Administrative Law Judge Raymond P. Green issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, the General Counsel filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order.[2]

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge and hereby orders that the Respondent, American Display Manufacturing Co., Inc., Queens, New York, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the said recommended Order, except that the attached notice is substituted for that of the Administrative Law Judge.

DIRECTION

It is hereby directed that Case 29-RC-4578 be remanded to the Regional Director for Region 29, who shall open and count the ballots of Thomas Pinto and Francine Davis and thereupon issue a revised tally of ballots. If the Union obtains a majority of the valid votes counted, a certification of representative shall issue. In the event, however, that a majority of valid votes are not cast for the Union, the election is set aside, the bargaining order heretofore granted shall be in effect, and the petition in Case 29-RC-4578 shall be dimissed.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES POSTED BY ORDER OF THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

An Agency of the United States Government

WE WILL NOT interrogate our employees concerning their union sympathies.

WE WILL NOT threaten to close our factory if our employees select Amalgamated Service and Allied Industries Joint Board, Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union, AFL-CIO, as their collective-bargaining representative.

WE WILL NOT suggest to our employees that they form a committee to bargain directly with us over wages and other terms and conditions of employment.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL recognize the Union, effective from May 1, 1979, and upon request bargain with it as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of all employees in the appropriate unit with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment and, if an understanding is reached, embody such understanding in a signed agreement. The appropriate bargaining unit is:

> All production and maintenance employees, including shipping and receiving employees, but excluding all salesmen, professional employees, office clerical employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

AMERICAN DISPLAY MANUFACTURING CO., INC.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

RAYMOND P. GREEN, Administrative Law Judge: These consolidated cases (American Display Manufacturing Co., Inc. (Respondent, the Employer, or the Company), Amalgamated Service and Allied Industries Joint Board, Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union, AFL-CIO (the Union), 29-CA-7276, 29-CA-7415, 29-CA-7562, and 29-RC-4578, and Thomas Pinto, an individual, 29-CA-7687) were heard by me on various days in July, October, and December, 1980.

259 NLRB No. 6

A. The Representation Proceeding

The representation proceeding was initiated on May 7, 1979, when the Union filed a petition for an election in Case 29-RC-4578. On May 18, 1979, the parties executed a Stipulation for Certification Upon Consent Election, which was approved by the Regional Director for Region 29. Thereafter, on June 15, 1979, a secret-ballot election was held in a unit of all production and maintenance employees, including shipping and receiving employees, excluding all salesmen, professional employees, office clerical employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

The tally of ballots served on the parties at the conclusion of the election showed the following results:

Approximate number of eligible voters—40
Void ballots—0
Votes cast for Petitioner—16
Votes cast against the Union—7
Valid votes counted—33
Challenged ballots—8
Total votes counted—4
Challenges are sufficient in number to affect the results of the election.

The challenged voters were Thomas Pinto, Juan Alicea, Francine Davis, Joann Luquis, Janet Perry, Conroy Morgan, Hurelyon McLean, and Arnold Thompson. With respect to the challenges, the Regional Director, on November 30, 1979, issued a report after an investigation, wherein he recommended that the challenge to Pinto's vote be overruled and that the challenge to Alicea's vote be sustained.[1] He further recommended that a hearing be conducted as to the eligibility of Francine Davis, Joann Luquis, Janet Perry, Conroy Morgan, Hurelyon McLean, and Arnold Thompson as these people, with the exception of Davis,[2] were alleged to have been discharged for discriminatory reasons in Cases 29-CA-7276 and 29-CA-7415, which cases will be described below. The Regional Director's recommendations were approved by the Board on January 11, 1980.

After the election, the Union filed timely objections to conduct affecting the results of the election. They read as follows:

> 1. At a mass meeting of employees held in the plant on or about June 1, 1979, the Employer encouraged the formulation of a company union.
> 2. Several weeks prior to the election, the Employer offered a life insurance policy to an employee if the employee tried to see things the company['s] way; that the employee did not need a union and that any problem can be settled between the company and the employee. Again on June 14, 1979, and on June 15, 1979, the Employer requested several employees to vote "no" at the election and further promised some of the employees that if the company could get rid of the union, the employees would receive a million dollar insurance coverage, and pension plan coverage.
> 3. On June 14, 1979, the Employer called a mass meeting of employees in the plant at which meeting employees opposed to the union were permitted to express their opinions while those for the union, were not permitted to do so.
> 4. At a mass meeting of employees held June 1, 1979, in the plant, the Employer said to the assembled employees that in the past 2-1/2 years, the union did not sign up any shops. This statement is false.
> 5. At the mass meeting of June 14, 1979, the Employer stated to the assembled employees that the company might have to close down if the union won the election.
> 6. During the course of the election on June 15, 1979, a supervisor of the Employer was patrolling the voting line, approximately 15 feet from the voting booth. While so patrolling, he signaled to a group of workers on the voting line who left the voting line and went upstairs with the supervisor.
> By these and other acts, the Employer denied the employees the freedom to choose a bargaining representative, in violation of the Act.

On March 20, 1980, the Regional Director issued a Report on Objections. In the report, he directed that a hearing be held on Objections 1, 2, 3, 5, and 6. Additionally, he ordered that a hearing be held on another matter arising during the investigation, to wit; an allegation that on June 15, 1979, the Employer, by Edward Herbst, made a statement to an employee implying that the selection of the Union as bargaining representative would be futile and that the Company would never execute a collective-bargaining agreement with the Union. Also, he directed that a hearing be held on the issue of whether the discharges of Janet Perry, Arnold Thompson, Conroy Morgan, Joann Luguis, Hurelyon McLean, and Julio Nieves were motivated by discriminatory reasons prohibited by Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act, and therefore constituted objectionable conduct.

As to Objection 4, the Regional Director recommended that it be overruled. It was also ordered that the unresolved issues in the representation case be consolidated for hearing with certain unfair labor practice cases described below.[3] On May 19, 1980, the Board, after receiving the Employer's exceptions to the Report on Objections dated March 20, 1980, adopted the Regional Director's report and overruled the Employer's exceptions.

[1] Pinto was challenged by the Company as being a supervisor or alternatively because he did not share a community of interest with the unit employees. The Regional Director for Region 29 concluded, however, that at the time of the election Pinto was a nonsupervisory employee engaged in making samples and doing production setup work. Accordingly, the Regional Director concluded that Pinto was an eligible voter.

As to Alicea, the Regional Director concluded that he had quit his employment prior to the election, and therefore was not an eligible voter.

[2] Francine Davis' vote was challenged by the Union on the grounds that she was a representative of management and/or because she enjoyed special privileges and did not share a community of interest with the unit employees. In her case, the Regional Director concluded that the investigation raised substantial and material issues of fact, which would best be resolved through a hearing.

[3] The challenged ballot issues were consolidated with the unfair labor practice cases on November 30, 1979. The objection issues were consolidated with the unfair labor practice cases on March 20, 1980.

B. The Unfair Labor Practice Cases

A charge in Case 29-CA-7276 was filed by the Union on June 21, 1979, and a charge in Case 29-CA-7415 was filed by the Union on August 15, 1979. Thereafter on August 29, 1979, the Regional Director issued a consolidated complaint and notice of hearing, which alleged the following conduct:

1. That on April 20 and 27, May 3 and 11, 1979, and various other unknown dates during April, May and June 1979, Respondent by Edward Herbst, Mark Harris and Gerald Davis and other unknown agents and supervisors, interrogated employees concerning their membership in, activities on behalf of, and sympathies for the Union.
2. That on April 20 and 27, May 10 and 17, June 1 and 14, 1979, and on various other unknown dates in April, May and June, Respondent by Herbst and Harris, and other unknown agents and supervisors threatened its employees with plant closure and other reprisals if they joined, supported or assisted the Union.
3. That on April 20 and 27, May 1 and 10, June 14 and 15, 1979, and on various other unknown dates in April, May and June, Respondent by Herbst and Harris and by other unknown agents and supervisors offered, promised and granted medical and life insurance benefits to induce its employees to refrain from becoming or remaining members of the Union, and to induce them to abandon their membership and activity for the Union.
4. That on April 20 and 27, May 1 and 10, June 13 and 14, and on various other unknown dates, Respondent by Herbst and Harris, and other unknown agents and supervisors, offered and promised wage increases, vacations, profit sharing, and other benefits and improvements to induce them to refrain from becoming members of, or remaining members of the Union and to refrain from giving any assistance or support to the Union.
5. That on April 20 and 27, 1979, and on various other unknown dates in April and May, Respondent by Herbst, Harris and Davis created the impression that the meeting places, meetings and activities of its employees were kept under surveillance.
6. That on April 27, May 1, 2, and 3, 1979, and on various other unknown dates, Respondent by Davis and by other unknown agents engaged in surveillance of the Union's meeting places, meetings and activities and also the concerted activities of its employees.
7. That on April 20, 1979, Respondent by Herbst asked its employees to ascertain and divulge the Union activities, sympathies, and membership of its employees.
8. That on June 15, 1979, Respondent by Herbst told employees that it would be futile to select the Union as their collective bargaining representative by stating that the Respondent would never execute a collective bargaining agreement with the Union.
9. That on April 20 and 27, May 3, June 1, 14, and 15, 1979, and on various other unknown dates in April, May, and June, Respondent by Herbst and Harris held meetings with employees for the purpose of selecting and remedying its employees' grievances.
10. That on May 1 and June 1, 1979, and on various other unknown dates in April, May, and June, Respondent by Herbst, and Harris urged the creation of an employee organization.
11. That on May 11, 1979, Respondent laid off, in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act, the following named employees:

Janet Perry
Arnold Thompson
Conroy Morgan
Joann Luquis
Hurelyon McLean
Julio Nieves

On October 30, 1979, the Union filed a charge in Case 29-CA-7562 and on January 8, 1980, Pinto filed a charge in Case 29-CA-7687. On February 21, 1980, a complaint was issued in Case 29-CA-7687, alleging in substance, the discriminatory discharge of Thomas Pinto. On March 20, 1980, a consolidated amended complaint was issued which, in addition to realleging the allegations set forth above, also contended that Respondent, since May 2, 1979, has refused to bargain collectively with the Union. At paragraph 29 of this last pleading, the Regional Director asked for the issuance of a bargaining order in the event that the Union loses the election after counting all the ballots, including those challenged ballots which may be opened.

Finally on April 15, 1980, the Regional Director issued an order further consolidating cases, pursuant to which all of the foregoing matters were consolidated for hearing.

Upon the entire record including my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, I make the following:[4]

FINDINGS OF FACT

A. Jurisdiction

Respondent is a New York corporation with its principal place of business located at 180-10 93d Avenue, Queens, New York, where it is engaged in the manufacture and sale of jewelry displays and related products. During the past year, Respondent purchased goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000 which were delivered to its plant in interstate commerce directly from States other than the State of New York. Respondent admits and I find that it is an employer engaged in commerce withing the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

B. The Labor Organization Involved

The complaint alleges, the answer admits, and I find that the Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

C. The Organizational Campaign

An organizational effort was begun by the Union on or about April 12, 1979, when Business Agent Franklin

Western approached employees Eleazar Kelly and George Jeffers who signed union authorization cards on that date.[5] At the same time these two employees were given additional cards for distribution amongst the employees, and the evidence herein indicates that they were the two main union advocates of the employees.

From about April 12 on, union business agents arrived at the premises of the Company where they stationed themselves outside a fence facing the main entrance and where they spoke to and solicited employees as they arrived at work and during lunch times. From April 12 to May 2, the Union obtained 33 valid authorization cards executed by employees of the Company, including cards signed by the six alleged discriminatees.[6]

It also is established that at the latest, by the last week of April 1979, the Employer was fully aware that the Union was conducting an organizational campaign, which, as noted above, was conducted in full view immediately outside the Employer's premises.

With respect to the union activities of the alleged discriminatees, there is evidence indicating that Joann Luquis and Janet Perry solicited cards on behalf of the Union. However, the evidence does not establish any particular union activities other than the signing of cards by Nieves, Morgan, or McLean. As to Thomas Pinto, his testimony reveals that although he signed a card on May 1, he kept a "low profile" on this subject at least for the initial part of the campaign and did not surface as a union activist until sometime later in May.

On May 1, 1979, the Union mailed to the Company a demand for recognition but the letter was not accepted and was returned unopened to the Union. Thereafter, on May 7, the Union filed the petition for an election in Case 29-RC-4578.

D. Events in April 1979

According to the testimony of Thomas Pinto, sometime in March or April shortly after the Union first appeared, he was called into the office with Ed Herbst, Mark Harris, and Gerald Davis.[7] He testified that at this meeting the Company's management was trying to figure out a way to discourage employees from joining the Union and that Herbst told him, "see what you can do out there and we'll look out for you later." Pinto further stated that Gerald Davis suggested that Eleazor Kelly and an employee named King be discharged as they were considered to be the instigators.[8] To this, Pinto asserted that he responded by saying that discharging these people would be a bad idea because it would upset the employees and make them more eager to have union representation.

Both Davis and Herbst credibly denied the above testimony of Pinto. It is noted that as Pinto was initially uncertain as to when this meeting took place, he was asked about its timing and then stated that it occurred about a month before he signed a union card on May 1. This assertion would thereby place the meeting at a time before the Union commenced organizing Respondent's employees.

Pinto also testified that some weeks after the first conversation described above, he was again called into the office with Herbst and Harris, and asked if he was going to join the Union. According to Pinto, he told them that he was not sure yet, whereupon Herbst said that if he joined the Union he, Pinto, would be the biggest loser because he was receiving regular raises and Christmas bonuses, which he would no longer get if the Union got in. Pinto also asserted that during this conversation Herbst said that he could stop him from joining the Union by making Pinto part of management. This conversation was credibly denied by Herbst.

E. The Meeting of April 29 or 30, 1979

A number of the General Counsel's witnesses testified to a series of three meetings held by the Employer in April, May, and June, the last of which was held on June 14.[9] The basic problem I face in trying to determine what took place at these meetings is that with the exception of the General Counsel's witnesses, Pinto and Leonard French (who was only present at the second meeting), his other witnesses speak English as a second language and had substantial difficulty in communicating what was said at these meetings. (It is established that Herbst addressed the employees in English.) Moreover, and perhaps because of the passage of time between the events in question and the time when the witnesses were called to testify, there was a fairly high degree of disparity between what the General Counsel's witnesses could recollect as having been said at these meetings.

It is agreed, however, that the Company did call a meeting to discuss the Union on April 29 or 30, where Herbst did most, and probably all of the talking on behalf of Respondent. Based on the entire record, including my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and also because Herbst's version was essentially corroborated by Pinto, I shall credit the former's account which is as follows. Herbst testified that he told the assembled employees that a large portion of Respondent's business was with a company called Riviera, that Riviera's major concern was timely delivery, and that he was concerned that if a union came in, and possibly caused a strike, the Company might not be able to make timely deliveries and thereby lose Riviera as a customer which could cause the possible loss of jobs. Herbst also testified that the only thing an election could do was to force him to bargain with the Union, but that the Union could not force him to give anything he did not want to give and that the Union could only attempt to negotiate.

[5] The authorization cards state, "I hereby designate and authorize the Amalgamated Service and Allied Industries Joint Board, ACTWU - AFL-CIO-CLC, as my exclusive collective bargaining agent in all matters pertaining to wages, rates of pay and conditions of work."

[6] Hurelyon McLean and Conroy Morgan signed authorization cards on April 26, 1979; Joann Luquis signed a card on April 25, 1979; Julio Nieves signed a card on April 30, 1979; and Janet Perry and Thomas Pinto signed cards on May 1, 1979.

[8] It does not appear from this record that anyone named King was employed by the Company during any relevant time herein.

[9] It is agreed by the parties that at the meeting on June 14 Herbst read a speech. By so agreeing, however, the General Counsel did not agree that the only things said by Herbst on that date are contained in the written speech.

He stated that he told the employees that some of the promises being made by the Union were completely ridiculous and that there was no way the Company would be able to stay in existence by giving the kinds of raises that the Union had promised. Herbst testified that he said that in the event of a strike he would be forced to have the Company continue to do business by using subcontractors to satisfy its delivery requirements and that he told the employees that anyone was free to come into his office and discuss whatever needed to be discussed. He denied that he suggested to employees that they form an employee committee to meet with him to discuss employment conditions. Finally, he stated that he told the employees that his father had worked for a company called Nautiloid, which Herbst had purchased, that had closed down as a result of a strike and that all the employees of that company had been dismissed.[10]

F. The Second Meeting

Like the first meeting described above, there are a variety of accounts as to what took place, some of which are inconsistent. On the whole, it seems to me that the versions given by Thomas Pinto, Ed Herbst, and Leonard French came closest to an accurate description of what took place on that occasion and it is based on their combined testimony that I make my findings.[11]

The first question, apart from what was said, is when did this meeting take place? In this regard both Pinto and Herbst asserted that the meeting was held in early June, and Herbst specifically placed it as having occurred on June 1. Leonard French and Gerald Davis could not give any indication as to when this meeting occurred. On the other hand, Nydia Ortiz, Janet Perry, and Conroy Morgan place the meeting much closer in time to the first meeting. Obviously, if Morgan and Perry were present, this meeting had to have occurred prior to May 11 which is when they were laid off unless, of course, their testimony was not based on their own observations but on what other employees told them. Indeed, given the testimony of Perry and Ortiz it would be within the realm of possibility that this meeting was held before the petition was filed.[12]

Given the above, it seems to me that there is a substantial degree of doubt as to when this meeting was actually held. For if I were to credit Ortiz, Perry, and Morgan, it would appear that it was held before May 11. On the other hand, Herbst's assertion that the meeting was held on June 1 is an assertion contrary to his interest, inasmuch as if it was held prior to May 7 when the petition was filed, nothing he said on this occasion could be used to set aside the election.[13] In actuality, I cannot say with any assurance when this meeting was held, except that it seems more reasonable to conclude that it was held after the petition was filed, because, inter alia, if this was not so, it would have been a point raised and argued by Respondent.

As to the substance of the meeting, it appears that Herbst called this meeting, the main thrust of which was to describe the employees' existing benefits. Also, although Herbst testified that the handing out of the insurance forms by a woman from the insurance company took place at an earlier time, May 2, it seems to me that the record as a whole suggests that this probably was done on that occasion and the testimony of Gerald Davis tends to corroborate this conclusion.

In relation to the insurance issue, Herbst testified that he had decided to obtain a medical insurance plan for the employees in October 1978 and began talking with a variety of insurance companies at that time. He states that he finally made an agreement with Colonial Life Insurance Company in April 1979 for the plan which went into effect on May 1. The reason for the delay between October 1978 and the time he made the agreement is explained as being the result of comparison shopping; inasmuch as most of the carriers insisted on family coverage which was more costly than what Herbst intended. The agreement with Colonial on the other hand provides only for employee coverage, and therefore is a good deal less expensive.

In any event, the evidence herein discloses that Herbst did begin to contact insurance companies about medical coverage for his employees well before any union activities commenced and that he did enter into an agreement with Colonial for a plan which became effective on May 1, before the Union filed its petition for an election.

[10] Pinto's version of this meeting, which was the most detailed of any of the other versions testified to by the General Counsel's witnesses, was that Herbst started talking about how the Union was no good and that all they wanted was to take the employees' dues. According to Pinto, Herbst said that after the Union got it, he would have to pay more money to the workers which would mean that he would have to raise his prices which could adversely affect his competitiveness. He stated that Herbst said that Riviera constituted 40 to 60 percent of his business, that the last shop which had a contract with Riviera had lost the account when they went on strike, and that as a result Respondent had obtained Riviera's business. Pinto stated that Herbst told the employees that he did not want what happened to the other shop to happen to Respondent, that he did not want to lay off anybody, and that he wanted to have more people working for the Company because that would mean more profit for the Company. Pinto also testified that Herbst said that if the Company lost the Riviera account it would hurt the Company greatly and could result in layoffs. He stated that Herbst said that the Union would probably have to go out on strike because he was not going to give what the Union wanted. Finally, Pinto stated that Herbst told the employees that if there was a strike they would lose the Riviera account because the Company could not deliver on time, and that this would result in layoffs.

It is noted that Nydia Ortiz testified that Herbst's comments about Riviera and the consequences of strikes took place at the second meeting. In this respect she asserted that Herbst said that if Riviera contracted with someone else a lot of employees would be without work and that if there was a strike the Company could replace the strikers. In a pretrial affidavit, Ortiz also asserted that, "I recall in one of the meetings that Mr. Herbst said that if the Union came in, it would contract out some of the work. He said he would send out the work during the strike if the Union asked for too much money and could not afford it."

[11] In this respect, I am of the opinion that the testimony of Ortiz, Morgan, and Perry is confused. In my opinion they had difficulty in and recalling what took place and also tended to lump the meetings together, ascribing statements made at the first meeting to this meeting. Accordingly, unless otherwise noted, I do not place much reliance on their testimony.

[12] Ortiz and Perry testified that at this meeting the woman from the insurance company handed out forms, which Herbst stated occurred on May 2, that French was present and offered to represent the employees and that Herbst made statements about Riviera, and closing the plant. The latter remarks, however, I am convinced occurred on April 29 or 30 and were made in the manner described above.

It appears that at the meeting under discussion, Herbst made use of a blackboard with one side devoted to a list of the existing benefits, including the aforementioned medical insurance plan, and the other side entitled union benefits was set off by a large question mark. According to Pinto and Herbst, the latter then proceeded to explain the current employee benefits which included annual raises each fall, 2-week paid vacations, eight holidays, profit and pension plans, interest free loans, Christmas bonuses, Thanksgiving turkeys, and an open door policy. This last item seems to have generated some discussion and gives rise to an issue in the case.

According to Pinto, Herbst suggested during this meeting that the employees form a committee which would then negotiate with the Company without paying anybody, presumably union dues. Pinto stated that at this point Leonard French, a salesman, interjected and said, "If you want to give me your money, I'll represent you." Herbst acknowledged that French did make this remark but denied that French was speaking on behalf of the Company. On this point, Herbst stated that he merely mentioned that the Company had an open door policy and that employees could come and talk to him.

According to French, he blurted out that he would represent the employees. He stated that his remarks were spontaneous and not sponsored by the Company. He also stated that he said this as a joke and in this respect, Pinto agreed that after the remark was made French began to laugh. French, however, went on to explain how it came to pass that he made this statement. He testified that at the meeting Eleazor Kelly said that he wanted someone to represent him, whereupon Herbst suggested that each department elect a representative who would then speak to the Company for their respective departments. As French put it; "In other words, if one section felt that they desired a raise, that representative for the section would go in and discuss it."

Because I am of the opinion that French was an honest and disinterested witness,[14] and also on demeanor grounds, I shall credit his testimony. Thus, it is concluded that Herbst, at this meeting, did suggest that the employees elect representatives from each department for the purpose of bargaining directly with him regarding wages and other terms and conditions of employment. In this respect, it is concluded that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.[15] In all other respects, however, it is my opinion that the General Counsel has failed to prove by a preponderance of the credible evidence that Respondent violated the Act by anything else said at this meeting.[16]

G. The Layoffs of Joann Luquis, Janet Perry, Conroy Morgan, Hurelyon McLean, Arnold Thompson, and Julio Nieves

All of the above-named employees were laid off on May 11, 1979. The General Counsel contends that these layoffs were motivated by discriminatory reasons, and thereby violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act. Respondent argues that the layoffs were the result of economic reasons, were not discriminatorily motivated, and therefore were not violative of the Act.

In February 1979, a company called K & M Jewelry, Inc., ordered from Respondent a sample of a jewelry display preparatory to a very large order.[17]

According to Jerry Birnbach, a vice president of K & M, the original delivery date envisioned for the production order was to be March 5 for 250 units and March 15 for the remainder. The total order was for about 800 units with a total price of about $60,000. This was a large order compared to the normal order received by the Company which generally was for $5,000 or under. According to Birnbach, because there was a delay in the delivery of the sample unit, the order was not approved by him until early March 1979.

Herbst and Davis testified that as a result of this large order from K & M they decided to hire, on a temporary basis, five additional employees, not necessarily to work on the K & M units, but to fill out the needs of the shop generated by this large order. As a consequence, the Company contacted a number of employment agencies and hired Arnold Thompson on April 2, 1979, Janet Perry and her brother Philip Perry on April 5, 1979, and Conroy Morgan and Hurelyon McLean on April 10, 1979.[18] Thus, each of these employees was hired almost immediately before the Union commenced its organizational campaign.

Sometime after the five above-named employees were hired in April 1979, Joann Luquis notified the Company that she wished to resign for personal reasons. Accordingly, an arrangement was reached with Davis and Herbst that she would leave the Company sometime in the mid-May.[19]

As evidenced by the Company's records, the first 200 or 250 units of the K & M order were delivered by Respondent in or about the third week of April and on or about April 19, K & M directed the Company to hold off delivery of the remaining units. In this respect, Birnbach of K & M testified that because Respondent did not meet the originally planned delivery dates, March 5 and 15, he could not affect timely delivery of these units to his own customers. He stated that he therefore directed Herbst, over the latter's strenuous objections, to hold off production and delivery of the remaining units for 2 or 3 months.

[14] French was a salesman who left the Company's employ and was not employed by Respondent at the time of the hearing. There was no evidence to suggest that he was in favor of the Union or biased against the Company. As will be discussed, infra, the reason French left the Company was because his sales and commissions suffered as a result of Pinto's failure to have samples made on time.

[16] In the absence of a brief from the General Counsel and because of the somewhat general allegations of the complaint, it is more difficult to define what he specifically alleges as having occurred at this meeting which was unlawful. However, to the extent that the complaint alleges that Respondent, on this occasion, threatened plant closure and other reprisals, it is recommended that these allegations be dismissed as it is my opinion that they are not supported by credible evidence. As far as the announcement of the insurance plan, as it is concluded that the decision to obtain this benefit was made by the Company prior to the commencement of the union activities and that its implementation was before the filing of the petition, the granting of this benefit, along with its announcement cannot violate the Act. The Baltimore Catering Company, 148 NLRB 970 (1964).

[17] In many but not all cases, the Company makes a sample of an item ordered by a customer which must be approved by the customer before production can start. The samplemaker employed by Respondent was Thomas Pinto, who was described by Herbst as being very talented. This sample-making function is clearly the most skilled production operation in the shop and is vitally important to the Company's business.

[18] The other alleged discriminatee, Julio Nieves, was hired on March 29, 1979, and Joann Luquis was hired long before that time.

[19] Luquis did not testify in this proceeding.

According to Davis and Herbst, in light of the action by K & M in delaying delivery of the order, much of which had not yet been fully assembled or packed, it was decided to lay off some employees, basically on a seniority basis. However, as to Luquis, it was decided that she should be among the people to be laid off because she had earlier notified the Company of her intention to quit, and notwithstanding the fact that Davis had shortly before expressed his approval of her desire to extend her employment to the end of May. As explained by Herbst, he decided to let Luquis go at this time rather than a less senior employee because Luquis was going to leave in the near future anyway. With respect to Julio Nieves, it appears that his selection for layoff by Davis was a mistake, inasmuch as he had more seniority than Philip Perry. According to Davis, when he discovered this mistake it was decided to let the decision stand because it was feared that if the Union found out about the mistake, they would make an issue of it. The others who were laid off did, in fact, have the least seniority.

There is no dispute as to the fact that those employees who were told that they were laid off on May 11 were told that the reason for their layoffs was because work was slow.[20] The only seriously disputed factual issue is whether Davis also told them that they would be recalled when work became available. In this respect, Davis denied that he told any of these employees that they would be recalled and stated that, with few exceptions, the Company's policy is not to recall any laid off workers. In support of the General Counsel's position, Conroy Morgan and Nydia Ortiz testified that Davis told the employees when he laid them off that if anything turned up he would call them back. Their testimony on this point, however, was not corroborated by other witnesses called by the General Counsel who asserted that they were present at this transaction. Based on the record herein, I shall credit the testimony of Davis.[21]

While there was some testimony by Pinto challenging the proposition that work was slow, based on his assertion that as of May 11 the Company was contracting out work, the evidence establishes that subcontracting was a normal part of the Company's business practice both before and after the events which are here in dispute. That is, the evidence discloses that the Company has had a practice of subcontracting work when it is economically advantageous, and there is no evidence to indicate that at this time, the Company was deliberately subcontracting work in order to create a shortage of work in its own shop so as to justify the layoffs. Also, Nydia Ortiz testified that about 2 days after the layoffs occurred the Company started hiring new employees. However, Ortiz could not offer the names or even the descriptions of the alleged new employees, and the Company's payroll records disclose that no new employees were hired until after July. As to this latter point, although the Company asserts it did not hire new employees after May 11, it was conceded that just prior to the closing of the shop for the 2-week vacation in July, it utilized the services of a manpower agency which sent over about eight men to help load trucks for 1 day.

Subsequent to the filing of the unfair labor practice charges in Cases 29-CA-7276 and 29-CA-7415, Respondent, no doubt in an effort to limit its potential liability to the people alleged to have been discriminatorily laid off, sent written notifications which unconditionally offered to reemploy McLean, Morgan, Perry, Nieves, and Thompson. In this respect, the parties stipulated that Morgan received an offer on August 25 and returned to work; that Nieves received an offer on August 27, but did not return to work; that Perry received an offer on August 25 and returned to work; that Thompson's offer was sent on August 29, but that he did not return to work; and that McLean received an offer on September 1 and returned to work. Luquis was not offered her job back.

H. The June 14 Meeting

It is agreed by the parties that on June 14 Herbst read a speech to the employees and nothing contained in the written speech is alleged to be unlawful by the General Counsel. At most, it is asserted by the Union in its Objection 3 that at this meeting the Employer allowed an employee to make antiunion statements while prohibiting other employees from talking. In this regard, the evidence establishes that Herbst read his speech which was prefaced by the remark that he did not want to get into a discussion with employees at the meeting. It is asserted by Pinto that Francine Davis,[22] "jumped up and started to say something that I can't recall." Similarly, Nydia Ortiz testified that Francine Davis said that the Union was no good and that the Company was giving better benefits. According to both Pinto and Ortiz, employee Kelly at this point tried to say something but that Herbst told him to be quiet whereupon Pinto left the meeting in protest.

Nothing in this transaction strikes me as being objectionable conduct on the part of the Company. At most, the evidence shows that Francine Davis ignored, for a brief moment, Herbst's injunction not to talk, to make a short and essentially innocuous remark. The broad assertion by the Union that antiunion employees were permitted to speak at this meeting is, in my opinion, simply not supported by the evidence.

[21] Janet Perry's testimony was that Davis did not say anything about recalling the employees when he notified them that they were being laid off. She asserts, however, that when she spoke with Harris he said something like he would call her back.

Pinto, who testified that he was present at the layoffs on May 11, states that Davis told the employees that work was slow, a contention which Pinto says he challenged. He did not, however, corroborate the assertion that Davis told the employees that they would be recalled.

Nieves, Thompson, and Luquis did not testify in this proceeding.

I also note that Davis was no longer employed by the Company at the time he testified in this proceeding and that I was impressed by his candor.

I. Miscellaneous 8(a)(1) Allegations

According to Nydia Ortiz, about 2 weeks after she signed a card for the Union,[23] when she went into the office either Ed Herbst or Mark Harris (both of whom were allegedly present) asked her if she had filled out a card for the Union. She states that when she said that she had not, he asked if she knew anybody else who signed cards and further asked if she knew of anyone who was going to vote for the Union. When she again responded that she did not know, Ortiz stated that she was told to speak to the other employees and tell them how she had gotten a loan for the hospital and that the Company had benefits.[24]

Herbst denied that he interrogated Ortiz or any other employee about union activities. In relation to Ortiz' testimony, evidence of her bias against the Company was elicited by the fact that she was very upset over her discharge in October for fighting with another employee.[25] Respondent also showed that although Ortiz gave two affidavits to the Board's Regional Office in June and July 1979, nothing in either affidavit makes mention of the alleged interrogation. Indeed when pressed as to the apparent inconsistency, Ortiz testified that, on the day of the election, Herbst told her to "make sure you give a good vote," a phrase which conforms to the affidavit wherein she stated that Herbst merely told her to vote no, and that he was counting on her vote. In this respect, Herbst testified that during a period prior to the election, he spoke to almost all of the employees on a direct basis and told them he was counting on their vote. It is therefore evident that Ortiz' assertion that she was interrogated most probably is not correct, but is rather a result of confusion resulting from the circumstances involved and the language barrier that existed. I have no doubt that when Herbst spoke to her and told her that he was counting on her vote, this elicited a response from her and that she interpreted the transaction as meaning that she was being questioned about her feelings for the Union. In fact, I do not believe that she was interrogated and it is concluded that her testimony on this point is the result of a misunderstanding.

It is alleged that Herbst interrogated an employee named Jose Toro, and also promised him life insurance benefits in an attempt to influence his vote. Toro was originally called by the General Counsel without the aid of an interpreter. When it became apparent that his testimony could not be obtained without an interpreter, one was provided. When he resumed his testimony, Toro was initially asked if he ever talked to Herbst about the Union and his response was "no." He was then asked, in a leading manner, if he was ever offered life insurance by the Company, and to this he responded that this was offered by Herbst and Harris about 4 weeks before the election, apparently when he was asked to fill out a card for insurance. Toro went on to testify that this occurred when he walked into the office whereupon, "he told me how can you join the Union if the Union is going to do nothing for you."

It is evident to me that the discussion about insurance merely involved asking Toro to fill out the form required for the medical insurance plan which had previously become effective on May 1. Accordingly, it is concluded that the evidence herein cannot support the contention that Toro was promised a new benefit in order to influence his vote. Also, as in the case of Nydia Ortiz, I have a substantial doubt as to whether Toro was interrogated and it is my opinion that his testimony concerning this allegation was too vague and inconclusive to warrant such a conclusion.

Similarly, the testimony of Patrick Lavista regarding an alleged interrogation by Mark Harris was fraught with an even higher degree of uncertainty than the testimony of Toro and is not, in my opinion, sufficient to prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, the contention proposed by the General Counsel. Since his testimony was relatively short and unchallenged by cross-examination, it is quoted as follows:

> Q. Mr. Lavista, did you ever have any conversation with anyone from management about the Union?
> A. With the union people, I talked to them.
> Q. With anyone from management of American Display?
> A. No. Nobody.
> Q. Have any conversation with Mr. Herbst about the Union?
> A. What coverage, what they have, you know.
> Q. You asked Mr. Herbst?
> A. Who is Herbst?
> Q. Ed Herbst, the owner of American Display. Do you know who he is?
> A. Herbst, no.
> Q. How about Mark Harris, do you know who Mark Harris is?
> A. Yeah, I know Mark Harris.
> Q. Did you ever have any conversation with him about the Union?
> A. Never. He came up to me and asked me what I think of . . . did I join the Union, that is no good, you know.
> Q. Did it happen before or after you signed your card?[26]
> A. After.
> Q. Do you recall how much later, after you signed?
> A. A week.
> Q. Where were you when you had this conversation with Mark Harris?
> A. I was cleaning his office.
> Q. You were cleaning his office?
> A. That's right.
> Q. And tell me, how did the conversation start?
> A. He asked me, what I think about the Union.
> Q. And, what did you respond, what did you say to him?

---

[23] She signed a union card on April 26.

[24] It appears that, prior to the union activities, Ortiz had received a loan from the Company to pay for medical expenses.

[26] He signed a card on April 30, 1979.

> A. I didn't want him to know that I had in mind to join the Union; because he would tell me not to join it.
> Q. So, what did you say to him?
> A. I said to him—he just told me—he shook my—just don't join you know.

On direct examination, employee Douglas Jamison testified that on the day of the election he had a private conversation with Herbst. He states that Herbst told him that the Union was no good, that he should vote no, that the Company had a million dollar medical plan which the Union could not offer, and that he was just waiting to get the Union out in order to put the plan in effect. Jamison further testified that during this conversation Herbst said that, "[T]he Union could promise us this and promise us that but that's just a lot of crap—junk in other words." When Jamison said that he could not recall any more of this conversation, the General Counsel asked him; "Was there any discussion regarding negotiating a contract with the Union during that meeting?" To this last question Jamison responded that Herbst said that if the Union was elected, "[H]e would have to close the Company down, lay off, close the Company and give the jobs to private contractors because he would have to make a living somehow." When the General Counsel next asked; "Did Herbst ever indicate whether he would or would not sign a contract with the Union," Jamison testified, "he said no way he would sign."

On cross-examination, Jamison testified that paragraph 6 of his pretrial affidavit represents what Herbst told him during the above-noted conversation. This reads: "Herbst says if the Company and the Union cannot agree on a contract and the Union pulls a strike, the Company could contract out the work because they have to do business and they would have to live and no law could tell him otherwise." Also at paragraph 5 of his affidavit, Jamison made the following statements:

> I was in the saw department about 9:30 a.m., June 15, 1979. It was the day the NLRB was to run the election. I was working, performing my normal duties. Ed Herbst stopped me as I was working, and he was campaigning on behalf of the company. He said the Union was no good, they would promise us a lot of junk, and there was no guarantee that they would make a contract with the Company. Herbst did not say it was conditional that the Company and the Union had to agree to the terms; he was saying there would never be any agreement between the Company and the Union. Herbst said the employees were already getting enough benefits because of the Company. He was going to advise the employee to vote no. Herbst said because he didn't want to change the relationship between the Company and the employees but if the Union got in there would be a change in the relationship.

Herbst denied that he ever told any employee that he would close the plant if the Union came in or that he would never agree to a contract with the Union. Based on Jamison's testimony and comparing it with his pretrial affidavit, it is clear to me that I must credit Herbst. It is obvious from his affidavit that at most Jamison was told that despite the Union's promises there was no guarantee that the Company and the Union would make a contract, and that if the Union called a strike the Company would subcontract its work so as to maintain its operations. The statement in Jamison's affidavit to the effect that there would never be a contract between the Company and the Union is clearly not what was said by Herbst, but rather constitutes his interpretation of Herbst's remarks. Similarly, it is evident to me that the statement about the insurance plan, if made, merely represented a description of the plan which had gone into effect on May 1, and therefore was not a promise of a new benefit. In short, nothing related in Jamison's testimony can be concluded to warrant a finding that Respondent violated the Act.

The testimony of Philip Perry, who was discharged in July 1979 for fighting with another employee,[27] is also relied on by the General Counsel to establish certain 8(a)(1) allegations. His testimony, in my opinion, was extremely confused and difficult to piece together. In essence, he testified that sometime between the time he signed a union card[28] and the election, but probably on the day before the election, he had a conversation with Herbst in his office. It appears from his testimony that this came about because after Herbst had previously mentioned that the Company had a policy of giving loans, Perry and another employee, Alphonse Ormsby, decided to, "get some money off of him." Accordingly, Perry testified that he asked Herbst for a $50 loan and a job for his mother while telling Herbst, after being asked, that he would vote against the Union. These requests were not granted by Herbst who testified that these two employees came to him soliciting a bribe.

The testimony of Perry makes it clear to me that he was trying to hustle Herbst by offering to vote against the Union in consideration for being paid. I find him to be entirely unreliable as a witness and his testimony in support of the complaint's allegations is completely rejected.

Roy Mitchell, an employee, testified that he had three personal conversations with Herbst. In his direct testimony, he stated that the first of these conversations occurred about a week after he signed a union card[29] when Herbst drove him home. Mitchell testified that in the car, Herbst asked him, "[W]hat do you think about the Union?" Mitchell stated that Herbst went on to say that the Union was no good, that he, Mitchell, got four raises a year and that if a union came in he would have to get what the Union said. When he was asked if anything else was said, or if voting was discussed during this conversation, Mitchell testified that the above was all that was said. At this point, the General Counsel showed Mitchell his pretrial affidavit to refresh his recollection, whereupon Mitchell testified; "He said to me after the Union I'll lose people. Those lazy guys inside the shop won't want to work." Mitchell went on to explain that Herbst said that "he's going to fire those guys, the lazy guys in the shop." Apparently not satisfied with this answer, the General Counsel had Mitchell again read from his affidavit, after which Mitchell testified; "He said the people, if they vote, those guys, if the people vote for the Union, he's going to get them fired." To end Mitchell's testimony on this first conversation, the General Counsel asked; "Did Herbst ask you who you intended to vote for?" Mitchell's response was, "He asked me once and I told him that I reserved my opinion."

[28] Philip Perry signed a union card on April 27.

[29] Mitchell signed a union card on April 29, 1979.

Having concluded his testimony as to the first conversation with Herbst, Mitchell testified that he had a second conversation with Herbst. In this conversation, Mitchell asserts that, "he said to me, who am I going to vote for and that the Union is no good, and that he knows who I'm going to vote for." Mitchell stated that he told Herbst that he reserved his opinion and did not know who he was going to vote for, although he did tell Herbst that he did not like what was going on in the shop with "everybody against one another." Mitchell testified that Herbst asked if he was talking about Pinto and stated that he was "going to get rid of Tom Pinto, cause probably Tom is the ringleader for the Union." Mitchell placed this second conversation about 3 or 4 weeks after he signed a union card.

The third conversation Mitchell said he had with Herbst is essentially irrelevant to this proceeding and need not be discussed. He did, however, state that he had a conversation with Gerald Davis who said that if the Union came in he, Mitchell, would only get one raise a year.

Initially pointed out on cross-examination was that Mitchell was confusing the first conversation with the second, asserting that the first occurred in Herbst's office whereas the second was in the car. Also on cross-examination, Mitchell had this to say about the subject of raises:

> Q. Did he say, if the Union comes in, and we agree to a contract with one raise a year, that's all the raises that he would give to people, including you?
> A. He said if the Union came in, he just can give me one raise because he has to go for what the Union says.
> Q. He has to go for what the Union and he agrees to. Is that what he said?
> A. Right.

It also is noted that Mitchell conceded that his pretrial affidavit made no mention of any conversation with Davis.

In relation to the above, Herbst testified that on one occasion he drove Mitchell home and that during the drive Mitchell said that he was pleased with the raises he received and was not interested in the Union. Herbst stated that he told Mitchell that he was counting on him and to convey his thoughts to the other people in the factory. He denied, however, that he asked Mitchell how he was going to vote. Herbst further stated that during this ride he told Mitchell that he was aware that Pinto was prounion, but denied that he said that he was going to fire Pinto for his union activity.

Mitchell's testimony covered three relatively simple transactions, but his testimony, in large measure, could not be obtained without using his pretrial affidavit to refresh his recollection or through the use of leading questions. Moreover, in certain respects, his affidavit contradicted his testimony, and his testimony on cross-examination was inconsistent with what he said on direct examination. Therefore given the choice between Mitchell's testimony and Herbst's testimony, I am going to credit the latter.

Employeé Conroy Morgan testified that shortly after a meeting held by the Company to discuss the Union, which he places on April 26, and after he signed a union card,[30] he and Hurelyon McLean went to work together and when they reached the gate, spoke to Franklyn Western while Gerald Davis was standing at the front door. He stated that as he and McLean went into the factory past Davis the latter said, "hope you guys didn't change your mind after the meeting last night." Morgan also testified that later that day, at the break, as he and McLean went outside, Davis said, "[W]hat do you guys think about the Union?"

With respect to the above, Davis testified that a few days before Morgan was laid off he overheard Morgan tell McLean that there was no need for a union and that McLean agreed. Davis was not, however, asked by Respondent's counsel to deny and did not deny that he interrogated Morgan and McLean, notwithstanding the fact that he was asked to and did deny other specific allegations. On balance, I shall credit Morgan's testimony regarding the incidents described by him and conclude that when Davis interrogated him and McLean as to what they thought of the Union, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.[31]

J. The Voting Line Incident

In its Objection 6, the Union alleges, in substance, that during the election Supervisor Davis spoke to various people who were on the voting line waiting to vote. In this regard the testimony of Nydia Ortiz and Thomas Pinto was offered to substantiate this allegation.

Pinto testified that Davis came over to the voting line, called employee Al Reynolds upstairs, and spoke to him but that he did not hear what was said. He also stated that he then asked Davis what he was doing at the voting line and that he told Davis that one of the people on line to vote was not eligible because he had quit. As to this transaction, Nydia Ortiz testified that when Davis came out of the office, he went up the stairs and waved to some people to go up to him. She stated that she heard Al Reynolds say he did not want to vote either for the Union or the Company; whereupon, Davis said, "Al get out there and vote, your vote will help us."

[30] Morgan signed a union card on April 26, 1979.

[31] If, however, the General Counsel is relying on Morgan's testimony to support the allegation of surveillance, this contention is rejected. I do not conclude from the fact that Davis was standing at the entrance of the factory in the morning as employees came to work that this is sufficient to prove that Respondent engaged in surveillance of the employee's meetings and activities with the Union.

Davis testified that at the time of the election he spent most of his time in the main production area away from the election area, but that on one or two occasions he did pass by the voting line on his way to and from the office. He testified that he did not, at any time during the election, converse with any employees at the voting line.

Assuming, arguendo, that I accept Ortiz' version of this transaction, I am not inclined to view Davis' statement to Reynolds as the type of last minute electioneering prohibited under the Board cases. At most, the evidence herein establishes that as Davis walked past the voting area, Reynolds made a statement to the effect that he did not want to vote, whereupon Davis called him up the stairs and told him that he should vote because "your vote will help us." It is my opinion that this inconsequential response to Reynold's statement cannot be construed as affecting the laboratory conditions of the election. Cumberland Nursing & Convalescent Center, 248 NLRB 322 (1980); Princeton Refinery, Inc., 244 NLRB 1 (1979).

K. The Discharge of Thomas Pinto

Pinto was discharged on December 18, 1979. The General Counsel contends that Pinto was a leading advocate for the Union, whose activities motivated Respondent to discharge him. As to this point, the evidence herein does indicate that after the initial organizational period, Pinto was vocal in support of the Union and that his sympathies were known to Respondent. However, the timing of his discharge, about 6 months after the election, is not, in my opinion, particularly favorable to the General Counsel's theory that he was unlawfully terminated.

The parties agree that at the discharge interview Pinto was told that he was being discharged for excessive absenteeism, and it is Respondent's contention that this was, in fact, the reason which motivated its action. More particularly, Respondent asserts that although it may have tolerated a relatively high degree of absenteeism by other employees and even by Pinto in the past, it became apparent that during the months of November and December 1979 Pinto's absences not only were excessive, but were seriously impeding production and the operations of the Company because of his position as the samplemaker. Moreover, Herbst testified that Pinto's pattern of absences during this period of time, when it was known that customers were demanding their samples, was of such a nature as to convince him that Pinto was intentionally sabotaging the Company's operations.

There is, in fact, no dispute that Pinto had an exceedingly poor record of attendance[32] and the evidence establishes that he received warnings about this subject matter prior to his discharge. There is also no dispute that Herbst had tolerated Pinto's absences in the past because, as he put it, Pinto was a very talented sample maker. The question then is why was Pinto's absentee record in this period, November and December, different from all other periods of time?

As noted above, Pinto's job was crucial to Respondent's operations because without his creation of samples the customers could not approve the orders and production could not commence. Therefore, to say that other employees, such as Francine Davis, with equal rates of absenteeism were not discharged and thereby argue disparate treatment, is to miss the point.[33] Except for Respondent's management and supervisory staff, the evidence herein establishes that no other employee was as critical to Respondent's operations as was Pinto and that no other employees' absence would be as sorely missed.

The evidence establishes that during the period from about October through December, a substantial amount of sample making was required and that Gerald Davis was also assigned to do some of this work along with Pinto. Pinto conceded that Herbst and Harris were complaining to him about samples not being finished on time and he further stated that when he was asked to work overtime to complete his work he refused to do so. The testimony of Pinto and French establishes that Pinto was assigned to make the samples for orders obtained by French and that because they were not completed on time French quit the Company's employ because this adversely impacted on his sales and commissions. Thus, according to the General Counsel's own witnesses, Pinto's inability to complete samples, no doubt caused at least in part hy his absences from work and his refusal to work overtime, resulted in the loss of French as an employee of the Company.

As noted previously, Riviera was the largest single customer of Respondent, generating between 40 to 60 percent of the Company's business. Cathy Kostialik, an employee of Riviera was subpenaed as a witness by Respondent. Kostialik testified that an order given to Respondent in October was delayed because of Respondent's inability to furnish the sample on time. As to this sample, she explained that her boss, Baum, got very upset over the delay. She also stated that in the beginning of November another order was placed which required a sample and that the delay on Respondent's part in delivering the sample generated a series of telephone conversations between herself and Herbst. In this respect, Kostialik testified that she kept asking Herbst why the sample was not delivered and that he kept telling her that the delay was caused by the samplemaker. She stated that she expected delivery of this particular sample by the beginning of December but that it was not delivered until December 17. As to yet another order, Kostialik testified that when the sample was not promptly delivered she had a series of phone calls with Herbst who [32] The evidence discloses that Pinto's attendance during November and December 1979 was as follows:

Week Ending	Hours Worked Per Week
11/14	32
11/21	31-1/4
11/28	36-1/2
12/05	32

again explained that the delay resulted from the samplemaker's inability to complete the project. According to Kostialik, there came a point in November or December when she threatened Herbst with the withdrawal of Riviera's business.

Regarding the decision to discharge Pinto, Herbst testified that although he considered him to be a very talented samplemaker, and although he was aware that Pinto had to go to a medical clinic once a month,[34] the situation with Riviera had gotten so critical that it "was an intolerable situation," and that he could not continue to employ Pinto if he was not available to do his job.

ANALYSIS

A. The Alleged Unfair Labor Practices

In the foregoing sections I have already made a number of conclusions which are as follows:

1. That at the second meeting in May, Respondent, by Edward Herbst, violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by suggesting the formation of an employee committee which would bargain directly with the Company over wages and other terms and conditions of employment.
2. That Respondent, by Gerald Davis, interrogated its employees concerning their feelings about the Union.
3. That by obtaining a health insurance plan for its employees and announcing its implementation, Respondent did not violate the Act.
4. That apart from the interrogation described above in paragraph 2, Respondent's agents did not interrogate other employees.
5. That Respondent's agents did not promise new benefits to employees Jose Toro and Douglas Jamison.
6. That Respondent's agents did not tell Douglas Jamison that the plant would close down if the Union was elected to represent its employees or that the Company would not bargain with the Union if elected.
7. That Respondent's agents did not offer loans or other benefits to Phillip Perry in order to influence his vote.
8. That Respondent's agents did not, in discussions with employee Roy Mitchell, threaten Mitchell with loss of benefits, threaten to discharge its employees who supported the Union, or interrogate Mitchell about his feelings for the Union.
9. That Respondent's agents did not, in conversations with Thomas Pinto in April, threaten to discharge its employees because of their union activities or threaten Pinto with the loss of benefits.
10. That Respondent's agents did not engage in surveillance or create the impression that they were engaged in the surveillance of its employees' union activities.

With respect to the first meeting held in the shop on or about April 29 or 30, I have credited Herbst's account. Having done so, it nevertheless seems to me that the statements he concededly made raise a substantial issue. Thus, by his own account he told the employees, in essence, that if the Union came in and caused a strike the Company might not be able to make timely deliveries, might therefore lose the Riviera account and thereby result in the possible loss of jobs; that if the Union won the election, it could only force him to bargain with the Union but could not require him to accede the Union's "ridiculous" demands; that there was no way the Company would be able to stay in existence by giving the Union the kinds of raises the Union had promised; and that the former company which dealt with Riviera had closed down as a result of a strike and that all of its employees had been dismissed.

Given the nature of the above remarks, it is not surprising to me that certain employees interpreted them as statements that the Company would close if the Union was elected, despite my belief that such statements, in haec verba, were not made and the remarks were couched in the language of economic predictions. In discussing the legal consequences of statements similar to this, the Supreme Court recognized that the line between permissable and coercive statements is not always sharply defined. In N.L.R.B. v. Gissel Packing Co., Inc., et al., 395 U.S. 575 (1969), the Court stated:

> Petitioner argues that the line between so-called permitted predictions and proscribed threats is too vague to stand up under traditional first amendment analysis and that the Board's discretion to curtail free speech rights is correspondingly too uncontrolled. It is true that a reviewing court must recognize the Board's competence in the first instance to judge the impact of utterances made in the context of the employer-employee relationship, see N.L.R.B. v. Virginia Electric & Power Co., 314 U.S. 469, 479 (1941). But an employer, who has control ever that relationship and therefore knows it best, cannot be heard to complain that he is without an adequate guide for his behavior. He can easily make his views known without engaging in "brinkmanship" when it becomes all too easy to "overstep and tumble into [over] the brink," Wausau Steel Corp. v. N.L.R.B., 337 F.2d 369, 372 (7th Cir. 1967). At the least he can avoid coercive speech simply by avoiding conscious overstatements he has reason to believe will mislead his employees.

It is my opinion that the remarks admittedly made by Herbst at this meeting overstepped the line of permissable free speech and crossed into the prohibited area of coercive threats. Notwithstanding his description of the Union's demands as being "ridiculous" and his assertion that the Company could not stay in business if it agreed to the kinds of raises the Union had promised to the employees, there can be no evidence justifying the assertion that the Union's demands were "ridiculous" inasmuch as no demands had been made. In N.L.R.B. v. Gissel Packing Co., supra, the Court concluded:

[34] Herbst also testified that Pinto may have been given permission to go to the dentist on 2 or 3 days during the week preceding his discharge, but that he understood that Pinto would come into work after his dental appointments and not stay home as he did. He testified that at the discharge interview when Pinto offered his dental problems as an excuse for his absences, he told Pinto that if he was so sick the Company could not have him on the job.

> Equally valid was the finding by the court and the Board that petitioner's statements and communications were not cast as a prediction of "demonstrable 'economic consequences,'" 397 F.2d, at 160, but rather as a threat of retaliatory action. The Board found that petitioner's speeches, pamphlets, leaflets, and letters conveyed the following message: that the company was in a precarious financial condition; that the "strike-happy" union would in all likelihood have to obtain its potentially unreasonable demands by striking, the probable result of which would be a plant shutdown, as the past history of labor relations in the area indicated; and that the employees in such case would have great difficulty finding employment elsewhere. In carrying out its duty to focus on the question: "[W]hat did the speaker intend and the listener understand?" A. Cox, Law and the National Labor Policy 44 (1960), the Board could reasonably conclude that the intended and understood import of that message was not to predict that unionization would inevitably cause the plant to close but to threaten to throw employees out of work regardless of the economic realities. In this connection, we need go no further than to point out (1) that petitioner had no support for its basic assumption that the union, which had not yet even presented any demands, would have to strike to be heard, and that it admitted at the hearing that it had no basis for attributing other plant closings in the area to unionism; and (2) that the Board has often found that employees, who are particularly sensitive to rumors of plant closings, take such hints as coercive threats rather than honest forecasts.[35]

Concerning the layoffs on May 11, it is concluded that the General Counsel has not proven by a preponderance of the evidence that these layoffs were motivated by illegal considerations.

Notwithstanding the fact that these layoffs occurred shortly after the petition for the election was filed and at a time when Respondent was aware of the Union's organizational campaign and was taking steps to counter that campaign, it also was established that at the same time the Company had been directed by a customer to defer production and delivery of its largest inhouse order.

It is my opinion that the deferral of this order, which deferral came about contrary to Respondent's wishes, necessitated the layoff of some employees. Given this circumstance, which was beyond the control of the Company, it therefore was not unreasonable for Respondent to lay off a number of employees, as extra employees had originally been hired to deal with the additional work this order created. It also was reasonable for the selection of those employees to be laid off to be done basically on a seniority basis so that the last hired would be the first laid off. This then would explain the reason why Janet Perry, Conroy Morgan, Hurelyon McLean, and Arnold Thompson were selected for layoffs, as they clearly were the least senior employees.

With respect to Joann Luquis, her selection for layoff while not based on seniority factors was also reasonable in my opinion. As noted above, she had previously given notice of her intention of quitting. As such, it clearly made sense for the Company to include her among those to be laid off so that an employee who otherwise would have been let go could be kept employed. The fact that the Company had earlier agreed to her desire to delay her quitting to the end of May is not viewed as particularly relevant, and given the circumstances it was reasonable for Respondent to change its mind and to include her among the individuals to be laid off.

It also is concluded that the selection of Julio Nieves for the May 11 layoff was the result of a mistake and not the result of discriminatory intent. As established by the evidence, he was originally selected for layoff on the assumption that he was one of the people with least seniority. When Davis realized that Nieves had slightly greater seniority than another employee, Philip Perry, he decided to let his mistaken decision stand rather than recall Nieves and lay off Perry. While unfortunate for Nieves and fortunate for Perry, I do not see evidence of discriminatory intent in this transaction.

It is finally concluded, insofar as the layoffs of May 11, that these were intended as permanent rather than temporary layoffs. In this regard, I credit the testimony of Davis to the effect that he did not tell these employees that they would be recalled and that it was normal company policy not to recall laid-off employees. The fact that these individuals were offered reinstatement in August does not change my opinion, because it is clear that these offers were made after unfair labor practice charges had been filed and no doubt were intended to limit Respondent's potential liability.

In Pinto's case, it is concluded that he was discharged for cause and not because of his union or concerted activities. In this respect, it was amply demonstrated that Pinto, during the months of November and December, had a record of excessive absenteeism which created substantial problems for the Company, including the quitting of salesman Leonard French who was not earning enough because Pinto was not making his samples. It also was established that although Pinto's absenteeism had been tolerated in the past because of his talent as a samplemaker, his absences during this period of time resulted in the failure to make timely delivery of samples to Riviera, Respondent's largest customer. This, in turn, generated a series of telephone calls between Respondent and Riviera wherein the latter threatened to withdraw its business unless it could get delivery of the samples on time.

In light of the above and given the fact that during the last week prior to his discharge Pinto was absent for 3 days, Respondent decided that it no longer could tolerate Pinto's absences and discharged him. In my opinion, Pinto's absences were the sole reason for his discharge and I reject the contention that this was a pretext to hide a discriminatory motivation for his termination.

B. The Challenged Ballots

Having concluded that the layoffs on May 11 were not discriminatorily motivated, and having also concluded that they were permanent in nature. it is recommended that the challenges to the ballots of Joann Luquis, Janet Perry, Conroy Morgan, and Arnold Thompson be sustained.

Insofar as the challenge to the ballot of Francine Davis is concerned, it is recommended that this challenge be overruled. The evidence herein discloses that she was one of the factory workers and no evidence was presented which would warrant the conclusion that she was a supervisor or that she was otherwise an ineligible voter.

C. The Objections

It is my conclusion, noted above, that after the petition was filed and before the election, Respondent, by Herbst, at a meeting of all the employees, urged them to form a committee for the purpose of negotiating directly with Respondent regarding wages and other terms and conditions of employment. In view of my conclusion that such conduct violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, I recommend that Objection 1 be sustained. As it is my opinion that these statements made during the pendency of the election are sufficient to upset the laboratory conditions, it is recommended that the election be set aside. Dal-Tex Optical Company, Inc., 137 NLRB 1782, 1786 (1962).

IV. THE REMEDY

The General Counsel contends that a bargaining order should be granted herein even if a majority of the bargaining unit employees have not voted for the Union.

The Supreme Court in N.L.R.B. v. Gissel Packing Co., Inc., supra, distinguished between three categories of cases insofar as the propriety of granting bargaining orders. The first category involves the "exceptional" cases where "outrageous" and "pervasive" unfair labor practices are committed. The second category concerns "less pervasive practices" that have a tendency to undermine majority strength and impede the election process. In this category of cases, the Court concluded that a bargaining order would be appropriate to remedy an employer's unlawful conduct making a fair election unlikely where at some point, the Union had majority support among the employees. The third category of cases concerns those in which minor or less intensive unfair labor practices have been committed, having a "minimal impact" on an election. In this last category, the Court held that a bargaining order is inappropriate to remedy the violations committed even if the Union enjoyed majority support.

Also in cases where an election has been held, a necessary precondition to the granting of a bargaining order is that the election be set aside because of conduct interfering with the conduct of the election. Irving Air Chute Company, Inc., Marathon Division, 149 NLRB 627 (1964); The Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company, Inc., 230 NLRB 766 (1977). In the instant case this precondition has been met because I have sustained Objection 1.

In the present case, the evidence establishes that by May 7 when the Union filed its petition for an election it had obtained valid authorization cards from 33 of the 47 bargaining unit employees.[36] Moreover, even if I were to conclude that Janet and Philip Perry, McLean, Thompson, and Morgan were not bargaining unit employees because they were, as contended by Respondent, temporary hires, it still would be evident that by May 1 or 7 a majority of the bargaining unit employees had designated the Union as their collective-bargaining representative.[37] Therefore, if it is concluded that the unfair labor practices committed by Respondent put this case into the second category set out by the Supreme Court, the precondition that the Union must have had majority support at some relevant time, has been met.

The final question is whether in the circumstances of this case, the Employer's unfair labor practices are, in the aggregate, sufficient to warrant the granting of a bargaining order. Based on the case precedent, it seems to me that this question must be answered in the affirmative. In N.L.R.B. v. Gissel Packing Co., supra, it is noted that four cases were consolidated for argument, one of which, The Sinclair Co. v. N.L.R.B., 397 F.2d 157 (1st Cir. 1968), involved facts remarkably similar to the facts of the instant case. Thus, in Sinclair, the court concluded that a bargaining order was required where the Company, during the pendency of an election, made statements in speeches and pamphlets implying that the selection of the union would result in plant closure.

In the case at bar, I have concluded that at a meeting with virtually all of its employees present, Respondent on or about April 29 or 30 made statements implying that the selection of the Union would lead to strikes and the closing of the plant. I have also concluded that after the petition was filed, Respondent told all the employees that if they formed a committee, the Company would bargain directly with them over wages and other terms and conditions of employment. In effect, the statements made by Herbst on both occasions are tantamount to holding out a carrot while at the same time wielding a stick. It seems to me that such statements to employees are of the type which would impose a substantial impediment to the holding of a fair and free election and that their lingering effects would impact adversely on the holding of a fair rerun election. N.L.R.B. v. International Metal Specialties Inc., 433 F.2d 870 (2d Cir. 1970). Accordingly, it is my opinion that a bargaining order is required to remedy the unfair labor practices found herein.[38] Further, as I have concluded that Respondent commenced its illegal campaign on April 29 or 30, 1979, and as the Union obtained majority status no later than May 1, I shall recommend that a bargaining order be retroactive to the latter date.[39]

[36] By the same token, it is established that as of May 1, when the Union unsuccessfully attempted to demand recognition, the Union had obtained authorization cards from 31 of the 47 unit employees.

[37] Even if I did not count these employees as part of the bargaining unit, the Union, by May 1, would have obtained majority support because it would have obtained cards from 26 of 42 employees.

[38] Although it is concluded that a bargaining order is required, I cannot conclude that Respondent violated Sec. 8(a)(5) of the Act because this record fails to establish that the Union, at any time, made an effective demand for recognition which was received by the Company. In this respect, the filing of a petition for election does not constitute a proper demand for bargaining. The Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company Inc., 230 NLRB 766, fn. 1 (1977).

Finally, in view of the fact that the results of the election are at this time still undetermined, I shall recommend that the ballots of Thomas Pinto and Francine Davis be opened and counted and that if the Union should win the election after a revised tally of ballots is issued, then a certification of representative should issue. If, however, the Union should lose the election based on the revised tally of ballots, the election should be set aside and the bargaining order alone should take effect.[40]

Based on the above findings of fact and upon the entire record in this case,[41] I make the following:

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. American Display Manufacturing Co., Inc., is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. Amalgamated Service and Allied Industries Joint Board, Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union, AFL-CIO, is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. Respondent, by interrogating its employees regarding their sympathies for the Union, violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

4. Respondent, by threatening employees with plant closure if the Union were to be selected as their bargaining representative, violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

5. Respondent, by urging its employees to form a committee for the purpose of bargaining directly with it over wages and other terms and conditions of employment, violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

6. The aforesaid unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

7. To remedy the unfair labor practices found herein, Respondent shall be ordered to bargain, upon request, with the Union in the appropriate collective-bargaining unit as set forth in the Order.

8. In Case 29-RC-4578, the challenged ballots of Thomas Pinto and Francine Davis shall be opened and counted, whereas the challenges to the ballots of Janet Perry, Hurelyon McLean, Arnold Thompson, Joann Luquis, and Juan Alicea shall be sustained. Therefore a revised tally of ballots shall issue and if the Union obtains a majority of the valid votes counted, a certification of representative shall issue.

9. In Case 29-RC-4578, the facts reveal that Respondent engaged in objectionable conduct as averred in Objection 1 and accordingly, the election should be set aside in the event the Union does not win the election after a revised tally of ballots is issued.

10. Except to the extent heretofore found, the other allegations of the complaint are dismissed and the other objections are overruled.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact, conclusions of law, and the entire record, and pursuant to Section 10(c) of the Act, I hereby issue the following recommended:

ORDER[42]

The Respondent, American Display Manufacturing Co., Inc., Queens, New York, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Coercively interrogating employees concerning their union sympathies.

(b) Threatening to close its factory if the employees select the Union as their collective-bargaining agent.

(c) Suggesting to employees that they form a committee to bargain directly with Respondent regarding wages and other terms and conditions of employment.

(d) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Recognize, effective from the date beginning May 1, 1979, and, upon request, bargain collectively with the Union as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of all employees in the appropriate unit, with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment and, if an understanding is reached, embody such understanding in a signed agreement. The appropriate bargaining unit is:

> All production and maintenance employees, including shipping and receiving employees, but excluding all salesmen, professional employees, office clerical employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

(b) Post at its place of business in Queens, New York, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[43] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 29, after being duly signed by Respondent's representative, shall be posted by Respondent immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Notify the Regional Director for Region 29, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps Respondent has taken to comply herewith.[44]

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On February 23, 1981, Administrative Law Judge James S. Jenson issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, the General Counsel and Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the General Counsel also filed a brief in response to Respondent exceptions, and Respondent filed a brief in opposition to the General Counsel's exceptions.

The National Labor Relations Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions[2] of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order, as modified herein.[3]

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge, as modified below, and hereby orders that the Respondent, La Mousse, Inc., Los Angeles, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the said recommended Order, as so modified:

Substitute the following for paragraph 2(e):

"(e) Post at its Los Angeles plant copies of the attached notice marked 'Appendix.'[28] Copies of said notice, which shall be in Spanish and English, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 31, after being duly signed by an authorized representative of Respondent, shall be posted by Respondent immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material."

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

JAMES S. JENSON, Administrative Law Judge: This case was heard in Los Angeles, California, on various dates between May 6 and July 2, 1980. The charge in Case 31-CA-9367 was filed on September 6, 1979,[1] and a complaint thereon issued on November 29. On January 15, 1980, the Regional Director for Region 31 issued a "Report on Challenges and Objections, Order consolidating cases, Order Directing Hearing and Notice of Hearing," wherein Cases 31-CA-9367 and 31-RC-4550 were consolidated for hearing. On January 7, 1980, the charge in Case 31-CA-9680 was filed, and on February 29, 1980, an order consolidating all three cases for hearing was issued. The objections to the election allege conduct substantially similar to certain conduct alleged as unfair labor practices in the consolidated complaint. A resolution of the 8(a)(3) allegations will also dispose of the challenged ballots. Respondent denies it engaged in conduct alleged to be unlawful and objectionable.

All parties were given full opportunity to appear, to introduce evidence, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, to argue orally, and to file briefs. Extensive briefs were filed by Respondent and the General Counsel, and have been carefully considered.

Upon the entire record in the case, and from my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

La Mousse, Inc., herein called Respondent, is a California corporation engaged in the manufacture and sale of pastries. Its gross revenue exceeds $500,000 per year, and it annually purchases and receives goods and services valued in excess of $50,000 from sellers or suppliers located within the State of California, which sellers or suppliers received such goods in substantially the same form directly from outside the State of California. In accordance with Section 102.20 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, and Respondent's admission, it is found that Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce and in a business affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

[1] Respondent has excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Administrative Law Judge. It is the Board's established policy not to overrule an administrative law judge's resolutions with respect to credibility unless the clear preponderance of all of the relevant evidence convinces us that the resolutions are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, Inc., 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing his findings.

[2] In affirming the Administrative Law Judge's conclusion that Respondent did not violate the Act by discharging Supervisor Berta Ujueta, we rely solely on the reason that her termination was only for lawful cause rather than for unlawful discriminatory cause. In addition, we note that the Administrative Law Judge's Conclusion of Law 7 failed to state that Respondent violated Sec. 8(a)(5) of the Act, as well as Sec. 8(a)(1), by its January 1, 1980, unilateral grant of group health insurance benefits.

[3] Member Fanning would make the bargaining order prospective in nature. See his concurring opinions in Beasley Energy, Inc., d/b/a Peaker Run Coal Company, 228 NLRB 93 (1977), and Hambre Hombre Enterprises, Inc., d/b/a Panchito's, 228 NLRB 136 (1977). The General Counsel has excepted to the Administrative Law Judge's inadvertent failure to include in his recommended Order a requirement that the notices be posted in Spanish as well as in English. We agree with the General Counsel and we shall modify the recommended Order accordingly.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

It is admitted and found that Bakery, Confectionery & Tobacco Workers International Union, Local 453, AFL-CIO, herein called the Union, is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ISSUES

The consolidated complaint alleges in substance:

(1) That following the designation of the Union as Respondent's employees' collective-bargaining representative, Respondent constructively discharged 12 of its undocumented alien employees by making arrangements with the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service, herein called INS, to conduct a raid of Respondent's facility approximately 2 days prior to a Board-conducted representation election and which resulted in the deportation of said employees, because of their union or protected concerted activities, thereby violating Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

(2) That Respondent has failed to reinstate three of said employees to their former positions of employment in violation of Section 8(a)(3).

(3) That Respondent unlawfully discharged Berta Ujueta in violation of Section 8(a)(3).

(4) That Respondent granted its employees morning and afternoon breaks in order to discourage support for the Union in violation of Section 8(a)(3).

(5) That Respondent subsequently recalled Refugio Betancourt to a position different from his former job and thereafter discharged him, all because of his union or protected concerted activities.

(6) That Nadine Korman, Respondent's president, violated Section 8(a)(1) by telling employees she would never accept the Union and that if they engaged in a strike they would lose their jobs.

(7) That Respondent's agent Fierro unlawfully interrogated an employee about her union interests.

(8) That Respondent's agents, Ramirez and Fierro, interrogated employees about their union activities, solicited their grievances, promised to grant benefits to employees, and threatened unspecified reprisals against an employee, all for the purpose of discouraging their union activities.

(9) That Respondent, through Korman and Ramirez, unlawfully promised Berta Ujueta benefits to discourage her support for the Union, asked her to report on the union sympathies and desires of other employees, and advised her of the futility of selecting the Union by stating Respondent would never have a union.

(10) That in November and December, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) by unilaterally changing the length of morning and afternoon breaks, arranging for medical insurance, instituting three rules governing working conditions, and requiring that employees keep a record of certain work produced and began timing its employees engaged in such work.

(11) That in January 1980, Respondent discharged three employees for failing to comply with one of the rules governing working conditions that had been unilaterally instituted.

The General Counsel seeks the usual reinstatement and restitution of backpay remedy, together with a bargaining order. As noted earlier, the objections to the election alleged conduct substantially similar to some of the unfair labor practice allegations. A resolution of the 8(a)(3) allegations will also dispose of the challenged ballot issue.

Contending that Berta Ujueta was a supervisor within the meaning of the Act, played the leading role in organizing the employees, and solicited their signatures on the Union's authorization cards, Respondent denies that the Union at any time represented an uncoerced majority of its employees. While acknowledging that law firm which previously represented it was responsible for the INS raid, Respondent points out that Korman attempted unsuccessfully to countermand arrangements for the raid and notified Respondent's employees not to report for work on the morning of the expected raid, but that the Union encouraged them to report for work. Therefore, Respondent argues, the Union substantially contributed to the discharges of employees resulting from the raid and therefore a bargaining order would allow the Union to benefit from its own misconduct and would not effectuate the policies of the Act. Respondent denies specifically and generally all other allegations in the complaint, and moves to dismiss the complaint on the ground the Union fraudulently induced it into agreeing to an election.[2]

Thus, the principal issues to be resolved are:

1. Whether Berta Ujueta was a supervisor within the meaning of the Act and whether her termination was unlawful.

2. Whether the role Berta Ujueta played in the Union's organizing drive tainted the authorization cards so that the Union never obtained an uncoerced majority.

3. Whether Respondent's conduct warrants setting aside the election and a bargaining order.

4. Whether Betancourt was properly reinstated and whether his subsequent discharge was unlawful.

5. Whether the discharge of Arauz, Badillo, and Aguirre was unlawful.

6. Whether the complaint should be dismissed on the ground that the Union fraudulently induced Respondent into entering into an agreement for an election.

Credibility, as in all cases of this type, is, of course, a material issue. The transcript reveals considerable testimonial conflict. In particular, there was considerable conflict with respect to whether Berta Ujueta, herein called Berta, was really vested with supervisory authority; whether Berta threatened Nadine Korman, which was the motivating factor in her termination; whether both the Spanish and English versions of the notice of election were posted; whether unlawful statements were made by Korman during a speech which was read to employees; and whether Refugio Betancourt was recalled in January to a position substantially equivalent to the job he occupied prior to August 29. In making my credibility findings, I have given consideration to the demeanor of the witnesses while they were on the stand, their ability to recall past events, the various positions occupied by the witnesses and their possible interest in the outcome of the litigation, the inherent probabilities in the accounts which they gave, and the weight of the evidence. The testimony of Berta and others of the General Counsel's witnesses consistently sought to portray Berta as lacking any authority in the kitchen. As will be seen hereafter, Respondent's witnesses, including former employees who have no interest in the proceedings, contradicted their testimony. The General Counsel's picture of Respondent's managerial organization is at variance with sound practice, and in my view the testimony of her witnesses in this regard lacked the ring of truth. If they were to be believed, I would have to find that the 16-plus kitchen employees worked without supervision virtually all of the time. For reasons which will appear hereafter, I am convinced that the General Counsel's witnesses had in some way been apprised of the impact that finding that Berta was a supervisor might have on the proceedings, and tailored their testimony accordingly. I am equally convinced they tailored their testimony regarding the posting of the election notices, which will be more fully explained below. Thus, while I do credit the General Counsel's witnesses in many respects, I do not credit their testimony in those particular areas. To the extent I credit a witness only in part, I do so upon the evidentiary rule that it is not uncommon "to believe some and not all of the witness' testimony." N.L.R.B. v. Universal Camera Corporation, 179 F.2d 749, 754 (2d Cir. 1950).

[2] At the conclusion of the General Counsel's case, Respondent moved to dismiss certain complaint allegations. I granted the motion with respect to pars. 18(d) and 20(d). Par. 18(d) alleges that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) by promising employees higher wages in order to discourage their support for the Union. The General Counsel acknowledged she had not presented any evidence in support of this allegation. Accordingly, I reaffirm the dismissal of par. 18(d). I have reconsidered the evidence and arguments with respect to par. 20(d) which alleges that Respondent violated Sec. 8(a)(1) by unilaterally requiring its employees to keep records of the number of "leaves" they made, and by timing the employees while they made said "leaves." The evidence shows conclusively that Respondent was engaged in conducting a cost analysis and timestudy for the purpose of developing a price quotation on a special mousse for Continental Airlines. In view of the valid business justification for the study, its limited duration, and the fact that Rosen specifically stated on the record that the Union did not have a "problem" with a timestudy, I reaffirm my prior ruling dismissing par. 20(d).

IV. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. The Setting

Nadine Korman commenced making desserts commercially in the kitchen of her home in 1972. Berta was her first employee. Prior to moving in 1974 to a building on Third Street in Los Angeles, another kitchen employee was hired. The business appears to have prospered on Third Street, more employees were hired, and on March 17, 1979, the operation moved to La Grange Street, where, in addition to Berta, approximately 16 kitchen employees, 2 drivers, and a bookkeeper worked. From sometime in 1975 until December 1977, Korman's mother, Sylvia Lee, also worked at the Third Street location taking orders and selling products at the retail counter which was located in the front of the building. The kitchen, where of course the kitchen employees worked, was located in the rear portion of the building. In or about December 1977, Respondent opened a retail store on Westwood Boulevard in Los Angeles, some distance from the La Grange operation. Lee has worked at that location since its opening. Except for eating lunch sometimes in the kitchen area with the kitchen employees prior to the opening of the Westwood Boulevard retail store, Lee, who speaks fluent Spanish, spent no time in the kitchen production area. Mary Lou Minnillo, no longer employed by Respondent, was the bookkeeper and "sort of office manager" at both the Third Street and La Grange facilities. She occupied a desk in the front office at both locations, where, in addition to doing the bookkeeping, she answered the phone, solicited phone orders from restaurants, typed the orders, and arranged for their delivery. Other than passing through the kitchen to the restroom facilities, Minnillo spent no time in the kitchen. Either she or Korman prepared a list of orders for the following day which was posted on the bulletin board each evening so the kitchen personnel would know what types of desserts were required for the following day. Korman testified that in her absence, which was often and sometimes protracted, Berta had always been in charge of the kitchen and Minnillo in charge of the office. Both Korman and Berta testified that in 1978, while still at the Third Street location, Korman told Berta that she was a supervisor and she was not to wash dishes anymore.

Interest in the Union arose in February or March 1979. Delivery man Mike Garai called the Union and gave Berta's name, address, and phone number to the union representative. Rosen, the Union's secretary-treasurer and business agent, contacted Berta who in turn invited the production employees to a meeting at the union hall on April 13. As Respondent's kitchen employees all speak Spanish, Rosen had another individual present to translate what he had to say into Spanish.[3] Rosen's translator, however, apparently was not too good, and it fell upon Berta, who was fluent in both Spanish and English, to help out in the translations. While there is some dispute as to what Rosen told the employees regarding the purpose of the authorization cards which were passed out, the crucial cards are clear in that they designate, in both English and Spanish, the Union "to act as my exclusive bargaining agent for purposes of collective bargaining." Approximately 2 weeks later, on April 25, Berta handed out a second set of cards to the employees, telling them that they had to sign them because the word "tobacco" had not been included in the Union's name on the first set of cards. While Berta denied that she was present when any of the employees signed the second set of cards, the credited testimony shows that she handed them out in the "closet" or "dressing room" to individual employees and that some signed them in her presence.[4]

On July 3, the Union filed a petition for an election in Case 31-RC-4550. It is undisputed that Korman's first knowledge of organizing efforts was the receipt of a copy of the petition from the Board a couple of days later. After receiving a copy, Korman hired attorneys

[3] Obviously, Rosen does not speak Spanish.

[4] Of the nine second set of cards in evidence, seven, including one signed by Berta, are dated April 25, one April 26, and one April 27.

Ross Arbiter and Paul Gordon of the Los Angeles firm Gordon, Weinberg & Gordon to represent Respondent in the representation case. A hearing on the R case petition was scheduled for July 30. On that date, the Union and Respondent executed a Stipulation for Certification Upon Consent Election, in the following unit:

> All full and part-time hourly production employees employed by the employer at its location [at] 11150 La Grange Avenue, Los Angeles, California, excluded all delivery employees, office clerical employees, guards, and supervisors including Berta Alicia Ujueta.

The Board agent scheduled to conduct the representation hearing recommended approval of the agreement on July 30, the day it was executed by the parties, and the Regional Director approved it on the same day. On August 7, Rosen, who had executed the agreement on behalf of the Union, wrote to the Regional Director as follows:

> Dear Mr. Goubeaux:
> I am questioning the decision made by one of your deputys [sic] Mr. Bryant, regarding the placing of a specific name rather than a position on La Mousse, Inc., case 31-RC-4550.
> In my opinion the placing of the name, Berta Alicia Ujueta, constitutes a violation of the NLRB Act, and I am questioning the legality of Mr. Bryants [sic] action in insisting that, that specific name be deleted.
> Please inform me if I am correct as to this matter.
> Sincerely, James Rosen
> Secretary-Treasurer

A copy of the letter was not sent to Respondent, nor was Respondent aware of the letter until it was produced by the General Counsel during rebuttal herein. The Regional Director's response is not a part of the record.

During August, Korman gave a speech to the kitchen employees, and consultants hired by Respondent's attorneys spoke to various employees. Alleged statements and queries are alleged as violations of Section 8(a)(1) and objectionable election conduct.

About a week prior to the election scheduled for August 31, attorney Arbiter made arrangements with INS to conduct a survey of Respondent's employees for illegal aliens. While Korman appears to have expressed some reservations about followihg this course, nothing was done to impede the forthcoming INS raid. Instead, she called Berta the evening of August 28, told her she had received an anonymous tip that INS would be in the area the following day, and that Berta should call the other employees and tell them not to come to work. While Korman did not know for a fact that a substantial number of the kitchen employees were illegal aliens—and as a consequence they would be deported—she suspected they were. After talking to Korman, Berta went to the union hall and talked to Rosen. Yolanda Martinez and Gloria Lopez were already there. Rosen apparently told them that he did not think INS was going to come, but he thought that someone was coming to check some records and that Korman did not want the employees there so that they could be interviewed. After talking to Rosen, Berta returned home and called those employees she had not yet contacted, telling them both Korman's message and Rosen's reaction.

The following morning, August 29, all but two of the kitchen employees reported for work at 6 a.m., the usual starting time. Maria Zepeda and Lubia Gutierrez were both pregnant and did not report for work that morning. At approximately 7:30 a.m., INS agents arrived and conducted a survey and determined that 10 employees were illegal aliens. All 10 returned voluntarily to their native countries, to Mexico and 1 to Guatemala.[5] At the behest of Respondent's then attorney, all 10 employees taken away by INS agents, and the 2 women that had not reported for work that morning, were terminated. Berta was also terminated under circumstances to be discussed hereafter.

On August 31, Berta and several of the employees that had accepted voluntary deportation on August 29, but that had reentered the country illegally, appeared at Respondent's premises and were permitted to vote in the representation election under challenge. The report on challenges and objections recites that the tally of ballots showed that of approximately 5 eligible voters, 10 cast ballots, of which none were for the petitioning union, 2 were against the Union, and 8 were challenged. Adelina De La Cruz, Raquel Gonzales, and Luis Olivas, all challenged by the Petitioner on the ground they were supervisors, have been determined by the Regional Director to be eligible voters. Ana Veronica Gutierrez, Ana Elsa Reyes Rodriguez, Ofelia Vasquez, Arcelia Rodriguez, and Berta were challenged by the Board agent conducting the election because their names did not appear on the eligibility list prepared by Respondent. All five had been terminated on August 29. My conclusions with respect to their eligibility appears hereafter.

There is no dispute that following Berta's termination, Gloria Lopez was made the kitchen supervisor and that she possessed supervisory authority.

On September 6, the charge in Case 31-CA-9367, and on November 29 the complaint and notice of hearing in that case issued. In December, Respondent offered reinstatement to most of the discharged employees, including Betancourt who was again discharged within a few days. His recall and termination will be discussed later.

Effective January 1, 1980, Respondent, without prior notice to the Union, instituted a health insurance plan for the employees. In December, Respondent changed the length of the morning and afternoon breaks for employees, and on December 29, read to employees, and posted on the bulletin board, Respondent's policies regarding the "disturbing or touching another person's personal property," and the leaving of cooking materials unattended which would subject one to immediate discharge, and the failure to call in within 1 hour of the start of the workday if the employee was going to be late or absent, also subjecting one to immediate discharge. Thereafter, Aida Arauz, Mario Badillo, and Demazo Aguirre were terminated for failure to comply with the call-in policy. The unilateral change in the length of the breaks, the institution of the rules, and the termination of three individuals for violation of the rules, are alleged as violations of Section 8(a)(1). The charge in Case 31-CA-9680 covering those alleged infractions was filed on January 7, 1980, and the consolidated amended complaint covering these and the other alleged discriminatees, issued February 29, 1980.

[5] Refugio Betancourt, Lilia Garcia, Ana Veronica Gutierrez, Rosenda Ramirez, Ana Elsa Reyes Rodriguez, Arcelia Rodriguez, Elizabeth Villanueva and Ofelia Vasquez to Mexico, and Yolanda Martinez to Guatemala.

The allegations in the consolidated complaint are not in chronological order. Insofar as is possible, I have attempted to treat the allegations chronologically.

B. The Question of Berta Ujueta's Supervisory Status

As noted at the outset, the General Counsel's witnesses consistently sought to portray Berta as lacking any authority, claiming that until Gloria Lopez was made supervisor after Berta's August 29 termination, either no one was in charge of or supervised the kitchen employees, or "all of us" were in charge. It is interesting to note, however, that when several of the General Counsel's witnesses were asked if Berta had testified truthfully at a state unemployment compensation hearing that ". . . I used to train people, new people, and check that the work was done right, and I run the place until she [Korman] got there because they open at 6 in the morning, and she [Korman] gets there usually at 9:00 o'clock or so," they admitted she had.[6]

I am persuaded on the totality of the record that Berta functioned as Respondent's kitchen supervisor within the meaning of the statutory definition of Section 2(11) of the Act. Thus, the record shows that while Berta did indeed work alongside the other kitchen employees, she also possessed authority over them. While it is abundantly clear on the record that from time to time Korman told some of the employees that more kitchen help was needed and asked them if they had friends whom they could bring in, the record is equally clear that Berta effectively recommended the hiring of Gloria Lopez, Eva Sanchez, Maria Skelson, Sissy Ujueta (her sister-in-law), Raquel Huerta, and that numerous other friends and relatives brought in by other employees were put to work right away while Berta "run the place" prior to Korman's arrival. Berta was also instrumental in the hiring of her husband, Luis Ujueta. Berta, the most senior of all the employees, was paid $5.50 per hour prior to her discharge, a dollar more than the next two highest paid employees, Ana Elsa Rodriguez and Ofelia Vasquez. The rest of the kitchen employees earned varying amounts from the minimum of $2.90 to $4.50 per hour. While Korman testified she also rewarded Berta with substantial cash Christmas bonuses, $800 in 1978, $500 in 1977, and lesser quantities from 1973 through 1976, bonuses to other employees varied from $10 to $20 for new employees to $200 for Luis Ujueta, Berta's husband. Korman also rewarded Berta with gifts of jewelry costing approximately $300, or triple the cost of gifts given to any of the other employees. She also rewarded Berta with a variety of other gifts. The record shows that Korman relied on Berta's evaluations of employees in either granting or denying raises, and that she terminated employees upon receiving negative reports on employees from Berta. In neither situation did Korman make an independent investigation, instead relying solely on Berta's evaluations. According to Korman, she told Berta as early as 1974 that she was in charge of the kitchen, and in 1978, that she was a supervisor and should not be washing dishes. Berta acknowledged she had been told on two occasions not to wash dishes, and in 1978 that Korman told her she was a supervisor.[7] The record shows that Korman was away on numerous occasions varying from a few days to a month. While the General Counsel's witnesses claim that no one was left in charge of the kitchen on these occasions, the weight of the evidenoe and sound business practice convinces me otherwise. There is no evidence that Minnillo, the bookkeeper, possessed any authority over employees, and Berta testified that Minnillo had no experience in the kitchen. Thus, Berta's subsequent testimony that she took problems brought to her by the kitchen employees to Minnillo is not credited. There is ample testimony that, despite some of the testimony of the General Counsel's witnesses to the contrary, Berta assigned work, oversaw the making of the desserts, inspected the work and required employees to redo defective work, told them what time to come in,[8] and told them when they could have their lunch breaks; that they called her when they were going to be late or miss work; and that she was in charge of the inventory. For a period of time she also either kept or checked the timecards, and on one occasion reported to Korman the fact that an employee had falsified a timecard. Korman terminated an independent cleaning crew at Berta's request. Berta proposed that Korman pay her $120 per week for the cleaning, and that she would in turn pay the kitchen employees for doing it. Accordingly, Korman paid her $120 per week and Berta made up the cleaning lists, rotated employees on the lists, and on occasion asked Korman to type them. Lilia Garcia, one of the General Counsel's witnesses, acknowledged that if something bad happened in the kitchen, they told Berta, and that Berta made decisions such as to throw products away. When Korman was gone and problems arose, they asked Berta, who made the decisions. There was also testimony by Mirеam Gutierrez, which was unrefuted and which I credit, that on an occasion when Berta was on a maternity leave, the kitchen employees called her at home when problems arose. Gutierrez, who voluntarily left Respondent's employ in June 1978, testified credibly that Berta was in charge of the kitchen, directed everyone and told them what to do.[9] Berta was the one to whom they took their problems and who would direct them to redo their work if it was done wrong. In Berta's absence, Ofelia Vasquez or Lilia Garcia would tell them to redo their defective work. Eva Sanchez, an employee and neighbor of Berta's, testified she asked Berta for a job, and was put to work by Berta before Korman arrived. When she wanted to leave early, she notified Berta who responded right away whether or not she could leave. Before she started to work, Berta told Sanchez that she, Berta, was in charge of the kitchen. Sanchez testified that Berta was in charge whether or not Korman was present, and that Korman never told her what to do in the kitchen. It is clear that all employees in the kitchen respected Berta and considered her as their link to management, and that management considered her the boss of the kitchen. In sum, contrary to the General Counsel, I conclude, based on all the evidence, that Berta was a supervisor exercising independent judgment, as defined in section 2(11) of the Act. Accordingly, her inclusion in the bargaining unit would be contrary to Federal Labor policy.

[6] Raquel Gonzales, no longer employed by Respondent, identified Berta as her supervisor, testified everyone knew she was a supervisor and that it was not until "the last days in which they were with the Union" that the employees said she was not a supervisor.

[7] Acknowledging that in July 1979 she was training Eva De La Cruz to be a supervisor, she denied she herself was a supervisor.

[8] The usual reporting time was 6 a.m. However, there were occasions when employees came in at 3, 4, and 5 a.m. Korman's usual reporting time was 9 a.m.

C. The Authorization Cards

Eleven employees signed authorization cards on April 13, Refugio Betancourt, Lilia Garcia, Ana Veronica Gutierrez, Gloria Lopez, Yolanda Martinez, Rosenda Ramirez, Ana Elsa Reyes Rodriguez, Arcelia Rodriguez, Ofelia Vasquez, Elizabeth Villanueva, and Maria Zepeda.[10] The parties stipulated that, in addition to the foregoing, Lubia Gutierrez, Eva Rodriguez, and Eva Sanchez were employed during the period June 28 to July 11, which encompasses the date the representation petition was filed by the Union. Thus, if the April 13 cards were valid, the Union had authorization cards for 11 of 14 unit employees. As noted earlier, Berta was instrumental in establishing initial contact with the Union, in arranging employee meetings with the union representatives, and acted in the role of an interpreter at the April 13 meeting. She also solicited the signatures to a second set of cards from most of the same employees between April 25 and 27. Respondent contends that since Berta was a supervisor, her role in the organizing drive tainted the authorization cards so that the Union never obtained an uncoerced majority in the bargaining unit. The General Counsel contends that even if Berta is a supervisor, her participation in obtaining the cards is insufficient to invalidate them.[11]

The evidence indicates that Berta's union activity in early April when the first set of authorization cards was signed, was limited to informing the kitchen employees of the first union meeting, to expressing her opinion that the Union would be good for the employees, to translating Rosen's remarks from English to Spanish, and to responding to employees' questions regarding the Union and the authorization cards. Her involvement with the late April cards was to pass out the cards to employees and to tell them that the new cards were needed because the name of the Union was not complete on the first set. In this regard, it is noted that the second set of cards was passed out secretly, indicating to employees in any event that Respondent did not favor the union, which it indeed did not. The record is void of any evidence which could have misled the employees into believing that Respondent favored the Union, or that they were induced to designate the Union through fear of supervisory retaliation. The courts and Board have long recognized that mild supervisory involvement in organizational activity is not sufficient to undermine the validity of a union's card majority. Rather, there must be a showing of supervisory participation calculated to exert substantial pressure directly on those who sign. As the Fifth Circuit stated in N.L.R.B. v. WKRG-TV, Inc., 470 F.2d 1302, 1315, 1316 (1973):

> It is actual pressure and coercion we are seeking to avoid by our rule disallowing cards tainted by supervisory influence. A mechanical rule that requires a finding of supervisory solicitation in situations . . . where there is no hint of intimidation, is too broad.
> Before the Board invalidates a card because of prounion supervisory solicitation, there must be some showing that the signing employee was subject to a reasonable apprehension that his failure to sign could have adverse consequences. . . .
> There must be a more substantial exhibition of pressure than a passing remark or statement of prounion conviction. So long as nothing in the words, deeds, or atmosphere of the alleged "solicitation" contains the seeds of potential reprisal, punishment, or intimidation, the involvement of the supervisors does not rise to the levels of supervisory "solicitation" . . . .

[9] Mike Garai, a driver who had been terminated by Respondent in April and who testified on behalf of the General Counsel, testified that Berta was in charge of the kitchen.

[10] The April 13 cards of Ana Elsa Reyes Rodriguez, Refugio Betancourt, and Gloria Lopez contain their printed names rather than their signatures. Each of the three employees testified that they read the cards before filling them out and that each printed his name thereon. I conclude, therefore, that they are valid designations. In any event, all three signed valid cards again on April 25. Elizabeth Villanueva testified that she read the authorization card containing her name, and asked fellow employee Rosenda Ramirez to fill it out for her. As Ramirez was authorized to sign Villanueva's name, her card is valid. Villanueva too, signed a second valid card on April 25.

[11] The unit alleged to be appropriate at par. 7 of the complaint and the unit described in the Stipulation for Certification Upon Consent Election differ in substance only in that, in the latter, Berta was specifically excluded as a supervisor by name. Respondent contends that the complaint should be dismissed on the ground that the Union fraudulently induced it to agree to an election. Rosen agreed, in the Stipulation for Certification Upon Consent Election, that Berta was to be excluded as a supervisor, intending if the Union won the election, to bargain on her behalf. While the Regional Director approved the election agreement, it is well established that neither the General Counsel nor the Board is bound by positions or stipulations taken by parties in a representation case. See, e.g., Southern Paint & Waterproofing Co., Inc., 230 NLRB 429, 436 (1977). The Board recognizes the fact that parties are sometimes willing to forego the presence of a given employee in the unit or his vote in a tally in order to hold a speedy election. Such action does not, however, preclude relitigation of the issue in a subsequent 8(a)(1) or (3) unfair labor practice proceeding. Southern Paint, supra; Farms Fans, Inc., 174 NLRB 723 (1969); Stanley Air Tools, 171 NLRB 388 (1968). Accordingly, no merit is found in Respondent's position.

Thus, the courts have rejected employer challenges to cards based on minor supervisory participation in union activities such as supervisor's signing cards, attending union meetings, transporting employees to meetings and answering questions about the union. N.L.R.B. v. Jerome T. Kane, d/b/a Kane Bag Supply Co., 435 F.2d 1203, 1207 (4th Cir. 1970); Clay City Beverages, Inc., 176 NLRB 680, 682 (1969), enfd. 434 F.2d 1315 (6th Cir. 1970); N.L.R.B. v. Ozark Motor Lines, 403 F.2d 356, 358–359 (8th Cir. 1968); International Union, UAW v. N.L.R.B., 363 F.2d 702, 707 (D.C. Cir. 1966), cert. denied 385 U.S. 973. Compare: N.L.R.B. v. Hecks, Inc., 386 F.2d 317, 322–323 (4th Cir. 1967), and Turner's Express, Incorporated v. N.L.R.B., 456 F.2d 289, 292–293 (4th Cir. 1972). On the basis of the foregoing facts and authorities, contrary to the position of Respondent, I find that the authorization cards are not invalid and that the Union represented a majority of Respondent's employees, 11 out of 14, from and after April 13, and on June 28 as alleged in the complaint.

D. Alleged Acts of Interference, Coercion, and Restraint

Paragraph 16 of the consolidated complaint alleges that in the latter part of July, Korman advised employees of the futility of selecting the Union by telling them she would never accept the Union and that if they engaged in a strike they would lose their jobs. The basis for this allegation is a speech that Korman read to employees in English which was translated into Spanish by Lucien Cadji, a friend. Korman, whom I credit, testified that the speech had been dictated by her attorney, and that she made no statements not contained therein. The speech, Respondent's Exhibit 1, reads:

> A. The Union submitted a Petition to a government agency called the N.L.R.B. In that Petition 30% of the employees here said they wanted to have an election—not a Union. Therefore, I have cooperated and there is going to be an election where everyone in the kitchen except Berta can vote. The voting will take place on Friday, August 31st at 11:00 a.m. at our shop.
> B. What you will be voting for is whether or not you want to be represented by the Union. Even if you signed cards, you do not have to vote in favor of the Union. A "yes" vote means you want the Union to represent you. A "no" vote means that you do not need someone else to represent you.
> C. "Representing" means the Union will negotiate on your behalf regarding your working conditions, but it does not necessarily mean there will be any changes. The only changes will be those I want to make regardless of the Union and what it wants.
> D. I do not think it is good for all of us to have the Union here. I am not for the Union because it will divide us. The Union will only take your money (in monthly dues, initiation fees, and fines) and there are no guarantees that the Union will get you anything.
> E. I have always kept an open door to all of you. I have always tried to help you resolve problems and I have given you as much as I could. The Union would be an outsider—a third party—who would only interfere with the working relationship we all have. The Union does not care about how comfortable you girls and men are here. What the Union does care about is getting its money. I work with you on an everyday basis, and the Union won't always be around when you need them.
> F. The law does not allow me to make any promises to you about the future. The law does not allow me to tell you my plans for the future. I cannot make any promises.
> However, the Union can make all the promises it wants—this is because the Union cannot make good any of its promises and, unfortunately, the law expects all of you to understand and realize this. I am not allowed to promise you anything, but my past experience with you have always shown concern for you and your families' well-being.
> If you still believe in the promises that the Union has made, ask the Union to guarantee those promises in writing. The Union won't be able to do this because it knows that their promises can't be kept.
> G. Before you girls and men make up your minds as to whether or not you want the Union, you should understand the problems. Let me list a few for you.
> 1. Initiation fees to join the Union.
> 2. Monthly dues.
> 3. Fines for not attending meetings.
> 4. A strike.
> H. A Strike means you will not be working for the Company. Under some circumstances, the Company may be able to permanently replace you, which means you will not have a job here anymore. Under other circumstances, the Company will take you back, but you won't be paid for all the time you are on strike. The Union can tell you to go on strike. That will seriously disrupt your family life. The Company will continue to operate and the Company will have workers replace you if you go out on strike.
> I. These are a few of the things I thought you should think about and know. I will be sending you letters for the next few weeks further explaining my thoughts and beliefs.
> J. Please discuss the Union and your vote with your family. Your family should also understand the consequences and responsibilities of voting for the Union.
> K. I strongly believe that you do not need the Union and that your future is here with me. You do not need to pay someone else to talk to me.
> L. Vote No—Vote against the Union—Keep us together.
> M. If you have any questions, I will be glad to answer them. However, I will answer them in a letter so that my answers are not misunderstood.

> N. Please understand—I cannot go to your homes like the Union can, but I will keep you advised by meetings and letters.
> Please vote for me.
> Vote against the Union.
> Vote No.

Korman testified that she told Cadji, who speaks seven languages, to translate exactly as written "because that is the law," and that she was not allowed to say anything else. In light of testimony by several of General Counsel's witnesses that additional statements were made, the question is raised whether Cadji made statements not contained in the written text. Cadji was not a witness. Minnillo, who is not bilingual, testified that both Korman and Cadji read from the paper each had. Lilia Garcia, acknowledging on cross-examination that Korman read from the paper, testified on direct examination as follows:

> Well, Nadine spoke and the other person interpreted in Spanish. It was said there about the election, it was going to be the 31 of August, of the union, that the votes were going to be taken the 31st of August at 11:00 o'clock in the morning. That she did not want the union. As a favor she was asking us to vote no for the union, because said union was not good, that it made a lot of promises but did not accomplish them, and until that day we were working well as a family, that if the union would come in it would not be the same, because the union was going to intervene in our persons, and she as a favor was asking us to vote no for the union, because under no motive was she going to accept the union.

Ofelia Vasquez' version was that Korman "said that she was never going to accept the Union, even though we went on strike, that years and years could go by and she was not going to accept it." Further, "Nadine's friend [Cadji] asked if there was someone who had been in a union, and Eva De La Cruz answered and said she had been.[12] She said that unions were not good. They are only good for taking money."

Asked to recite everything that was said at the meeting, Arcelia Rodriguez testified:

> Well, I do not remember what she said, but I do have in mind that Nadine told her friend to tell us that she was not going to accept the Union . . . .[13] She also said that maybe we would not go to strike, but she would not pay us the time that we would lose there, and various things, but I do not remember what.

Berta, fluent in both Spanish and English, was present at the meeting, and testified that:

> Nadine was speaking in English, and this man was translating to Spanish. Nadine said that she wanted for us not to vote for the Union because she didn't want anybody to be—to come in between us. She says we are like a family and she wanted to keep being that way, and she also said that she wouldn't—she couldn't offer us anything, but if we didn't call the Union she could do something for us, but it wasn't a promise, and that is all I remember right now.

After reading over a copy of the speech, Respondent's Exhibit 1, Berta acknowledged that it sounded like what had been said. Thus, Berta failed to corroborate the other witnesses for the General Counsel, and corroborates Korman. In light of Berta's testimony, an adverse inference based on the Respondent's failure to call Cadji as a witness is not warranted. As I credit the testimony of Korman and Berta over that of Lilia Garcia, Ofelia Vasquez, and Arcelia Rodriguez, I conclude that the General Counsel has failed to prove paragraph 16 by a preponderance of the evidence and recommend its dismissal.

Paragraph 17 of the complaint alleges that on or about August 25, Fierro interrogated an employee about her union activities, desires, and sympathies. Berta testified she overheard Fierro, who was speaking to Gloria Lopez and Eva De La Cruz, ask Lopez, "How come we wanted the Union there." Lopez, who appeared as a witness for both the General Counsel and Respondent, neither confirmed nor denied the conversation, and neither De La Cruz nor Fierro testified.

Paragraphs 18(a), (b), and (c) allege that in mid-August Daniel Ramirez and Carmen Fierro, Respondent's agents, unlawfully interrogated employees, solicited their grievances, and promised to grant them benefits in order to discourage support for the Union. While Respondent denied the agency of Fierro and Ramirez, Korman acknowledged that her attorneys at that time had hired the labor consulting firm of Borowski and Brushett, and that she had made Respondent's premises and employees available to Fierro and Ramirez, who were employed by that firm. As they were acting on Respondent's behalf in the union organizing campaign, I find they were Respondent's agents within the meaning of Section 2(13) of the Act. As neither Fierro nor Ramirez testified, the record stands unrefuted that one or the other asked various employees why they wanted the Union, if they had any problems at work; "what it was that we were asking for to ask for the union"; encouraged them to speak directly with Korman in order to obtain the things they wanted, and inferred they (Ramirez and Fierro) would seek raises for employees; asked if it was true they wanted the union, and why they were not happy.[14] The General Counsel has proven paragraphs 17, 18(a), (b) and (c).

Paragraphs 18(e), (f), and (g) appear to be based on a conversation between Berta and Ramirez, and allege unlawful interrogation, a promise to grant benefits in order to discourage union support, and a threat of unspecified reprisals if she engaged in activities in support of a union. Berta testified, without contradiction, that Ramirez spoke to her alone; "he said because I was a supervisor," a fact she denied, and asked her if she knew anything about the Union, which she also denied; that he asked why she was unhappy, and after learning why, told her that one of the things about which she complained was going to be fixed. She testified he stated further that if the employees were caught in a union meeting, "that we would be in trouble." Such statements made to an employee would be unlawful. However, as I have found that Berta is a supervisor within the meaning of Section 2(11) of the Act, she cannot be considered a statutory employee legally protected with respect to her exercise of rights which Section 7 of the Act guarantees. Accordingly, I recommend dismissal of paragraphs 18(e), (f), and (g).

[13] Korman neither speaks Spanish, nor does the witness speak or understand English. Accordingly, I do not credit her statement that "Nadine told her friend to tell us that she was not going to accept the Union."

[14] Based on the unrefuted testimony of Berta, Lilia Garcia, Yolanda Martinez, Ofelia Vasquez, and Ana Veronica Gutierrez.

Paragraphs 19(a), (b), and (c) are based upon a conversation between Berta, Ramirez, and Korman, and allege a promise to grant benefits to discourage support for the Union, a request that Berta report on other employees' union sympathies and desires, and advising Berta of the futility of selecting the Union by saying that Respondent would never have a union.

According to Berta, during a conversation with Ramirez and Korman that lasted about 45 minutes, Korman made the following statements:

> She said, I don't want the union to come in here, and she says, you can help me because you are a supervisor. . . . So she says, what do you want? She says, I give you one week vacation in October, and I will renew your wages in January, and you will have two weeks vacation anytime you want next year . . . Before I left she says that she didn't want the union in there, and she was going to fight even if it took her 20 years, to fight it . . . She says to ask the girls to vote no for the union, and I said I will try, but they probably wouldn't listen to me . . . And she says, try it anyway, and I left, and about 5 minutes later she called me into the kitchen and told me to talk to the girls and give her an answer by 3 o'clook that afternoon.

Korman testified that she told Berta, "I need your help. There is a campaign to organize the union. You are my supervisor. I want your help"; that Berta responded, "What is a union?"; that she went on to state, "Berta, what is it you want? Do you want more vacation? Do you want more bonus? . . . What is it you want, because I want your help and you're not helping me. . . . Do you want 4 weeks in Guatemala?" She testified: "Because Berta was stipulated my supervisor [in the Stipulation for Certification Upon Consent Election] and because I was told I could talk to her as administrative, I said Berta, I don't want a union." She denied she asked Berta to ask the employees to vote against the Union, contending she was "asking for help" without specifying the nature. Korman impressed me as the more reliable witness and I therefore credit her version over that of Berta. It is specifically found that Korman did not ask Berta to report on other employees' union sympathies and desires as alleged in paragraph 19(b), and I do not credit Berta's testimony that Korman said she would fight the Union if it took 20 years. While Korman's testimony may be susceptible to a finding that she was promising a benefit to Berta in order to enlist her aid in resisting the Union, such conduct would not be unlawful here since it has been found that Berta is a surpervisor within the meaning of Section 2(11) of the Act. I therefore recommend dismissal of paragraphs 19(a), (b), and (c).

Paragraph 13 alleges that, on or about August 25, Respondent granted its employeee a morning and afternoon break in order to discourage support for the Union. It is undisputed that prior to the advent of the Union, Respondent's employees were not authorized to take morning and afternoon breaks.[15] A few days before the election, Korman told Berta to instruct the kitchen employees to take a 10-minute break each morning and afternoon.[16] In the absence of evidence demonstrating that the announcement of the granting of the breaks was governed by factors other than the pending of the election, the Board will regard interference with employee freedom of choice as the motivating factor. See, e.g., The Baltimore Catering Company, 148 NLRB 970, 973 (1964). Respondent has failed to show the announcement was governed by factors other than the pending election. Accordingly, I find that the timing of the announcement was calculated to discourage support for the Union in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and interfered with the election.

E. The Immigration Raid

Respondent admits that its former attorney, Arbiter, made arrangements for INS to conduct a survey of Respondent's employees, and that the raid occurred on August 29, 2 days before the scheduled representation election.[17] The evidence establishes that while Korman did not know, she suspected that most of her employees were illegal aliens and would therefore be deported by INS. As noted earlier, Korman apparently had second thoughts about the pending INS survey and, on August 28, told Berta that she had received an anonymous call that INS would be in the area the following day, and that Berta should call the other employees and tell them not to come to work. Berta, Gloria Lopez, and Yolanda Martinez all went to the union hall that evening, and Rosen expressed the opinion that the INS would not conduct a survey, but that representatives of another government agency were coming to check records. Thereafter, Berta called the employees she had not already contacted, and told them of Korman's message and Rosen's reaction to it. On the following morning, August 29, all but two of the kitchen employees reported for work, the INS conducted a raid, or survey, about 7:30

[15] There is evidence, however, that they took an unauthorized break in the mornings but that Korman was not aware of the fact.

[17] It is clear that Arbiter was acting as Respondent's agent and that the idea of requesting an INS raid originated with him.

a.m., and the 10 illegal aliens in the group were voluntarily deported.

Respondent contends that the INS raid, resulting in the deportation of the 10 illegal aliens, should not be the basis of a bargaining order since Korman had expressly directed the employees not to report for work on the day of the raid; that the complicity of the Union and the employees insured the success of the raid; consequently, to impose a bargaining order in these circumstances would enable the Union and the employees to benefit by their own wrongdoing. Even if Respondent's role in the INS raid is found to have violated Section 8(a)(3), it is argued, the policies and purposes of the Act have been effectuated by the reinstatement of the employees in December, and further relief in the form of backpay should be denied.

I find no merit in Respondent's argument. Minnillo testified, without contradiction, that Arbiter told her to terminate the 10 illegal aliens picked up and deported by INS, and also Lubia Gutierrez and Maria Zepeda, neither of whom had reported for work the morning of the raid. Thus, those illegal aliens who reported for work were doomed, at Arbiter's direction, to be terminated for having reported for work, and those employees who heeded Korman's instruction not to report for work were ordered by Arbiter to be dealt with in the same manner. It is clear from the record that the termination of all 12 employees was motivated by their collective engagement in union and/or protected concerted activities, which resulted in the filing of the representation petition, and Respondent's desire to affect the results of the Board election scheduled for August 31. In light of Minnillo's testimony, I reject Respondent's contention that Lubia Gutierrez and Maria Zepeda were terminated for not reporting for work. I find they were terminated because Respondent believed all the Mexican nationals had engaged in organizing the Union and were responsible for the filing of the petition. Accordingly, I find that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) of the Act by constructively discharging and by discharging Lilia Garcia, Ana Veronica Gutierrez, Yolanda Martinez, Rosenda Ramirez, Ana Elsa Reyes Rodriguez, Arcelia Rodriguez, Ofelia Vasquez, Elizabeth Villanueva, Eva Rodriguez, Refugio Betancourt, Lubia Gutierrez, and Maria Zepeda because of their engagement in union and/or protected concerted activity as alleged in paragraphs 10 and 11 of the consolidated complaint, and in order to interfere with and affect the results of the August 31 Board election.

F. Berta's Termination

Paragraph 12 of the consolidated complaint alleges Berta was unlawfully discharged on August 29, the day of the INS raid. The General Counsel contends that Berta was terminated because Korman suspected she supported the Union. Respondent claims she was terminated because of threats she made against Korman on the day of the raid.

The record shows that when the INS agents raided Respondent's premises on August 29, Berta was taken outside the premises along with the other employees, but was released after she produced evidence that satisfied the INS agents that her status did not call for deportation. There is a bit of confusion on the part of both Korman and Berta regarding the sequence of events following Berta's return to the kitchen. I conclude on the basis of the testimony of Gloria Lopez, Minnillo, Raquel Gonzalez, and Eva Sanchez, all of whom were present and testified to events and statements made after Berta returned to the kitchen, in addition to the testimony of Korman and Berta, that events occurred substantially as set forth hereafter. After the others had been taken outside by the INS agents and it was apparent they were going to be taken away by the INS, they gave Berta and Gloria Lopez the keys to their cars.[18] Berta and Gloria returned to the plant where the two proceeded to call the relatives of those in INS custody, Berta using the phone in the office and Gloria the public phone in the kitchen. After completing the calls, Berta and Gloria, apparently with Korman's permission, left the plant and were observed by Minnillo getting into a Mercedes-Benz with Rosen. While Minnillo did not know who Rosen was, she speculated he was connected with the Union and at some point told Korman. Gloria and Berta told Rosen what happened. Rosen drove to a location several blocks away where he used a telephone. The two women apparently became tired of waiting for Rosen and proceeded to walk back to the plant where several of the employees who had not been taken away by INS were working. According to Gloria Lopez, when they entered the plant to go to work, Berta became irritated, got "very mad" and yelled insulting remarks to Korman and the others in English and Spanish. Korman's testimony was as follows:

> Berta yelled "I will get you. I will follow you. We will never let you forget this." And she did it in a screaming, yelling manner with a raised hand. She used both the terms 'I' and 'we'. I didn't know if she was referring to her husband Louis Ujueta or to gangs or to what, and I didn't ask. She was screaming so loud, at the top of her lungs. . . . She yelled at me for a period of 4 minutes, and then turned around and yelled at the employees, and then yelled at one employee in particular, in a very heated debate, screaming.

Respondent contends the above conduct led to her discharge which was for cause.

Raquel Gonzalez, who understands but speaks little English, is no longer employed by Respondent. She testified that Berta told Korman, "I hate you" and "you are going to regret this that you did." Later, Berta loudly stated in Spanish to the employees that, "whoever it was [that called INS] is going to regret it. . . . Curse the person who did it." Berta admitted she was angry and raised her voice and had angry words with Korman in front of the other employees. While she testified that Gloria Lopez, Eva Sanchez, Korman, Raquel Gonzalez, Eva De La Cruz, and Louis Olivas were present during the conversation, her version lacks corroboration and is not credited. Her initial version was that after returning to the kitchen she said, "Does everybody feel go[od] about it, and Nadine said to me, don't threaten me, just leave. And I left, and I went to make some phone calls and Gloria Lopez left with me." That version was followed by "I told her that she knew about it—if she—that she had called Immigration, and that if she didn't, that she knew about it, and she did that because of the Union and all, but that it wouldn't help her because we would be back to vote on Friday. . . ." Korman's response, according to Berta, was "not to threaten her, and just to leave."[19] Even if some significance is attached to the fact that Berta was observed getting into Rosen's car shortly prior to her discharge, Gloria Lopez was observed getting into the car too. Berta's role as the principal union protagonist was not known to Respondent at this time. Why, then, was Berta terminated and Gloria Lopez not? The answer lies in Berta's conduct upon her return to the plant—the threats she made towards Korman.

[18] During the raid, Gloria had become emotionally upset, cried and threw a pastry bag to the floor. Korman tried to console her.

Upon the foregoing evidence, I find that Berta's termination was not in violation of Section 8(a)(3) or (1) for the reasons that she was a supervisor within the meaning of Section 2(11), and that her termination was for cause. Accordingly, I recommend dismissal of paragraph 12 of the consolidated complaint.

G. Betancourt's Reinstatement and Subsequent Discharge

Paragraph 14(a) alleges that, on or about December 21, Betancourt was recalled to a position different from his former position of employment, and paragraph 14(b) alleges he was discharged on or about January 2, 1980, and Respondent has since failed and refused to reinstate him to his former position of employment. The General Counsel contends that prior to August 29, Betancourt spent half of each day making (measuring and whipping) creams and the rest of each day doing a variety of other tasks. She contends that when he returned in December, he was not assigned to do the creammaking since another employee made creams, and instead spent all of his time on a variety of other tasks. When, on his last day, he was assigned to creammaking, he worked only half a day before he was fired, allegedly for making more cream than was needed. The General Counsel contends that Betancourt was initially given jobs which required him to use different skills and was not adequately informed of the changes in Respondent's rules about excess cream when he was finally assigned to creammaking. Therefore, his reinstatement was not proper, and Respondent's liability to him did not terminate when he returned to work in December. Respondent contends that when Betancourt returned to work in December, he performed substantially the same duties he had performed before; that he was slow and not a good employee, a fact known to everyone but Korman, who first observed his work after the December reinstatement; that Respondent's motive in terminating him again was not bad, but that he was in fact terminated for slowness and incompetence.

There is no contention that Betancourt was reinstated at a lower rate of pay or that he had no training or experience in doing the tasks he performed upon reinstatement at the end of December. To the contrary, it appears he resumed doing much the same as he had done before. In fact, there seems to have been no specific job which was performed by any particular employee in the kitchen. All of the employees appear to have been capable of performing, and did perform, all of the kitchen tasks, including creammaking. While some testimony indicates that Betancourt's "principal job" prior to the August 29 termination was creammaking, the record makes it clear he also did other jobs in the kitchen, including grinding cookies, breaking and separating eggs, melting chocolate, washing and drying molds, pots, and dishes, helping bring in merchandise, helping clean up the kitchen, throwing out the trash, and otherwise helping the kitchen employees. The record is also clear that Betancourt did not make the cream all of the time. Berta testified that "it was my week to go in early to whip the cream" the week of August 29. Gloria Lopez, whom I credit, testified that Betancourt was not too good a worker, that he would get behind in the work, and that the other employees would have to help him measure and beat the creams because he was so slow. Miream Gutierrez, no longer employed by Respondent, testified that she had overheard Berta tell some of the other kitchen employees that Betancourt was "very slow" and "very dumb." Korman testified that the first she realized Betancourt was such a slow worker was when he returned in December, and she asked Gloria Lopez to put him on the cream machine.[20] Lopez declined to do so because he was too slow.[21] Korman testified that she later asked Eva Sanchez, Lopez' assistant, to put him on the cream machine and that Sanchez also responded that he was too slow. She testified that on the basis of her December observation, she found Betancourt to be one of the slowest working employees she had ever seen, regardless of age or sex, and that during the 3 days she observed him, she asked him a number of times if he felt alright. She testified she made suggestions for speeding up his dishwashing and drying and how to perform other tasks more efficiently, and on December 28 commenced making notes about his work. On December 28, the grinding machine broke while he was operating it. On December 29, she "spoke to him repeatedly about his slowness." On December 31, she informed him that his work was unsatisfactory, that he was too slow "on dishes, on both washing and drying, too slow on crumbs and putting on labels. I said that in one week I would speak to him again and, if no significant improvement, I would have to fire him." On January 2, she made another note regarding several work deficiencies, and terminated him because his work was "totally incompetent." Betancourt acknowledged that on January 2 he had been assigned to do the creams and that he had made an extra batch for decorating and an extra batch for filling. He informed Sanchez, who was in charge of the kitchen in Lopez' absence, and was later called to the office by Korman and terminated. It is apparent from the record that making creams requires no special skill, that everyone in the kitchen did it, including Berta, who testified she did it the final week in August. It is also clear from the record that Betancourt was a personal friend of the Ujuetas, lived in the same building, and that they were instrumental in his employment. It is also apparent that Betancourt was a slow and inefficient employee and that it was undoubtedly through his friendship with the Ujuetas and the fact Berta was the supervisor in the kitchen, that he was able to retain his job as long as he did. In sum, I find no merit to the contention of the General Counsel that he was not reemployed or recalled to his former position of employment, which was as a helper in the kitchen, or that he was unlawfully discharged on January 2, 1980. I conclude on the basis of the foregoing evidence, that he was terminated on the latter date because he was not a satisfactory employee, and that but for his friendship with the Ujuetas, he would have been terminated earlier. Accordingly, I recommend dismissal of paragraph 14.

[19] While Berta and Louis Ujueta denied her statements, Eva Sanchez testified to other threats against Respondent's premises and Korman's car, made that evening.

[20] The evidence convinces me that Korman spent very little time in the kitchen prior to August 29.

[21] Lopez was the kitchen supervisor the first day Betancourt returned in December; however, she was away after that because of sickness, during which time Eva Sanchez was in charge of the kitchen workers.

H. Alleged Unilateral Changes and Discharges of Arauz, Badillo, and Aguirre

Paragraph 20 of the consolidated complaint alleges several unilateral changes made by Respondent:

(a) Alleges that in November, Respondent changed the length of the morning and afternoon breaks from 10 to 15 minutes each.

(b) Alleges that in the latter part of December, Respondent arranged for Blue Cross medical insurance effective January 1, 1980.

(c) Alleges the institution of the following workrules: (1) Any employee burning chocolate would be fired; (2) failure to notify Respondent 1 hour before starting time that an employee would be absent would result in termination; and (3) employees were not to leave money in the dressing room.

The General Counsel seeks a bargaining order and argues that if one is warranted, the above changes were unilateral and in violation of Respondent's bargaining obligation. It is also contended that the discharges of Arauz, Aguirre, and Badillo were unlawful since the terminations were for violating the unilaterally established rule calling for discharge for failure to notify Respondent of an absence 1 hour before starting time. Contending there were additional reasons for the terminations of Arauz and Badillo, Respondent admits that failing to call in or report for work played a role in the termination of all three employees. Respondent points out that none of the three had any contact or relationship to activity surrounding the union organizing campaign, nor did they testify at the hearing. It is argued that the record is replete with testimony concerning employees calling Berta if they were going to be late or unable to work, thus there was a practice of calling in, and it is common sense that an employee inform an employer if he is going to be late or not work at all. It is argued that "employees are not free to choose the hours or days they will work and cavalierly disregard their responsibilities and obligations not only to the employer, but to fellow employees who, without notice, are obligated to assume the work which otherwise is left undone. . . ." Respondent argues that as long as the motivation is not unlawful, the discharges cannot be unlawful and, in any event, reinstatement is not appropriate and does not effectuate the policies of the Act.

In N.L.R.B. v. Gissel Packing Co., Inc., 395 U.S. 575 (1969), the Court upheld the Board's bargaining order remedy where the only unfair labor practice shown was the threat of plant closure. Here, the Respondent retaliated against the protected concerted activity of its employees by discharging 12 employees out of a unit of 17 employees, 10 of whom had signed valid authorization cards.[22] Thus, it is seen that 59 percent of the employees in the unit were unlawfully discharged. In Ludwig Fish & Produce, Inc., 220 NLRB 1086, 1087 (1975), the Board noted:

> The pervasive effect of such egregious violations cannot be gainsaid. For whether the unit is large or small the discriminatory discharge of 40 percent of the bargaining unit employees demonstrates most convincingly that the Respondent has resorted to its ultimate weapon in thwarting the employees' exercise of protected statutory rights.

The nature and pervasiveness of Respondent's unfair labor practices, as described above, have made the holding of a fair election impossible, and therefore, since the Union represented a majority of Respondent's employees on and after April 13, a bargaining order is necessary to remedy Respondent's unfair labor practices. As Respondent embarked on a clear course of unlawful conduct on or about August 22, when it requested that INS conduct a raid, I conclude that a bargaining order effective that date will reestablish the conditions as they existed before Respondent embarked on an unlawful course and placed the Union in a disadvantaged position. Gissel Packing Co., Inc., supra; Beasley Energy, Inc., d/b/a Peaker Run Coal Company, 228 NLRB 93 (1977); Ludwig Fish and Produce, Inc., supra; Trading Port, Inc., 219 NLRB 298 (1975).

With respect to the change in the length of the morning and afternoon breaks from 10 to 15 minutes each, Respondent admits that the Union was not notified, and Korman testified that the reason for making the change was because the employees were completing their work on time. Not every unilateral change in work rules constitutes a breach of the bargaining obligation. In Peerless Food Products, Inc., 236 NLRB 161 (1978), the Board stated: "The change unilaterally imposed must, initially, amount to 'a material, substantial, and a significant' one." I conclude and find that the change here was not material, substantial, or significant, and therefore recommend dismissal of paragraph 20(a).

[22] The unit employees on August 29, the date of the mass discharges, were Betancourt, Lilia Garcia, Ana Veronica Gutierrez, Gloria Lopez, Yolanda Martinez, Rosenda Ramirez, Ana Elsa Reyes Rodriguez, Arcelia Rodriguez, Ofelia Vasquez, Elizabeth Villanueva, Maria Zepeda, all of whom had signed valid authorization cards, Lubia Gutierrez, Eva Rodriguez, Eva Sanchez, Louis Olivas, Adeline De La Cruz, Raquel Gonzalez, the last three having been found by the Regional Director to have been eligible voters on August 31.

The record shows that in 1978, Korman offered all employees a group health insurance plan which the kitchen employees turned down because it did not include maternity benefits. In October, Korman reconsidered the idea and on January 1, 1980, a Blue Cross group plan was put into effect. Admittedly, there was no prior notice to the Union. The implementation of hospitalization or health insurance benefits, clearly mandatory subjects of bargaining, cannot lawfully be granted without first giving the Union an opportunity to bargain. I conclude, therefore, that Respondent violated its statutory duty to bargain with the Union over the implementation of the plan as alleged in paragraph 20(b).

On December 29, Korman had read to employees and posted on the bulletin board the following notices directed to all employees:

> To: All Employees
> On Decemer 28, 1979, three pots of chocolate were left unattended on the stove. The chocolate and all three pots was burned and had to be thrown out. Also on December 28, 1979, two large industrial brooms were broken beyond repair. Therefore, this is to notify all employees that any employee found leaving cooking materials unattended, including material in the Hobart mixers, will be subject to immediate discharge.
> If, for any reason, an employee is unable to come to work, he or she is to call in within one hour from the start of the work day. If, for any reason, an employee is going to be late work, he or she is to call in within one hour from the start of the work day. Failure to comply will subject the employee to immediate discharge.
> On December 29, 1979, this letter was read both in English and in Spanish to all employees present. Further, this notice was posted in English and in Spanish in our bulletin room on December 29, 1979. Those employees not present on December 29, 1979, will be read this letter in English and in Spanish upon their return.
> To: All Employees
> At 6:00 A.M. on December 29, 1979, an employee reported to me the loss of money from her purse, which was located in the dressing room on Debember 28, 1979.
> This letter is to notify all employees that at no time are they to leave anything of value in their purses or in the dressing room. All money, jewelry, credit cards, and any other valuable property are to be kept on their person at all times.
> Any employee found disturbing or touching another person's personal property will be immediately discharged.
> On December 29, 1979, this letter was read both in English and in Spanish to all employees present. Further, this notice was posted in English and in Spanish in our bulletin room on December 29, 1979. Those employees not present on December 29, 1979, will be read this letter in English and in Spanish upon their return.

The General Counsel contends that since the written rules are stricter than the prior practice, their institution without consulting with the Union constitutes an unlawful unilateral change. Respondent contends that the rules merely reduce to writing the Employer's past practice.

While there was no written rule prior to the issuance of the December 29 memo to the effect that anyone found leaving cooking materials unattended would be subject to discharge, Lilia Garcia testified that there was a verbal rule "to take care of the chocolate, make sure it did not burn." The record further shows that burnt chocolate was reported to Berta, and that it had to be thrown away. There is no evidence that anyone has ever been discharged for burning chocolate or leaving cooking materials unattended. Korman testified that the reason for the posting of the rule was that on December 28 three pots of chocolate had been left unattended and as a consequence burned at one time, which had never happened before, and two large industrial brooms had been broken beyond repair. No brooms had ever been broken before.

With respect to the memo advising employees they were subject to discharge for failure to call in within an hour from the start of the workday if the employee was going to be absent or late, it is abundantly clear, and Berta so testified, that employees were aware they were to call in, and that "they always did." Korman testified "they always would call in within an hour, or a half hour. They just did. Or so Berta told me. Berta received the phone calls." The record shows that employees had in fact been terminated for failure to call in.

The purpose for the December 29 notice which the complaint characterizes as a rule that "employees were not to leave money in the dressing room," is spelled out in the first paragraph; i.e., money had been stolen from an employee's purse which had been left in the dressing room. Korman testified that there had in fact been two thefts, one on December 28 and one on December 29, Eva Sanchez had lost $170 cash and Esperanza Tirado had lost $40 cash. The record shows prior theft of money, and that in one instance the suspected employee quit her employment right away. The General Counsel's distinction between the prior practice and the notice in the memo is, "the written rule stated that anyone touching or disturbing another's property would be terminated whereas prior practice was that anyone found stealing would be immediately terminated."

I conclude and find that Respondent has demonstrated justifying circumstances for issuing the December 29 notices. There is no indication that they were discriminatorily motivated as retaliation against the employees for any protected activities, nor that they in any way undercut the Union's representative status. Absent discrimination, an employer is free to choose more efficient and dependable methods for enforcing its workplace rules. Bureau of National Affairs, Inc., 235 NLRB 8 (1978). Moreover, the publication of the rules does not represent a "material, substantial, and significant change" constituting a breach of the bargaining obligation. Peerless Food Products, Inc., supra.

Having found that the publication of the December 29 memorandum informing employees that they were subject to discharge for failure to call in within an hour from the start of the workday if they were going to be late or absent, did not constitute an unlawful unilateral change, it follows that the discharges of Arauz, Aguirre, and Badillo for that reason did not violate Section 8(a)(1) of he Act as contended by the General Counsel. The circumstances surrounding their terminations, however, are discussed herein.

Badillo, who also used the name Mario Garcia, Aguirre, nor Arauz testified. Thus, Korman's testimony regarding their discharges is not refuted. The record shows that Badillo was a slow worker, a fact discussed with him on several occasions. On December 28, he received his "third and final warning before termination," because he was so slow. On December 29 Badillo called in that he would not be in that day because of car trouble on the freeway but that he would be in Monday, December 31. He failed to either show up or call on December 31.[23] After missing approximately 5 days of work, Badillo appeared one morning at 11 o'clock Korman testified she thought he had quit. She asked the reason he had not appeared and he informed her that he had been "in jail and something about a car crash." She terminated him for failure to call in. On April 1, 1980, the California Employment Development Department issued a decision finding:

> You were discharged for absence from work. You were unable to report to work because you were incarcerated; however, you did not notify your employer of your situation, although you could have done so. Therefore, it must be held that you[r] discharge was for actions detrimental to the employer's interest.

Korman characterized Aguirre as an "excellent worker." The record shows that on December 28 Aguirre overslept and failed to call in or show up until 2:30 p.m. when he came in to pick up his check. On December 29, he again overslept and did not come in until 10 a.m. Korman accepted as an excuse for failing to call in the fact that Gloria Lopez had given Aguirre the wrong telephone number to call. On Monday, December 31, Aguirre again failed to call or show up for work. After he failed to call in or report for work on January 2, Korman terminated him.

Korman testified that Arauz was a slow worker and a slow learner. Notes placed in her employee file show that on October 18, her slow performance was discussed with her; that on December 3, she had shown improvement, but "she seems to be a slow learner"; that she was absent on December 19; that on December 27, she did not have a hair net;[24] that on December 26 she received three personal telephone calls, and on December 27 one personal call, all received, according to Korman, during working hours which meant a loss of time for two individuals, Gloria Lopez, who went to answer the phone, and the time Arauz spent in talking. Near the end of December, Arauz asked for a day off, which was granted. The following day she neither called in nor showed up for work. The next day, when she came in to work she reported as the reason for not calling in the previous day that she had run out of gas the day before. She was asked and acknowledged that she knew about the requirement that employees call in when they were going to be late or absent from work. She was then terminated.

Contrary to the General Counsel, I find all three employees were terminated for cause and recommend dismissal of paragraph 21.

V. THE CHALLENGES

Having found that Berta Ujueta was a supervisor within the meaning of Section 2(11) of the Act, I recommend that the challenge to her ballot be sustained. Having found that Ofelia Vasquez, Ana Veronica Gutierrez, Ana Elsa Rodriguez, and Arcelia Rodriguez were unlawfully discharged on August 29, I recommend the challenges to their ballots be overruled.

VI. PETITIONER'S OBJECTIONS

Objection 3 alleges that prior to the election, Respondent granted benefits to the employees in order to impinge upon their freedom of choice and to encourage them to vote against the Union. Having found that Respondent's instruction on or about August 25 to the kitchen employees to take a 10-minute break each morning and afternoon was calculated to discourage support for the Union and interfered with the election, I recommend that Objection 3 be sustained.

Objection 4 alleges that Respondent interrogated employees and conducted surveillance of its employees to determine the extent of their support for the Union. Having found that in mid-August Fierro and Ramirez unlawfully interrogated employees about their union sympathies and desires, I recommend that Objection 4 be sustained.[25]

Objection 5 alleges the unlawful discharge of Berta and 11 employees in order to discourage membership in the Union and to interfere with concerted, protected activities. In light of my findings regarding the unlawful discharge of the 12 employees as alleged in paragraphs 11(a) and (b), I recommend that Objection 5 be sustained.

Objection 6 alleges that Respondent failed to post the official board notices in Spanish and English in conspicuous locations and for the time period required. The General Counsel's witnesses who testified on this subject, claimed that only the English version of the Board's notice of election was posted. Korman testified that both English and Spanish versions of the notice were posted in three locations, and that they remained posted until after the election. The Board agent who conducted the election did not contend there was any irregularity with respect to the posting. Minnillo, who is no longer employed by Respondent, testified that two sets of notices (Spanish and English) were posted by Korman in the kitchen and by the timeclock, both locations visible from her desk. Gloria Lopez and Eva Sanchez testified they only read the center portion of the notice, which was in Spanish. Raquel Gonzalez thought a Spanish notice was posted, but was not sure if there was an English version. Respondent's witnesses testified that only the notice in English was posted, but that the center portion was in Spanish. It is clear from an examination of both the English and Spanish notices, that the center portion of both is identical, the left side in English, the right side in Spanish, both setting forth the unit, inclusions and exclusions, and the time and place of the election. Below each, in both Spanish and English, is a sample copy of the ballot. As noted earlier, I am convinced that the General Counsel's witnesses tailored their testimony regarding the notices to insure a new election. The fact remains, however, that five of those who had been deported to Mexico on August 29, made it back to vote at the August 31 election, which convinces me they were not unaware of the legend on the election notices. In light of my credibility findings, I recommend that Objection 6 be overruled.

[25] No showing has been made, however, that Respondent engaged in surveillance as alleged.

On the basis of the foregoing facts, I find that the election should be set aside, and I so recommend. I conclude further, as more fully described above, that Respondent's unfair labor practices are pervasive so as to prevent the holding of a free election and that, consequently, a bargaining order based on a card count is warranted. Thus, I recommend to the Board that the petition in Case 31-RC-4550 be dismissed and that all prior proceedings held thereunder be vacated in view of the remedy requiring recognition and bargaining based on a card majority.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

2. Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

3. By requesting the Immigration and Naturalization Service to conduct a raid to investigate which of Respondent's employees were undocumented aliens, because of their support for the Union, Respondent caused the arrest and deportation of Refugio Betancourt, Lilia Garcia, Ana Veronica Gutierrez, Yolanda Martinez, Rosenda Ramirez, Ana Elsa Reyes Rodriguez, Arcelia Rodriguez, Eva Rodriguez, Ofelia Vasquez, and Elizabeth Villanueva, thereby constructively discharging them in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

4. By discharging Maria Zepeda and Lubia Gutierrez because Respondent believed they had engaged in union and protected concerted activities, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

5. By granting employees a morning and afternoon break in order to discourage support for the Union, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

6. By interrogating employees regarding their union activities, desires and sympathies; by soliciting their grievances, and by promising to grant them benefits in order to discourage their suppport for the Union, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

7. By unilaterally granting employees medical insurance coverage at a time when the Union represented a majority of Respondent's employees in an appropriate collective-bargaining unit, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

8. All full and regular part-time employees employed by Respondent at its location at 11150 La Grange Avenue, Los Angeles, California; excluding all delivery employees, office clerical employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act, constitutes a unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act.

9. On or about April 13, 1979, and at all times thereafter, the Union represented a majority of the employees in the above-appropriate unit, and has been the exclusive representative of all said employees for the purpose of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(a) of the Act.

10. Respondent's unfair labor practices were so pervasive that they are disruptive of the election process, precluding a fair election and warranting an order to bargain.

11. The above-described unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

12. Respondent has not committed any other unfair labor practices alleged in the consolidated complaint.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I shall recommend that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act. To the extent that Respondent has not already done so, I shall recommend that Respondent be required to offer Lilia Garcia, Ana Veronica Gutierrez, Yolanda Martinez, Rosenda Ramirez, Ana Elsa Reyes Rodriguez, Arcelia Rodriguez, Eva Rodriguez, Ofelia Vasquez, Elizabeth Villanueva, Maria Zepeda, and Lubia Gutierrez immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority and other rights and privileges, and make them, together with Refugio Betancourt, whole for any loss of earnings they may have suffered by reason of Respondent's discrimination against them, by payment of a sum of money equal to that which they normally would have earned as wages from the date of their discharge on August 29, 1979, to the date of said offer of reinstatement, less their respective net earnings during such period, with backpay computed on a quarterly basis in the manner established by the Board in F. W. Woolworth Company, 90 NLRB 289

It having been found that the nature and pervasiveness of Respondent's unfair labor practices have made the holding of a fair election impossible, I shall recommend that Respondent cease and desist from engaging in such unlawful conduct and bargain with the employees designated collective-bargaining representative, Bakery, Confectionery & Tobacco Workers International Union, Local 453, AFL-CIO.

Because of the character of the unfair labor practices found herein, I shall recommend that Respondent cease and desist from in any manner interfering with, restraining, and coercing employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act.

It is also recommended that Respondent make available to the Board, upon request, all payroll and other records to facilitate checking the amount of backpay due.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact, conclusions of law, and the entire record, and pursuant to Section 10(c) of the Act, I hereby issue the following recommended:

ORDER[27]

The Respondent, La Mousse, Inc., Los Angeles, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Discharging or causing the constructive discharge of employees by requesting the Immigration and Naturalization Service to investigate which employees are undocumented aliens, because of their support for Bakery, Confectionery & Tobacco Workers International Union, Local 453, AFL-CIO, or any other Union.

(b) Dicharging employees because we believe they engaged in union or protected concerted activities.

(c) Granting employees benefits in order to discourage support for the Union.

(d) Interrogating employees regarding their union activities, desires, and sympathies.

(e) Soliciting grievances from employees, or promising to grant them benefits in order to discourage their support for the Union.

(f) Refusing to recognize and bargain with the Union as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of all the employees in the above-described unit.

(g) Unilaterally granting benefits to employees at a time when the Union represents a majority of Respondent's employees in an appropriate collective-bargaining unit.

(h) In any other manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Upon request, recognize and bargain with Bakery, Confectionery & Tobacco Workers International Union, Local 453, AFL-CIO, as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of all the employees in the aforesaid appropriate unit and, if an agreement is reached, embody such agreement in a written, signed agreement.

(b) To the extent that Respondent has not already done so, Respondent shall offer Lilia Garcia, Ana Veronica Gutierrez, Yolanda Martinez, Rosenda Ramirez, Ana Elsa Reyes Rodriguez, Arcelia Rodriguez, Eva Rodriguez, Ofelia Vasquez, Elizabeth Villanueva, Maria Zepeda, and Lubia Gutierrez, immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or other rights and privileges previously enjoyed.

(c) Make whole each of the employees as set forth above, together with Refugio Betancourt, for any loss of pay each may have suffered by reason of Respondent's unlawful discrimination, for the period commencing August 29, 1979, to the date of reinstatement or offer of reinstatement, in the manner set forth in the section entitled "The Remedy."

(d) Preserve and, upon request, make available to the Board or its agents, for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(e) Post at its Los Angeles plant, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[28] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 31, after being duly signed by an authorized representative of Respondent, shall be posted by Respondent immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(f) Notify the Regional Director for Region 31, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps Respondent has taken to comply herewith.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the complaint be dismissed insofar as it alleges violations of the Act not found herein, specifically paragraphs 12, 14(a) and (b), 16, 18(d), (e), (f), and (g), 19(a), (b), and (c), 20(a), (c), and (d), and 21.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

We will not discharge or cause the constructive discharge of employees by requesting the Immigration and Naturalization Service to investigate which of our employees are undocumented aliens, because of their support for Bakery, Confectionery & Tobacco Workers International Union, Local 453, AFL-CIO, or any other union.

[28] In the event that this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

WE WILL NOT discharge employees because we believe they have engaged in union or protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT grant benefits to employees in order to discourage their support for the Union.

WE WILL NOT interrogate employees regarding their union activities, desires, or sympathies.

WE WILL NOT solicit grievances from employees or promise to grant them benefits in order to discourage their support for the Union.

WE WILL NOT unilaterally grant benefits to employees at a time when the Union represents a majority of our employees in an appropriate collective-bargaining unit, without first bargaining thereon with the Union.

WE WILL NOT in any other manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL, upon request, bargain collectively with Bakery, Confectionery & Tobacco Workers International Union, Local 453, AFL-CIO, as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of all the employees in the bargaining unit described below with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, and other conditions of employment and, if an agreement is reached, embody such agreement in a written signed agreement. The bargaining unit is:

> All full and regular part-time production employees employed by us at our location at 11150 La Grange Avenue, Los Angeles, California, excluding all delivery employees, office clerical employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

WE WILL offer each of the employees named below, to the extent that we have not already done so, immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent jobs, without prejudice to their seniority and other rights and privileges previously enjoyed, and make whole each of said employees, together with Refugio Betancourt, for any loss of pay each may have suffered by reason of our discrimination against each of them, for the period commencing August 29, 1979, to the date of reinstatement or offer of reinstatement, with interest.

Lilia Garcia
Ana Veronica Gutierrez
Lubia Gutierrez
Yolanda Martinez
Rosenda Ramirez
Ana Elsa Reyes Rodriguez
Arcelia Rodriguez
Eva Rodriguez
Ofelia Vasquez

DECISION AND ORDER REMANDING

By Members Fanning, Jenkins, and Zimmerman

On March 26, 1981, the Acting Regional Director for Region 20 issued a Report on Objections wherein he found that the Employer had failed to comply with the requirement in Section 102.69 of the Board's Rules and Regulations that it immediately serve on the other party a copy of its objections and that it make a statement of such service. The Acting Regional Director further found that the Employer had offered no valid and compelling reason for its failure to comply with the requirement for immediate service and, accordingly, he recommended that the Employer's objections be dismissed and that an appropriate certification be issued. Thereafter, the Employer timely filed with the Board exceptions to the Acting Regional Director's report wherein it contends, inter alia, that the Acting Regional Director erred in failing to find that the Employer made "an honest attempt to substantially comply" with the requirements of the Board's Rules and Regulations and, therefore, he erred in failing to consider the merits of its objections. For the reasons stated below, we find merit in the Employer's exceptions.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

In its brief in support of its exceptions, the Employer concedes that it failed to attach a "Proof of Service" form to the objections it filed, but it asserts that such failure was due to "clerical inadvertence." In this regard, the Employer contends that, at the time its objections were prepared and signed, a proof of service form was also prepared, signed, and attached to said objections, and that, at the time its objections were filed with Region 20, it maintained a good-faith belief that such proof of service form continued to be attached to its objections and that a copy of its objections was immediately served on the Petitioner in accordance with California law. In support of the latter contention, the Employer refers to the transmittal letter accompanying its objections which states, inter alia, "A copy of these Objections has today been served on the Petitioner as is more fully set forth in the attached Proof of Service." As further evidence of its good faith herein, the Employer correctly asserts that, upon learning of its failure to comply with the service requirements of Section 102.69, it immediately sought to rectify its error by serving, the next day, a copy of its objections on the Petitioner and a new proof of service with Region 20.

In agreement with the Employer, we conclude that the foregoing facts establish that the Employer has made "an honest attempt to substantially comply" with the Board's rules on service of objections. See, generally, Alfred Nickles Bakery, Inc., 209 NLRB 1058, 1059 (1974). In this regard, we conclude that both the transmittal letter which accompanied the objections as well as the speed with which the Employer sought to perfect service upon being notified of its deficiencies indicate that its failure to comply with the service requirements of Section 102.69 was due to clerical inadvertence rather than a disregard of the Board's requirements. Cf. *The Nestle Company,*240 NLRB 1310, 1311 (1979); see also High Standard, Inc., 252 NLRB 403, 405 (1980); and Alleghany Warehouse Company, Inc., and Star Warehouse Corporation, 256 NLRB No. 9 (1981). Accordingly, we will remand this matter to the Regional Director for investigation of the Employer's objections and any further action deemed appropriate.

ORDER

It is hereby ordered that this proceeding be, and it hereby is, remanded to the Regional Director for Region 20 for investigation of the Employer's objections and any further action deemed appropriate.

Member Jenkins, dissenting:

I cannot agree with my colleagues' conclusion that the facts herein establish that the Employer has made "an honest attempt to substantially comply" with the requirements of Section 102.69 of the Board's Rules and Regulations. To the contrary, the Employer admittedly was aware of the requirements of Section 102.69, yet was not sufficiently concerned with the same to prevent such "clerical inadvertence" as occurred herein. In my opinion, this lack of concern clearly demonstrates a disregard of our requirements rather than an "honest attempt" to substantially comply therewith.

Since the Employer has established neither an "honest attempt to substantially comply" with our requirements nor a "valid and compelling reason" for its noncompliance, I would dismiss the objections and issue the appropriate certification. See, e.g., Platt Brothers, 250 NLRB 325 (1980). This my colleagues refuse to do; accordingly, I dissent.

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On March 19, 1981, Administrative Law Judge Thomas R. Wilks issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings, and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge and hereby orders that the Respondent, Lexington Cartage Company, Inc., Lexington, Kentucky, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the said recommended Order, except that the attached notice is substituted for that of the Administrative Law Judge.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

WE WILL NOT refuse to recognize and bargain in good faith with Teamsters Local 651, affiliated with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, as the exclusive bargaining representative of our employees in the following appropriate bargaining unit:

> All truck drivers employed by us at our Lexington, Kentucky, facility, excluding all mechanics, office clerical employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended.

WE WILL recognize and, upon request, bargain in good faith with the above-named labor organization as the exclusive representative of all employees in the above-described unit.

LEXINGTON CARTAGE COMPANY, INC.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

THOMAS R. WILKS, Administrative Law Judge: This case was heard in Lexington, Kentucky, on January 12, 1981, pursuant to an unfair labor practice charge filed by Teamsters Local 651, affiliated with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, herein called the Union, on April 7, 1980, and a complaint and notice of hearing issued by the Regional Director for Region 9 of the National Labor Relations Board on May 23, 1980. The complaint alleges that Lexington Cartage Company, Inc., herein called Respondent, violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, herein called the Act, by refusing to bargain in good faith with the Union, by not responding to telephone calls from the Union, by not responding to bargaining proposals, by canceling a negotiation meeting, and by withdrawing recognition from the Union.

On May 15, 1980, Respondent filed a petition with the Regional Director, which requested the Board to refrain from processing this matter on the grounds that the Union does not represent a majority of employees, and that a remedial order would deprive Respondent and its employees of their constitutional rights. On June 10, Respondent filed its answer to the complaint denying the commission of unfair labor practices, and therein also alluded to the aforesaid petition dated May 15, 1980, and further recited that it had instituted action in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky seeking a declaratory order that it not be required to bargain with the Union and that the Union be enjoined from enforcing its bargaining demands.

On July 15, 1980, the said Regional Director referred Respondent's May 15 petition to the Chief Administrative Law Judge for ruling as a motion to dismiss pursuant to Section 102.25 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, Series 8, as amended. On the same date counsel for the General Counsel filed a motion in opposition to the motion to dismiss with supporting memorandum. The General Counsel argued therein that the complaint herein is premised upon an admitted refusal to recognize and bargain with the Union during the 1-year period wherein the Union was certified by the Board as collective-bargaining agent, and that, in the absence of any unusual circumstances, there can be no justification for said refusal, citing Ray Brooks v. N.L.R.B., 348 U.S. 96 (1954). Respondent's petition was treated by the Associate Chief Administrative Law Judge as a motion to dismiss which he denied on November 24, 1980.

It appears that all parties have intervened in the district court action where the matter is now pending. Respondent's petition to defer action was not thereafter renewed before me. Subsequent to the hearing in this matter, Respondent and the General Counsel filed briefs. Nowhere in argument or brief does Respondent set forth a cogent argument supported by case citation as to why the Board should or can cede to the district court its exclusive statutory jurisdiction over the alleged unfair labor practice. At no time did Respondent or employees file with the Board a petition to revoke certification. As stated by the Supreme Court in the above-cited Brooks case:

> If an employer has doubts about his duty to continue bargaining, it is his responsibility to petition the Board for relief, while continuing to bargain in good faith at least until the Board has given some indication that his claim has merit. Although the Board may, if the facts warrant, revoke a certification or agree not to pursue a charge of an unfair labor practice, these are matters for the Board; they do not justify employer self-help or judicial interference. . . . [348 U.S. at 103, emphasis supplied.]

Accordingly, I conclude that the processing of this case ought not be deferred.

Upon the entire record and the briefs, I make the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

At all times material, Respondent, a Kentucky corporation with an office and place of business in Lexington, Kentucky, has been engaged in the intrastate transporting of freight in and around Lexington. During the 12-month period preceding the complaint, Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business operations, purchased and received goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000, which were shipped to its Lexington, Kentucky, facility directly from points outside the Commonwealth of Kentucky.

It is admitted and I find that at all times material Respondent is and has been an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. STATUS OF THE LABOR ORGANIZATION

It is admitted and I find that the Union is and has been at all material times a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Facts

On October 30, 1979, in Case 9-RC-12989, the Board issued a Decision and Certification of Representative wherein it certified the Union as the exclusive bergaining representative of all employees in the following appropriate unit:

> All truck drivers employed by the Employer at its Lexington, Kentucky facility, excluding all mechanics, office clerical employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

On November 27, 1979, Union Business Agent Rex Edwards communicated by letter with Respondent wherein he requested a meeting on January 6, 1980, for the purpose of negotiating a collective-bargaining agreement. The first negotiation meeting occurred on January 18, 1980, between union representatives including Edwards and representatives of the parties including General Manager Frank Dean, Sr., and Attorney Robert Houlihan. Edwards submitted a proposed collective-bargaining agreement to Respondent's representatives who agreed to study them.

The next negotiating meeting occurred, on February 25, in Attorney Houlihan's office. At that meeting and at meetings held on March 6, 13, and 28, Respondent submitted to the Union no counterproposals orally or in writing. Rather, at each meeting commencing with the meeting of February 25, Houlihan stated that it was the position of Respondent that the Union did not represent a majority of the unit employees and therefore it was not obliged to bargain with the Union. Edwards testified that he responded that he would file unfair labor practice charges to compel bargaining. He conceded that he also threatened that the Union would engage in strike activity to compel negotiations. Arguments then were engaged in between Edwards and Houlihan as to whether the Union was required by its International constitution and Local bylaws first to conduct a strike vote before engaging in strike activities. No meetings were held after March 28.

Edwards testified that he had made numerous efforts to contact Respondent to arrange for meeting dates but that he was frustrated by the failure of Respondent to answer his messages, and by the unavailability of Attorney Houlihan. Edwards testified that on one occasion he appeared at Houlihan's office for an arranged meeting only to be informed that Houlihan was called away for other business. Edwards' testimony in this regard was confused, uncertain, cryptic, conclusionary, and not related to specific dates or events. He conceded on cross-examination that there were occasions when he was also unavailable for meetings. Edwards' testimony is too vague and uncertain to support any conclusions with respect to Respondent's failure to respond to telephone calls and with respect to the cancellation of one meeting.

General Manager Dean testified that a "short time" after the Union was certified on October 30, 1979, he was presented with a petition which bore the purported signatures of all the 14 unit employees then employed, and which stated, inter alia: "We the undersigned Petition Local 651 Teamsters Union to Drop their Effort to Organize the Drivers of Lexington Cartage Company." He also testified that he first became aware of such petition "sometime prior to" October 26, 1979, but he did not explain the circumstances nor did he fix a date.

Dean further testified that on October 18, 1979, he had observed and removed from the plant bulletin board a cartoon which had been extracted from Hustler magazine and which depicted two male persons, one of whom, a political candidate, was engaged in an act of lewd obeisance to the other, a potential voter. Handwritten on the cartoon was an identification of the two persons as General Manager Dean and employee truckdriver Roosevelt Coates (identified at the hearing as the distributor of the employee petition).

Dean concluded, after an investigation of handwriting samples later verified by a handwriting expert, that the handwritten portion was that of Thomas Mason. Dean assumed that, because he had seen Mason in possession of that particular issue of Hustler containing the cartoon shortly before the posting occurred, Mason was responsible for the actual posting. Dean testified without elaboration that during the preelection campaign Mason was "visible as the in-plant union organizer." Also Mason appeared at the National Labor Relations Board Regional Office in the company of the union agent for the scheduled representation case hearing which however was aborted because of a voluntary election agreement. Additionally, Mason served as the observer for the Union at the Board-conducted election.

Mason was discharged on October 26, 1979, without further investigation. The Union was notified by letter of his discharge. No unfair labor practice charge was filed concerning his discharge. Respondent attempted to elicit testimony from Dean as to his opinion of the impact of Mason's discharge on the employees' mental attitude regarding continued union representation. Objection to that inquiry was sustained, inter alia, on grounds that Dean was not competent to testify as to the employees' state of mind.

On or about March 9, 1980, according to Dean, a second petition was shown to him, dated March 9, containing the apparent signatures of all unit employees which was addressed "To the Teamsters" and which stated:

> We the Drivers of Lexington Cartage Co. Hear You Are Still Trying To Negotiate for us. We Do Not Want You To Do This. We Do Not Want Your Union. We Want You To Leave Us Alone.

Like the first petition, Dean testified that the second petition was presented to him by a group of three or four employees.

Truckdriver Roosevelt Coates testified that he prepared, with his wife's clerical help, both of the employee petitions described above. He testified that he solicited each employee to sign the petitions. With respect to the first petition he testified that he encountered some employee resistance, but that after Mason was discharged he "didn't have a bit of trouble" obtaining signatures. Coates identified Mason as the "one who tried to organize," and stated that Mason's discharge "cut the head off" the organizing drive. Coates testified that he delivered both petitions to the Union. He further testified that shortly after the second petition the employees all "voted" at the union hall to renounce further union representation, and that no strike vote was ever conducted by the Union. Coates did not disclose precisely when a majority of employees signed the petition, nor did he disclose the circumstances.

For reasons set forth below, I granted a motion to strike, as irrelevant, Dean's testimony as to the receipt of the employees' petitions and Mason's discharge. Coates' testimony was received as an offer of proof, as I ruled at the hearing, that the substance of his testimony was also irrelevant.

B. Analysis

Respondent argues that, despite the fact that its admitted refusal to recognize and bargain with the Union occurred during the certification year, it was justified in so doing because of unusual circumstances. These circumstances consist of Respondent's belief that the employees renounced the Union because of the opprobrius conduct of the leading employee union adherent who it also expected was "slated" to become a shop steward.[1] Respondent contends that the employees' reputed desires should be honored and that a bargaining order based on a presumption of majority status would be contrary to the employees' rights under the Act and an abridgement of their first amendment right of freedom of association.[2]

Although Respondent contends that the Union is responsible for the conduct of Mason, a contention I find untenable, Respondent does not argue that the circumstances herein give rise to such a degree of union misconduct as to obviate the possibility of a viable relationship at the bargaining table.[3] Indeed, there was no evidence offered to demonstrate that the Union adopted or approved of Mason's conduct, or that it even requested that he be reinstated. Rather, Respondent sought to adduce evidence of Mason's purported conduct solely to establish employee motivation for its alleged disavowal of the Union.[4]

The issues raised herein by Respondent have long been resolved. The Board has explicitly stated:

> It is well settled that a Union's continued majority is conclusively presumed to exist for 1 year from the date of the certification and such an employee

[1] No evidence was sought to be adduced that Mason was "slated" to be a shop steward. He was discharged prior to any bargaining and was not a member of the Union's bargaining team.

[2] At the hearing Respondent explicitly disclaimed that its refusal to bargain was in any way premised upon the threat of the Union to engage in strike activity.

[3] Where a union has engaged in a campaign of extensive and egregious violence directed against an employer the Board has refused to require a bargaining order. Union Nacional de Trabajadores and its agent Arturo Grant (The Carborundum Company of Puerto Rico and Carboundum Caribbean, Inc.), 219 NLRB 862 (1975); Allou Distributors, Inc., 201 NLRB 47 (1973); Herbert Bernstein, Alan Bernstein, Laura Bernstein, a copartnership d/b/a Laura Modes Company, 144 NLRB 1592 (1963).

[4] It can be argued that Respondent's proffered evidence in this regard does not demonstrate that the employees' disapproval of Mason's alleged conduct motivated their change of loyalty, but rather that it was the fact that the chief union adherent was discharged which caused them to cooperate with Coates' antiunion efforts. Respondent's proffered evidence does not establish that the employee petition was executed by most employees after the cartoon posting but before Mason's discharge.

In no case has the Board or the courts evaluated the motivation of employees' subsequent change of mind as an unusual circumstance. Indeed, the goal of industrial stability sought to be achieved by the Board as affirmed by the Supreme Court would be frustrated if a Board certification based on a secret-ballot Board-conducted election could be speedily nullified by the informal mechanism of an employee-conducted petition. This is so particularly in the instant case where the motivations of the employees are speculative, and where the subsequent petition and renunications occurred after Respondent refused to recognize its bargaining obligations and thereby frustrated effective bargaining by the Union.[6]

Accordingly, I reaffirm my ruling made during the course of the hearing that the evidence proffered by Respondent as to the Union's loss of employee support during the certification is irrelevant and inadmissible.[7] I conclude that Respondent has failed to adduce relevant, competent, and probative evidence to establish the existence of extraordinary circumstances to justify the withdrawal of recognition from the Union. I find that Respondent breached its bargaining obligations under the Act and failed to bargain collectively and in good faith with the Union, and violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act on and after February 25, 1980, by failing to respond to the Union's bargaining proposals, and by withdrawing recognition from the Union as the exclusive bargaining agent of employees in the appropriate bargaining unit.

IV. THE EFFECT OF THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES UPON COMMERCE

The activities of Respondent set forth above occurring in connection with its operations described above have a close, intimate, and substantial relationship to trade, traffic, and commerce among the several States and tend to lead to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow of commerce.

V. THE REMEDY

I recommend that Respondent be ordered to cease and desist from its unfair labor practices and to take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

Having found that Respondent refused to bargain with the Union in violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act, on and after February 25, 1980, by failing and refusing to respond to the Union's bargaining proposals and by withdrawing recognition of the Union as the exclusive bargaining representative of the employees in the appropriate unit, I recommend that Respondent be ordered to bargain in good faith with and recognize the Union as the exclusive representative of its employees in that unit.

In cases where an employer has refused to bargain during the certification year, the Board has normally, in the remedial order, construed the certification year as commencing on the date the the employer commences good-faith bargaining. Eckerd Drugs of Georgia, Inc., 248 NLRB 151 (1980); Regal 8 Inn, supra. In certain circumstances the Board will merely extend the certification year less the amount of time when the parties engaged in substantial good-faith bargaining. Deister Concentrator Company, Inc., 253 NLRB 358, fn. 2 (1980). When the nature of the employer's bad-faith bargaining requires a full year of bargaining in order to effectuate the policies of the Act, the Board has ordered a full year of bargaining during which no representation or decertification elections can be held despite the fact that the employer's bad-faith bargaining occurred in the last few months of the certification year. Glomac Plastics, Inc., 234 NLRB 1309, fn. 4 (1978). Where an employer has withdrawn recognition from a union during the certification year, and where the union after a substantial period of bargaining sought to induce employees to engage in acts of vandalism against the employer in order to support its bargaining position and thereafter the employees renounced the union, the Board held that it would not entertain the processing of a decertification petition until after the employer commenced good-faith bargaining for a reasonable period of time, but the Board did not extend the certification year for an absolute 12-month period. Lee Office Equipment, supra.

In this case, the Union did not engage in misconduct during a period of bargaining. Furthermore, bargaining herein did not effectively commence, because Respondent withdrew recognition based on an employees' petition that had been initiated prior to the certification. Clearly, Respondent was aware of the petition prior to any bargaining demand, and was therefore not of a mind to engage in any bargaining from the outset of the certification year. Under these circumstances, I recommend that the full certification year commence on the date that Respondent commences to bargain in good faith, and that during such time no question concerning the Union's majority status can be raised.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Respondent, Lexington Cartage Company, Inc., is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. Teamsters Local 651, affiliated with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

[6] This is not to say that an employer or employees are not without recourse to the Board processes at the appropriate time. After the expiration of the certification year employees and the employer may file new representation petitions. 3. All truckdrivers employed by Respondent at its Lexington, Kentucky facility, excluding all mechanics, office clerical employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act, constitute a unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act.

4. At all times since October 30, 1979, the Union has been and is the exclusive bargaining representative of the employees in the aforesaid appropriate unit within the meaning of Section 9(a) of the Act.

5. On and after February 25, 1980, by failing to respond to the Union's bargaining proposals and by withdrawing recognition of the Union as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of the employees of Respondent in the aforesaid unit, Respondent has failed and refused, and is failing and refusing, to bargain collectively in good faith with the Union as the representative of its employees, and thereby has engaged in and is engaging in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) of the Act.

6. By the aforesaid refusal to bargain, Respondent has interfered with, restrained, and coerced, and is interfering with, restraining, and coercing, employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act, and thereby has engaged in and is engaging in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

7. The aforesaid unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact, conclusions of law, and upon the entire record, and pursuant to Section 10(c) of the Act, I hereby issue the following recommended:

ORDER[8]

The Respondent, Lexington Cartage Company, Inc., Lexington, Kentucky, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Refusing to recognize and bargain in good faith with Teamsters Local 651, affiliated with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, as the exclusive bargaining representative of its employees in the following bargaining unit:

> All truck drivers employed by the Respondent at its Lexington, Kentucky facility, excluding all mechanics, office clerical employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action which is necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Recognize and, upon request, bargain in good faith with the above-named labor organization as the exclusive representative of all employees in the above-described unit.

(b) Post at its Lexington, Kentucky, facility copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[9] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 9, after being duly signed by Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by it immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Notify the Regional Director for Region 9, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps Respondent has taken to comply herewith.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that those allegations in the complaint as to which no violations have been found are hereby dismissed.

[8] In the event no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Rules and Regulations of the National Labor Relations Board, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order herein shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules and Regulations, be adopted by the Board and become its findings, conclusions, and Order, and all objections thereto shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

DECISION, ORDER, AND CERTIFICATION OF RESULTS OF ELECTION

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On March 30, 1981, Administrative Law Judge Hubert E. Lott issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, the General Counsel filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and both Respondent and the General Counsel filed answering briefs.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order, as modified herein.[2]

Respondent excepts to the Administrative Law Judge's finding that employees Andrus and Ciukaj engaged in protected concerted activity when they refused to cross the picket line at International Harvester; Respondent argues that their refusal to cross the picket line was motivated by fear, not by their union sympathies. However, the Administrative Law Judge found, and we agree, that Andrus and Ciukaj refused to cross the picket line out of sympathy for the striking employees. Moreover, such conduct is protected regardless of motivation. See G & P Trucking Company, Inc., 216 NLRB 620, 624 (1975); Overnite Transportation Company, 212 NLRB 515, 516 at fn. 6, 522 (1974); Congoleum Industries, Inc., 197 NLRB 534, 547 and fn. 64 (1972). Respondent also argues that Andrus and Ciukaj were obliged to apply unconditionally for reinstatement in order to trigger Respondent's backpay obligation. This argument is without merit because, as Administrative Law Judge found, these employees were unlawfully discharged. See Abilities and Goodwill, Inc., 241 NLRB 27 (1979).

In adopting the Administrative Law Judge's finding that Respondent did not violate Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by Supervisor Bevin's statement to employee Pavlowski that, "if the union was here, there might not be any work," we note that Pavlowski initiated the conversation with a joking statement about the Union. Thus, Bevin's statement was a spontaneous response rather than a calculated attempt at intimidation, and was apparently not taken seriously by Pavlowski. Moreover, this statement was an isolated incident; it occurred about 2 months after the discharge of Andrus and Ciukaj and 1 month before the election. In this regard, other than the two discharges, which were unrelated to the employees' support for the Union herein, Respondent did not violate the Act during the period in question.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order[3] the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge, as modified below, and hereby orders that the Respondent, Browning-Ferris Industries, Chemical Services, Inc., Lemont, Illinois, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the said recommended Order, as so modified:

1. Substitute the following for paragraph 1(b):

"(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act."

2. Substitute the following for paragraph 2(a):

"(a) Offer Robert Andrus and Florian Ciukaj immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights or privilegespreviously enojoyed, and make them whole, with interest, for any loss of earnings they may have suffered as a result of their unlawful discharge in the manner set forth in the section of this Decision entitled 'The Remedy.'"

[1] The General Counsel has excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Administrative Law Judge. It is the Board's established policy not to overrule an administrative law judge's resolutions with respect to credibility unless the clear preponderance of all of the relevant evidence convinces us that the resolutions are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, Inc., 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing his findings.

[2] The Administrative Law Judge inadvertently included a broad cease-and-desist provision in his recommended Order. We will modify his recommended Order to conform it to the narrow language contained in his notice, which we find appropriate in the circumstances of this case. See Hickmott Foods, Inc., 242 NLRB 1357 (1979). Additionally, we will modify the affirmative provisions of the recommended Order to include the appropriate reinstatement language which was omitted, apparently through inadvertence, by the Administrative Law Judge.

3. Substitute the attached notice for that of the Administrative Law Judge.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the complaint allegations not specifically found herein be, and they hereby are, dismissed.

CERTIFICATION OF RESULTS OF ELECTION

It is hereby certified that a majority of the valid ballots have not been cast for Excavating, Grading, Asphalt, Private Scavengers and Automobile Salesroom Garage Attendants Union, Local No. 731, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, and that said labor organization is not the exclusive representative of all the employees, in the unit described below within the meaning of Section 9(a) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended:

> All full-time and part-time drivers, yard employees, mechanics and service crew employees employed at the Employer's facility presently located at Main and Park Road, Lemont, Illinois, but excluding all office clerical employees, salespersons, supervisors, including service supervisors and service engineers, guards and professional employees as defined in the Act.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

WE WILL NOT interfere with the right of employees to engage in protected concerted activities by discharging them for refusing to cross a lawful picket line established at the premises of another employer.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended.

WE WILL offer Robert Andrus and Florian Ciuka immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed, and make them whole, with interest, for any loss of earnings they may have suffered as a result of their unlawful discharge.

All our employees are free to engage in concerted activities for their mutual aid and protection within the meaning of Section 7 of the Act or to refrain from engaging in such activities.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

HUBERT E. LOTT, Administrative Law Judge: These consolidated cases were heard at Chicago, Illinois, on November 24 and 25, 1980.[1] The charge in Case 13-CA-19709 which was filed on March 24, and the charge in Case 13-CA-19884 filed on May 5 were filed by Excavating, Grading, Asphalt, Private Scavengers and Automobile Salesroom, Garage Attendants Union, Local No. 731, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, herein the Union. A complaint issued on May 29, consolidating Cases 13-CA-19709 and 13-CA-19884. A report on objections order further consolidating cases issued July 9. In that report the Regional Director's order recommended that a hearing be held with respect to Objections 2, 5, and 6 because they raised issues which were the same as those involved in the unfair labor practice cases filed by the Union. The Regional Director further recommended overruling Objections 1, 3, 4, 7, and 8. Objection 7 alleges the discriminatory discharge of seven employees, including Robert Andrus and Florian Ciukaj. That portion of Objection 7 relating to the discharge of five employees was overruled by the Regional Director because the charge in Case 13-CA-19926 alleging the discriminatory discharge of these five employees was dismissed by the Regional Director on July 1. The Regional Director further recommended overruling the balance of Objection 7 seven with respect to the discriminatory discharge of Andrus and Ciukaj because he found that the discharges occurred at the premises of another employer on February 19, which was outside the critical preelection period. Limited exceptions were filed with the Board over the Regional Director's ruling with respect to that portion of Objection 7 dealing with Andrus and Ciukaj. The Board in its Decision and Direction dated September 12, adopted the Regional Director's finding and recommendations; however, it remanded that portion of Objection 7 dealing with the discharge of Andrus and Ciukaj for hearing to determine the actual discharge date of these two employees, since the discharge of these employees could have occurred after the filing of the petition and therefore affected the results of the election. Therefore the Board directed that a hearing be held with respect to Objections 2, 5, 6, and that portion of Objection 7 relating to the discharge of employees Andrus and Ciukaj and that these objections be consolidated with the issues in Cases 13-CA-19709 and 13-CA-19884. An amended consolidated complaint in Cases 13-CA-19709, 13-CA-19884, and 13-RC-15408 issued on July 29. The current complaint alleges that Browning-Ferris Industries, Chemical Services, Inc., herein called Respondent, has violated and is violating Section 8(a)(1) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, herein called the Act. Respondent's answer to the complaint, duly filed, denies the commission of any unfair labor practices.

The parties were afforded a full opportunity to be heard, to call, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to introduce relevant evidence. Since the close of the hearing, briefs have been received from the General Counsel, counsel for Respondent and counsel for the Union.

Upon the entire record and based upon my observation of the witnesses and consideration of the briefs submitted, I make the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

The Company, a Nevada corporation, is engaged in the business of chemical cleaning and liquid waste handling at its plant in Lemont, Illinois, where it annually purchases and receives at its Lemont facility goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly from points located outside the State of Illinois. The Company admits, and I find, that it is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act, and that the Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

II. UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Issues

The principal issues raised by the pleadings and the various amendments made thereto at the hearing are whether Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by various instances of interrogation, surveillance, wage increases, threats, and by replacing employees because they refused to cross another employer's picket line; and whether, as a result thereof, certain election objections should be sustained and a new election directed.

B. Background

Respondent is engaged in various forms of cleaning, dredging, and hauling of chemical waste. It cleans the bottoms of waste ponds, utilizes a hydroblaster which performs high pressure water cleaning at large refineries and industrial sites, and performs chemical cleaning using a mixture of acid and water which is circulated through customer equipment. Respondent's drivers haul away the spent chemicals and liquid waste. Respondent performs these various functions at customer locations or plants which are located throughout many States. Usually each job requires several laborers and a supervisor.

The parties entered into several stipulations which are as follows:

As of February 14, Browning-Ferris Industries at its Lemont, Illinois, facility, employed the following six employees classified as truckdrivers and ranked according to seniority: Florian Ciukaj, Robert Andrus, John Grande, Ernie Breuckman, Mike Ward, and Ron Pavlowski.

On February 14, International Harvester, West Pullman Plant, sent a purchase order to Browning-Ferris Industries, Lemont, Illinois, to do the following work: To provide labor and materials, to transport 22,000 gallons of soluble oil waste and 4,500 gallons of hydrochloric acid waste to the C.I.D. Landfill, Calumet City, Illinois.

On February 15, the following personnel completed the work at International Harvester's West Pullman Plant described in the above purchase order; Harold Dugan, salesman Bill Anthony, Randy Dann, and Tom Doolan. Each of the above arrived in a separate truck at International Harvester's West Pullman Plant at 9:30 a.m., and left at 12:15 p.m. Each of the above drove a semitractor-trailer, to wit: 7170, Bill Anthony; 7233, Harold Dugan; 7257, Tom Doolan; and 7279, Randy Dann. As of February 15, 1980, the above semitractor-trailers were normally assigned as follows; 7170 to Ernie Breuckman, 7233 to Robert Andrus, 7257 to Jim Chandler, and 7279 to Florian Ciukaj.

On February 22, International Harvester's West Pullman Plant sent Browning-Ferris Industries, Lemont, Illinois, a purchase order for the following work. To provide labor and materials to transport 10,000 gallons of soluble oil waste to C.I.D. Landfill, Calumet City, Illinois. This work was actually completed by Browning-Ferris Industries, Lemont, Illinois, on February 21, by drivers Ernie Breuckman and Ron Pavlowski who drove separate trucks. Both left Browning-Ferris Industries at 10 a.m., arrived at International Harvester's West Pullman Plant at noon, and departed at approximately 2:30 p.m. from International Harvester.

On March 17, International Harvester's West Pullman Plant, sent to Browning-Ferris Industries an invoice to provide labor and materials to transport 10,000 gallons of soluble oil waste to the C.I.D. Landfill, Calumet City, Illinois. This work was completed by Browning-Ferris Industries on March 18, by drivers Mike Ward and Tim Doogan. Both arrived at International Harvester, West Pullman Plant, at 11:30 a.m. and departed at 1 p.m., Doogan drove truck 7120. Ward drove truck 7233. Browning-Ferris Industries, Lemont, Illinois, performed no work for International Harvester from March 18, until July 30.

International Harvester was billed on August 15 for Browning-Ferris Industries work, described as quench oil sludge and transportation disposal, performed on August 1 and 5.

International Harvester was billed on August 29 for Browning-Ferris Industries work described as clean tank and dispose of waste performed on July 31 and August 1, 4, and 5. This work is similar to work which has been performed by Browning-Ferris Industries for International Harvester in the past.

David Doogan first performed work as a driver for Browning-Ferris Industries, Lemont, Illinois, on February 25. Tim Doogan first performed work as a driver for Browning-Ferris Industries, Lemont, Illinois, on February 26. David Doogan and Tim Doogan were terminated as drivers sometime in late April.

Ricardo DeHoyos was hired as a driver by Browning-Ferris Industries on June 17 and was terminated on June 20. Fred Balas was hired as a driver by Browning-Ferris Industries on June 12 and was terminated on October 8. Walter Miller was hired as a driver by Browning-Ferris Industries on May 6 and is still employed as a driver.

Browning-Ferris Industries has maintained an average of six drivers (excluding James Chandler) who have actually and regularly performed work from February 19 through November 24.

There is no written job description for the position of driver supervisor. There is no written job description for James Chandler from November 1, 1978, to the present. There is a written job description for the following hourly job classifications: Shop foremen, service supervisor, service technician, equipment technician, and mechanic.

In addition to the above stipulations it should be noted that Respondent's drivers spend approximately 90 percent of their time hauling liquid waste in semitractor-trailers from customer storage tanks to disposal sites. Individual drivers do not service regular customers or have assigned routes. They learn where they are to be dispatched each day by checking the drivers' schedule in the dispatchers office the evening before. If the schedule is not completed, the driver will telephone for his assignment or the dispatcher will telephone the driver. The drivers also receive radio messages during the workday from the dispatcher and make runs which have not been posted on the schedule. Drivers rarely switch assignments and only then with the approval of the dispatcher. Drivers normally do not decline assignments once they have been scheduled, however, Respondent often asks drivers whether they want a particular assignment before scheduling them for it and usually accommodates their wishes.

At all times material herein there was a lawful economic strike at the International Harvester facility, West Pullman Works, Chicago, Illinois.

C. Replacement of Robert Andrus and Florian Ciukaj

In February International Harvester placed an order with Respondent for the removal of liquid waste which would require four trucks on February 15. Four of the six drivers working for Respondent, including Andrus and Ciukaj, refused to cross the picket line at International Harvester. Andrus told Respondent that he did not think that it would be a very good idea to cross the picket line, while Ciukaj told Respondent that he did not want to get his head busted and he did not want to hurt the strike effort. District Manager Harold Dugan, salesman Bill Anthony, Service Supervisor Tom Doolan, and Shop Foremen Randy Dann, all management personnel, later drove the required trucks across the picket line and completed the February 15 job for the customer.

On February 19, Respondent received another work request to remove liquid waste from the International Harvester Plant on February 21. This job required all six of Respondent's trucks. Since only six drivers are employed to drive liquid waste hauling jobs, all drivers would be needed to complete the order. As a result of the previous refusals of employees to cross the picket line at International Harvester on February 15, management held a meeting on February 19 and interviewed each driver for the purpose of determining who would cross the International Harvester picket line to complete the work order scheduled for February 21. At each of these meetings Service Manager Ken Bevin, Randy Dann, and Harold Dugan were present. At that time Respondent's drivers were Ernie Breuckman, Ron Pavlowski, Jim Chandler, Bob Andrus, Florian Ciukaj, and Mike Ward. At these meetings Ciukaj merely stated that he would not cross the picket line while Andrus told Dugan that he was in sympathy with the strikers' economic action. When Andrus and Ciukaj told Dugan that they would not cross the picket line, they were both told that they would be replaced with someone who would do the work. Andrus and Ciukaj were the only drivers who refused to cross the picket line and neither driver worked for Respondent after February 19. On February 20, International Harvester called Respondent and reduced their order to only two trucks to be used on February 21. Pavlowski and Breuckman completed the International Harvester order on February 21. Dugan testified that replacements for Ciukaj and Andrus were hired either on February 21 or 22. The work schedule for February 21 indicates that there were five jobs or trucks scheduled: Breuckman and Pavlowski were assigned to International Harvester, while Ward, Chandler, and Supervisor Simpson were dispatched to other local customers. Neither Andrus nor Ciukaj ever made an unconditional offer to return to work. On February 23 Ciukaj came to the plant for his paycheck and asked Dugan if he had been fired. Dugan informed him that he had been permanently replaced. Dugan further stated that, Respondent had already hired two, drivers to replace Andrus and Ciukaj but that if they made an unconditional offer to return to work Respondent would take them back when an opening occurred. The following week Dugan met with the other drivers to explain what had happen to Andrus and Ciukaj. He told the drivers that they had been permanently replaced and further stated that, while he did respect their feelings for not crossing the picket line, Respondent could not operate a business by not servicing their customers and they had no choice but to permanently replace the people who would not service the customers and do the work for Respondent. There was evidence that the drivers are not scheduled to work every day and when that occurs they simply stay home and call in the next day and check with the dispatcher to see if they are scheduled to work the following day. Andrus and Ciukaj were not scheduled to work on February 15, 16, and 18, however, Ciukaj worked on February 19. Ciukaj began his employment with Respondent in July 1974 while Andrus started work with Respondent in November of that same year. Dugan testified that neither Andrus nor Ciukaj ever made an unconditional offer to return to work. He further stated that there were no other jobs available for these two drivers on February 21.

1. Supervisory status

Chandler has been employed at Respondent's Lemont facility since 1972. Chandler testified that prior to November 1978 he was a trucking coordinator dispatcher. In that capacity he received a salary and his job duties consisted of dispatching trucks, hiring and firing drivers, and supervising the entire trucking operation. He wore a uniform that consisted of blue trousers and a white shirt with the words "Browning-Ferris, Jim, Supervisor" printed on it.[2] As a truck coordinator Chandler testified that he drove trucks frequently and that prior to November 1978 he met with Dugan and explained that he was not making enough money as a coordinator and wished to return to driving. Dugan said that he could be a lead driver. He was given a new truck and a 45-cent-an-hour wage increase which was that much more than what the most senior drivers were earning. Since November 1978 Chandler stated that he has continued to wear the white shirt with the word supervisor on it, but that over a period of time the supervisor label wore off some of the shirts and was not restored until February or March. As a lead driver his job duties consisted of driving a vacuum truck and operating a vacuum pump which pumps liquid waste from the customers tank into his truck. He also stated that he fills out certain EPA, metropolitan sanitary district forms, and trucking manifests. He spends approximately 95 percent of his time driving the truck and 5 percent of his time overseeing service crews that are assigned to him. After the truck is loaded with waste liquid he then drives the contents to a disposal site and disposes of the waste. Chandler further testified that in his present job as lead driver he has no authority to hire, fire, schedule employees work, discipline, or transfer employees. Sometime in 1979 Chandler recommended to higher management that Ernie Breuckman not be allowed to drive a tractor-trailer because he was not qualified. Thereafter Breuckman drove nothing but a straight truck. Chandler, 2 months later, after driving with Breuckman, recommended that Breuckman be allowed to drive a tractor-trailer and thereafter Breuckman did drive the larger truck.[3] In January Chandler stated that he recommended a raise for Leo Durkin which Durkin received. As a lead driver Chandler testified that the customers at the jobsite looks to him to see that the job gets done and it is part of his responsibility to set up the job correctly and show the service employees how to do their job. In the past he has talked to management about employees not performing their job safely in accordance with his direction and has reported employees to Ken Bevin who have not performed their jobs correctly and that Bevin's responded that Chandler was the boss on the job. Chandler admitted supervising a Monsanto job in September or October with another supervisor Tom Simpson, in Iowa. The job lasted for 8 or 9 days and Chandler was the sole person in charge of one shift. Chandler testified that as a truck operator he completed many service receipt and log forms at the end of each day.[4] These service receipt and log forms basically describe which equipment was used on a particular job and the dates and the hours of use. They also show the number of employees and supervisors that worked on the job and the dates and hours that they worked. The form also indicates any chemicals used and any other special equipment that was needed to complete the job. Respondent prepares the customers bill based upon the information contained in these service receipt and log forms. The customers receive a copy of this form from the driver or a supervisor and the balance of the copies are returned to Respondent for billing purposes. Chandler stated that the drivers' time is not shown on these forms because that time is included with the cost of his truck. However, Chandler indicated that if he did work on a job other than driving work his labor would be indicated. On several such service receipt and log forms which Chandler completed and signed dating from August to November 1979, Chandler listed one supervisor and either one or two service employees or equipment technicians. Chandler could not recall who the supervisor was on any of these jobs if it was not himself. On several other forms which Chandler had completed during the period of January and February (some 18 different jobs) Chandler listed himself as a service technician.[5] On another service receipt and log form dated March 18, signed by Chandler, he listed himself as a supervisor for that entire day. On all of these forms Chandler lists at least one and in most cases two employees working with him on the job for that particular day.

Harold Dugan testified that James Chandler was hired as a trucking coordinator on June 5, 1977. His job duties as trucking coordinator included scheduling trucks for work, hiring and firing truckdrivers, and assigning drivers to haul liquid waste loads according to orders from various customers. Dugan testified that in October 1978 Chandler requested that he be allowed to assume the duties of a truckdriver in addition to his supervisory functions. Chandler wanted to change his job status because he could make more money as a driver and hourly employee than he could remaining as a coordinator. Chandler stated to Dugan that since there were times when he had to drive a truck as a coordinator, he wanted to be paid for it. According to Dugan, they agreed that Chandler would be classified as a driver-supervisor, continuing many of his supervisory functions as well as performing regular driver duties. Chandler's employee history record (Resp. Exh. 14) notes "11-1-78, per Jim Chandler's request, duties were changed from coordinator to driver supervisor (HD)." An employee transaction report (Resp. Exh. 18) dated November 1, 1978, reflects the change in status: "Explanation of other-change from coordinator to driver supervisor per employees request." Dugan further testified that Chandler assumed the duties of driver-supervisor on November 1, 1978. Since becoming a driver-supervisor on that date, Chandler supervised employees approximately 25 percent of his worktime and drove trucks for the remaining approximate 75 percent of the time. After becoming a driver-supervisor, Chandler continued his duties as a trucking coordinator through February 1979. After February 1979, his supervisory duties consisted of directing service crew employees at customer's jobsites.

[3] Apparently other experienced drivers such as Andrus and Ciukaj also made similar recommendations to higher management although the record is not clear as to whether or not these recommendations were ever followed.

[4] Other drivers also complete these forms and signed their names.

[5] On Resp. Exh. 15, which is a job description form, a service technician classification lists certain duties: Hourly employee skilled in all product lines normally assigned to. Has service and support responsibility as assigned by service manager and/or branch manager. Duties include job execution, supervision and discipline of crews, and equipment care. Uniform is blue pants, white shirt, and white hat.

As a supervisor of service crew employees Chandler acted as a liaison between the customers and Respondent and had the authority to discipline employees for poor performance at the jobsite. As Respondent's representative at the customers' place of business, he was the customers direct contact with Respondent. Chandler directed service crew employees and gave them work assignments. He would assign jobs to employees according to their abilities, would instruct them in the proper use of company equipment, and would observe employees using the equipment. As a supervisor on service crew jobs, Chandler also was responsible for completing the company service receipt logs which listed the equipment, labor, and chemicals used on each job. The service receipt logs completed by Chandler and other employees list Chandler as a supervisor or service technician on the service crew jobs. Service technician is another designation used for service crew supervisor.

Dugan testified further that like every company service supervisor, Chandler had the authority to terminate employees. In the summer of 1979, after leaving his coordinator job, Chandler evaluated Ernie Breuckman's driving skills and recommended that Breuckman not be allowed to drive tractor-trailer rigs until he had more experience handling smaller trucks. Management followed this recommendation based on Chandler's evaluation. Several months later Chandler made a second evaluation of Breuckman and recommended that he be allowed to drive the tractor-trailer. Respondent followed this recommendation as they had done on the previous occasion and Breuckman began driving trailer rigs. Chandler also has effectively recommended that an employee be given a raise. In January 1980, Chandler discussed Leo Durkin's work abilities with Ken Bevin and suggested that Durkin be given a raise. Bevin acted on Chandler's recommendation and a payroll change was made giving Durkin the raise. Dugan testified that Chandler is paid on an hourly basis as are all service crew supervisors. Although there were times when all drivers and supervisors were receiving the same rate of pay, those pay rates were instituted in order to change the payroll raises to anniversary date system. In January 1980 Dugan informed the drivers and supervisors that they would get a raise that would be effective in April. On April 1, all drivers and supervisors received a raise from $7.50 per hour to $8 per hour. To reestablish some differentiation between drivers and supervisors, all supervisors (including Chandler) were given a 25-cent-per-hour raise to be effective on April 21.

2. Threats and interrogation

The facts surrounding these allegations are basically undisputed. On April 22, a group meeting of company supervisors was called by Dugan to discuss Respondent's strategy regarding the Union's organization drive. Chandler was on a route assignment at the time but was called on the radio by Dann and told to attend the meeting. No company personnel were present except supervisors. At the end of the meeting Dugan handed out a questionnaire which contained a list of employees names and a yes, no, and maybe after each name. Each supervisor was instructed to mark next to the employee name how the supervisor felt about each employees' support or sympathy for the Union. Apparently Chandler completed the questionnaire but refused to sign it on the signature line which stated "supervisor." Chandler told Dugan that he refused to sign the questionnaire because he was not a supervisor. On April 23 James Chandler received a letter from Harold Dugan (G.C. Exh. 5) which reads as follows:

> Dear Jim
> Lemont district policy states that as a supervisor you have specific responsibilities to fulfill, both at the branch managers request and in the capacity of providing support functions. One of the supportive functions is filling out employee questionnaire forms as requested.
> Such a request was made on April 22, 1980; and you failed to fully comply with it. Nor did you fully cooperate as requested.
> In addition to your failure to cooperate on April 22, 1980, you have refused to wear your supervisors shirt insignia, even though Lemont district policy mandates that this be done.
> As a supervisor, you owe your loyalty to this company and can not, by law, actively support or campaign on behalf of any labor organization. If you continue to refuse to cooperate, or otherwise refuse to, or fail to fulfill your duties and responsibilities as a supervisor, you will be terminated.
> Lemont district policy is specific, and leaves no doubt whatever concerning supervisory responsibilities and duties.
> I hope I can count on your full support, cooperation and assistance in the future. If, you for any reason, are uncertain as what your responsibilities are, I would be happy to further explain them to you.
> Harold Dugan

3. Wage increase

This allegation concerns itself with the 25-cent-per-hour raise received by Chandler and all supervisors effective April 21. Dugan testified that this raise was given in order to establish a differential between supervisors and drivers who up until that time were earning the same hourly rate.[6]

E. Ron Pavlowski[7]

Ron Pavlowski has been a truckdriver for Respondent since January 21. He testified that during the week of April 13 to 20 or the week of April 20 to 27 he was working at Clark Oil. He stated that on one occasion he was putting some hydrochloric acid into the circulating unit and just jokingly said to Ken Bevin, "If we were union I wouldn't even have to load this acid." Ken Bevin's comment was, "If you were union you wouldn't have any work." Pavlowski further testified that during that same week he was putting liquid waste in Respondent's holding pond and Randy Dann, who was still at the yard, came back to him and said, "Is Jim Chandler talking about anything regarding the Union? Pavlowski answered, "No." Then Dann said, "Well, how do you think the vote is going to go?" Pavlowski responded, "Roughly, I think it's going to be about 18 to 7." Dann said, "For?" And Pavlowski said, "No, I think against."

Pavlowski further testified that on May 20 after the election was over and the ballots had been counted (approximately 9 p.m.), he went to Johnny's 83 Bar and Grill where Respondent's supervisors were having a victory celebration. Pavlowski stated that he walked into Johnny's and noticed that all the supervisors were sitting at one table. Everybody was drinking, laughing, and joking. He sat down with Ken Bevin, John Grande, and Kevin Wales. Pavlowski started the conversation by stating that he could not believe the vote came out 14 to 3. Bevin said challenges would have made it 14 to 7 or 8. Bevin further stated that the four votes which had been challenged were Bob Andrus, Ciukaj, Jim Chandler, and he believed George Bouer and, according to Pavlowski, he also said that the two Doogans had called up to ask if they could vote and were told not to waste their time. Bevin then stated to Pavlowski, "We know that Mike Burns and Wayne Kirkpatrick voted yes and Randy Dann thinks that you voted for the Union. You are a very hard individual to figure out. We probably will never know how you voted." Pavlowski said, "Well you're right." Bevin then said, "Jim Chandler's ass is grass and Wayne Kirkpatrick doesn't know it yet but he is gone."

Radcliff Dann, shop foremen for 3 years, testified that he recalls a conversation with Pavlowski in April wherein he asked Pavlowski what the outcome of the vote would be and Pavlowski replied 14 to 7. Dann testified that that was the end of the conversation and that nothing else was said and that he does not recall mentioning Chandler's name.

Kenneth Bevin, service manager, testified that after the election was over at approximately 7 p.m., on May 20, he went to Johnny's 83 Bar and Grill. Several supervisors were sitting at a table drinking when Pavlowski came in at approximately 9 p.m., and sat down and ordered a beer. Pavlowski asked Bevin what the outcome of the election was and Bevin told him 14 to 3 at which time Pavlowski did some figuring and stated something to the effect that it should be 14 to 7, whereupon, Bevin said that some votes were contested and not counted. Pavlowski said that that made sense then. Bevin stated that they did not discuss anything else and that Chandler's name was not mentioned. Bevin further testified that nothing was said about how any particular employee voted or that he knew how certain employees voted. Bevin further stated that he did not say that those employees who voted for the Union would be fired or words to that effect. He also testified that there was no conversation regarding Kirkpatrick. Bevin further testified that he remembers a conversation with Pavlowski taking place in April at the Clark Oil Refinery in Blue Island wherein Pavlowski jokingly said, while he was loading acid into a truck, "If the union was here or if we had a union I wouldn't have to load the truck." Bevin responded in a joking manner, "If the union was here there might not be any work."

F. Analysis and Conclusions

1. Interrogation by Ken Bevin on February 19

There is no evidence in the record to support this allegation. Therefore, I hereby dismiss it.

2. Replacement of Andrus and Ciukaj

The Board recognizes two competing rights in cases where employees are replaced for refusing to cross the picket line of another employer. The right of employees to respect a picket line established at the premises of another employer and the right of employers to run their business despite the employees' protected right. Thus, the Board recognizes the right of an employer to replace employees who refuse to cross a picket line and are thereby engaging in protected conduct. However, the employer, when it takes this action, must show that it acted "only to preserve the efficient operation of his business." Overnight Transportation Company, 209 NLRB 691, 692 (1974). Similarly, the employer is required to show, "an overriding employer interest" Overnight Transportation Company, 154 NLRB 1271, 1274 (1965). The Board further stated in this decision, "clearly, what is required is the balancing of two opposing rights, and it is only when the employer's business need to replace the employees is such as clearly to outweigh the employees' right to engage in protected activity that an invasion of the statutory right is justified."

[6] At the conclusion of the General Counsel's case in chief, the General Counsel amended the complaint to include the 25-cent-per-hour wage increase to Chandler as a violation of Sec. 8(a)(1) of the Act; i.e., the granting of the benefit. I denied the motion because this allegation was never contained in any charge, complaint, or objection that issued prior to hearing. Further, it appeared clear to me at the time that this information was known or should have been known by the General Counsel several months prior to hearing because it involved a matter which was well known to one of the General Counsel's chief witnesses. However, at this time I am granting the motion to amend the complaint and will deal with the wage increase on its merits.

[7] All the testimony of Ron Pavlowski was given in support of amendments to the complaint which were made by the General Counsel at the hearing. The General Counsel stated that the information provided by Pavlowski first came to her attention on November 18. The same is true with respect to the allegations involving Randy Dann. I granted the motion but stated that coming forth with evidence at this late date may effect the credibility of her witness.

Applying these principles to the present case, I can not find a compelling business reason for Respondent's action. Respondent offered virtually no evidence that replacements were necessary to preserve the efficient operation of the business. To the contrary, the evidence indicated that Respondent's drivers are not assigned regular routes and while it is not customary for drivers to refuse assignments after they are scheduled, Respondent in the past made every effort to accommodate their wishes prior to preparing the schedule. Moreover, I find based on the record that no special skills are required of these drivers. Keeping this evidence in mind, it is further found that both Andrus and Ciukaj were informed by Dugan on February 19 that they were being replaced because Respondent had need of all six drivers on February 21. However, on February 20, which was prior to the time the schedule for February 21 was actually prepared, and prior to the hiring of any replacements; Respondent was informed by International Harvester that a mistake had been made and it really only needed two trucks and two drivers.[8] With this information Respondent proceeded to hire replacements even though they were not needed. Further, Respondent could not demonstrate that replacements were ever needed. The evidence is clear that International Harvester was the only customer whose employees were engaged in a strike. The evidence is also clear that from February 21 to the end of the strike at International Harvester, Respondent received one order for two drivers (March 18) from this customer. Keeping in mind that from February 20 to the end of the International Harvester strike, Respondent had four or five drivers who were willing to cross the International Harvester picket line; there appears to be no justification for the replacement of these two drivers. On the critical day of February 21, Respondent's schedule indicates that Andrus and Ciukaj could have been assigned to three other jobs or merely sent home for the day if no work was available. There would have been nothing unusual in either course of action and Respondent offered no evidence to show that by so doing, it would have adversely affected its business operation. Instead, Respondent chose to replace its two most senior drivers, which it clearly did not have to do. Respondent took the position that Ciukaj and Andrus were advised that their rights as employees were retained, but they made no unconditional offer to return to work. Therefore Respondent was under no obligation to reinstate them. Under the circumstances of this case, I reject this argument and note instead that when driver job openings occurred, Respondent never notified either driver of this fact. This suggests that Respondent did not want to employ either driver so long as they intended to respect picket lines. Dugan explained Respondent's position when he told the other drivers the following week, "[Y]es, we told the drivers that Bobby and Pie (Ciukaj) had been permanently replaced. We did respect their feelings for not going across the line but we could not operate a business by not servicing our customers and we had no choice but to permanently replace the people who wouldn't service the customers and do the work for us." Dugan's explanation to the other drivers uses the word "customers" twice and never refers to International Harvester or any legitimate business necessity for replacing Andrus and Ciukaj. What this statement means to me and, I am sure, to the drivers is that Respondent did not want to employ any drivers who would honor a picket line because the mere act of honoring a picket line interfered with its business operations affecting all of its customers.

Dugan's statement also refutes Respondent's argument that Andrus and Ciukaj refused to cross the picket line because of their fear of physical harm. Dugan and other supervisors went to the International Harvester plant on February 15 and knew there was no danger involved in crossing the picket line. Therefore, the clear import of Dugan's words is that he respected their decision to support the strikers at International Harvester. Based upon this statement and the testimony of Andrus and Ciukaj, I find that both drivers refused to cross the picket line out of sympathy for the strikers.

Accordingly, I find that Respondent discharged Andrus and Ciukaj on February 19 in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act for their refusal to cross a picket line at the plant of another company.

3. James Chandler

The only issue to be resolved herein is whether or not Chandler was a supervisor on April 22. If he was not, the allegations must be sustained since the facts supporting them are admitted.

Respondent's documentary evidence supports Dugan's version of the meeting held between him and Chandler sometime prior to November 1, 1978. Therefore, I find that Chandler agreed to become a driver-supervisor and further agreed to supervise service employees at the customers jobsite. He was hourly paid and earned the same hourly wage as other service crew supervisors. He wore the same uniform with the designation "supervisor" on the shirt as did other supervisory personnel. Thus, holding himself out to the other employees as a supervisor. The service receipt and log forms completed by Chandler are persuasive evidence that Chandler was a supervisor during the critical period in this case. On these forms covering a period from March to October, Chandler listed himself by name as a supervisor and charged his time as a supervisor in addition to the time of one or two equipment technicians. On other forms completed by Chandler covering the period from August to November 1979 and January through February (1980), Chandler charged customers for a supervisor's time as well as the time for one or two service employees. Thus, the inference to be drawn is that Chandler was the only person at these customer jobsites to direct the work of Respondent's service employees who were also listed on the forms. Since there was no evidence to the contrary, a finding that Chandler was not a supervisor during 1979 and 1980 would mean that Respondent's service employee's worked away from Respondent's facility at a customer site without any supervision. Therefore, I find that Chandler was the only person in many instances that was available at customer jobsites to direct the work of service crew employees. I further find that Chandler assigned work to service crew employees and directed their work. He effectively recommended wage increases and job promotions. I also find that he was in many cases Respondent's representative at the customer's place of business and in that capacity was responsible for satisfactory completion of the work.

[8] Respondent's witnesses could not testify as to actually when the schedule for February 21 was prepared. However, other record evidence indicates that the schedule for the next day is prepared the night before. I find that Respondent hired Tim Doogan and David Doogan to replace Andrus and Ciukaj on February 21 and 22, and neither replacement drove for Respondent until February 25 and 26.

Accordingly, I find that James Chandler on the critical date at issue herein was a supervisor within the meaning of Section 2(11) of the Act. Based upon this finding, I hereby dismiss allegations V(b) and (c) of the complaint and the amended allegation with respect to the granting of the wage increase to Chandler on or about April 21.

4. Ron Pavlowski

After observing the witnesses demeanor with the respect to all the testimony given in support of these allegations and the denials by Respondent's witnesses, I credit Respondent's witnesses over the uncorroborated testimony of Pavlowski. According to Pavlowski the alleged statements were made to him in April and May, however, he did not come forward or make any attempt to offer this evidence for over 6 months. In addition to the reasons already cited, it is noteworthy that Pavlowski could recall very little of the conversation in Johnny's 83 Bar on May 20 except the bare allegations.

Dann testified that sometime in April he asked Pavlowski what he thought the outcome of the election would be. In the context of this case I do not find this to be interrogation and a violation of Section 8(a)(1).

Bevin admits stating to Pavlowski that, "If the Union was here there might not be any work." I view this statement as an expression of Bevin's opinion but not a threat. In support of my finding, I note that Pavlowski was asked whether or not Bevin ever threatened to discharge him and Pavlowski answered no.

Accordingly, based upon the above findings, I conclude that the General Counsel has not carried the burden of proof by a preponderance of the evidence with respect to these allegations and hereby dismiss all the amended allegations; namely, paragraphs V(d), (e), (f), (g), and the amended allegation involving Randy Dann.

G. The Objections[9]

The petition was filed on February 25. A Stipulation for Certification Upon Consent Election Agreement was approved on April 1. Thereafter a secret-ballot election was held on May 20. The polls closed at 7 p.m. on May 20 and the election results were as follows: Approximate number of eligible voters 19, void ballots 0, for petitioner 3, against petitioner 14, challenged ballots 4. The election was conducted in the following unit of employees:

> All full-time and regular part-time drivers, yard employees, mechanics and service crew employees employed at the employer's facility presently located at Main and Park Road, Lemont, Illinois, but excluding all office clerical employees, sales persons, supervisors, including service supervisors and service engineers, guards and professional employees as defined in the Act.

Thereafter, timely objections to the election were filed by the Union. All the objections were overruled by the Regional Director with Board approval with the exception of the following:

Objection 2 that the Employer interrogated its employees concerning their Union and/or protected, concerted activities.

Objection 5 that the Employer improperly threatened employees.

Objection 6 that the Employer engaged in surveillance of the employees union activities.

That portion of Objection 7 relating to the discharge of Andrus and Ciukaj.

The allegations contained in Objections 2, 5, and 6 were the same as the allegations in the unfair labor practice hearing which I considered and dismissed. The issue relating to the discharge of Andrus and Ciukaj was resolved by my finding that they were terminated on February 19, which was prior to the filing of the petition. Accordingly, I overrule all of the Union's objections in their entirety and recommend that the Board certify the result of the election.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. By discharging Robert Andrus and Florian Ciukaj on February 19, for engaging in protected concerted activities, the Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

4. The aforesaid unfair labor practice is an unfair labor practice affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

5. Except as found above, Respondent has not engaged in other unfair labor practices as alleged.

6. Following the filing of the representation petition on February 25, Respondent has not engaged in conduct which would warrant setting aside the election held on May 20 and the direction of a second election.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I recommend that it be required to cease and desist therefrom and from any other unlawful conduct, and that it post an appropriate notice, attached hereto as "Appendix." It is further recommended Respondent make whole employees Robert Andrus and Florian Ciukaj for any loss of pay as a result of the discrimination against them and reinstate them to their former positions without loss of seniority or other benefits to the extent that Respondent has not already done so. Said backpay is to be computed in the manner prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Company, 90 NLRB 289 (1950) and Florida Steel Corporation, 231 NLRB 651 (1977). See, generally, Isis Plumbing & Heating Co., 139 NLRB 716 (1962).

[9] On January 14, 1981, the Union Petitioner filed what amounts to a motion to have the amended allegations included in the objections to the election although this conduct was not specifically alleged in the objections. It appears to me that granting such a motion would be tantamount to permitting the filing of untimely objections. This is especially true in this case where the motion was made after the region's investigation was completed, the Regional Director's report on objections issued and the Board ruled on petitioners' objections. I am therefore dismissing the motion Albuquerque Publishing Company, 219 NLRB 631 (1975).

Based on the foregoing findings of fact, conclusions of law, and the entire record herein, and pursuant to Section 10(c) of the Act, I hereby issue the following recommended:

ORDER[10]

The Respondent, Browning-Ferris Industries, Chemical Services, Inc., its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Interfering with the rights of employees to engage in protected concerted activity by discharging them in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

(b) In any other manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their right to self organization, to form, join, or assist any labor organization, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in other concerted activities for the purposes of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection, or to refrain from any or all such activities.

2. Take the following affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Make employees Robert Andrus and Florian Ciukaj whole in the manner set forth in the section entitled "The Remedy."

(b) Post at its Lemont, Illinois, facility copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[11] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 13, after being duly signed by Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by Respondent immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Notify the Regional Director for Region 13, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps Respondent has taken to comply herewith.

[10] In the event no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Rules and Regulations of the National Labor Relations Board, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order herein shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules and Regulations, be adopted by the Board and become its findings, conclusions, and Order, and all objections thereto shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[11] In the event that this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On June 13, 1980, Administrative Law Judge Irwin Kaplan issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, Respondent Local Union No. 46 Metallic Lathers and Reinforcing Iron Workers, herein called Local 46, Respondent Wood, Wire and Metal Lathers' International, herein called the International Lathers, and Respondent United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, herein called the Carpenters, filed exceptions and supporting briefs. The General Counsel filed a brief in support of the Administrative Law Judge's Decision.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and briefs[2] and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings,[3] and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge, as modified below.

We agree with the Administrative Law Judge's conclusion that Respondent Local 46 and Respondent International Lathers violated Section 8(b)(1)(B) by barring Local 46 members Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott from serving as foremen for 1 year.

Union discipline of a member who serves as an employer representative within the meaning of Section 8(b)(1)(B) violates that section only when it "may adversely affect the supervisor's conduct in performing the duties of, and acting in the capacity as, grievance adjuster or collective bargainer on behalf of the employer."[4] There can be no doubt that the discipline imposed in this case had such adverse effect, since it totally barred Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott from serving as foremen and performing representative functions on behalf of their employers.[5] The employers were therefore "restrained and coerced" within the literal meaning of Section 8(b)(1)(B).

Nevertheless, Respondent Local 46 contends that the discipline was lawful since it was motivated by Cahill's, Murtha's, and McDermott's conduct as union members and was neither directed at, nor related to, their conduct as foremen. We disagree. While Respondents had a legitimate interest in disciplining Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott as union members for their disruptive behavior at a meeting, their obligation was to do so in a manner consistent with all the provisions of the Act. And, as the Administrative Law Judge noted, a fine or other penalty which would not have adversely affected any employer's choice of its representatives could have been imposed lawfully. By their discipline, Respondents dictated to the actual and potential employers of Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott who their foremen could not be, an unwarranted and unlawful intrusion on an employer concern specifically protected by Section 8(b)(1)(B).[6] In this regard, it is immaterial whether Local 46 exerted pressure directly on any of the employers to remove Cahill, Murtha, or McDermott. Restraint or coercion under Section 8(b)(1)(B) does not require economic pressure directed at an employer but can be accomplished by internal union discipline which reasonably tends to deprive an employer of the right to select its representative.[7]

We also agree with the findings that the Carpenters, as the successor to the International Lathers, should be responsible for remedying the unfair labor practices of that organization. In so finding, the Administrative Law Judge applied the Board's

[2] The Carpenters has requested oral argument. This request is hereby denied as the record, the exceptions, and the briefs adequately present the issues and the positions of the parties.

[3] The Carpenters and Local 46 have excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Administrative Law Judge. It is the Board's established policy not to overrule an administrative law judge's resolutions with respect to credibility unless the clear preponderance of all of the relevant evidence convinces us that the resolutions are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, Inc., 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing his findings.

[5] The record, particularly the collective-bargaining agreement, the Local 46 constitution, and the testimony of Local 46 Business Agent Ryan, supports the Administrative Law Judge's conclusion that the position of foreman contained the authority to adjust grievances and therefore rendered Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott, as supervisors, employer representatives within the meaning of Sec. 8(b)(1)(B).

> . . . this subsection would not permit a union to dictate who shall represent an employer in the settlement of employee grievances, or to compel the removal of a personnel director or supervisor who has been delegated the function of settling grievances. Perma Vinyl doctrine,[8] which states that a bona fide successor employer which has knowledge of pending unfair labor practices at the time of its purchase of the predecessor's business should be responsible for remedying those unfair labor practices.

In a union affiliation context, the victims of unfair labor practices are as without a meaningful remedy as are unfair labor practice victims when title to an employing business changes hands. Here, the International Lathers is no longer a viable organization capable of remedying its violations of the Act. And the Carpenters, which has taken the International Lathers place, is not just the best, but the only organization capable of doing so.[9] Finally, the employing industry has not changed "insofar as the victims of past unfair labor practices are concerned, or the need for remedying those unfair labor practices."[10] Thus, like the Administrative Law Judge, we see no policy reasons not to apply the Perma Vinyl doctrine in the context of a union affiliation.

We disagree, however, with the Administrative Law Judge's recommended Order against the Lathing Subdivision of the Carpenters. The Administrative Law Judge found that, pursuant to the affiliation between the International Lathers and the Carpenters, the International Lathers continued primarily intact as the Lathing Subdivision of the Carpenters, without commingling of funds. He therefore reasoned that, as a matter of equity, the Lathing Subdivision should be primarily liable for remedying the International Lathers unfair labor practices, while the Carpenters, which engaged in no wrongdoing, should be secondarily liable. Contrary to the Administrative Law Judge, the issue of whether the Lathing Subdivision, as distinct from the Carpenters as a whole, was the successsor to the International Lathers was neither alleged nor litigated.[11] Since there is no basis for distinguishing between the Carpenters and its Lathing Subdivision as the successor, we shall delete the Order against the subdivision and order only that the Carpenters be liable for remedying the unfair labor practices of the International Lathers.[12] As a matter of equity, we shall also order that the Carpenters liability be secondary to, rather than joint and several with, that of Local 46. The Carpenters itself engaged in no wrongdoing and Local 46, the primary wrongdoer, never affiliated with the Carpenters.[13]

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board hereby orders:

A. Respondent Local Union No. 46 Metallic Lathers and Reinforcing Iron Workers, New York, New York, its officers, agents, and representatives, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Restraining or coercing employer members of the Cement League, The Building Contractors Association, Inc., and Dic Concrete Corporation, John T. Brady and Co., Inc., J.P.D. Construction Co., Inc., or any other employer, in the selection of its representatives for the purpose of collective bargaining or the adjustment of grievances by threatening to suspend, suspending, or trying otherwise to cause the removal of such representatives from performing supervisory, executive, or managerial functions for said employers.

(b) Publicizing reports, findings, and recommendations of union officials to members which tend to coerce and restrain them in the exercise of their rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act.

(c) In any like or related manner restraining or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action which is necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Make Michael Cahill, William Murtha, and Lawrence McDermott whole for any loss of earnings and benefits suffered by reason of the unfair labor pratices committed against them in the manner described in the section of the Administrative Law Judge's Decision entitled "The Remedy."

(b) Notify, in writing, Michael Cahill, William Murtha, and Lawrence McDermott and their former employers, Dic Concrete Corporation, John T. Brady and Co., Inc., and J.P.D. Construction Co., Inc., that it has no objection to these named individuals serving as foremen.

(c) Post at its offices and meeting halls copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix A."[14]

[9] In terms of its obligation to remedy unfair labor practices committed herein, Local 46 exists as a joint wrongdoer with, not a replacement for, the International Lathers.

[11] While the General Counsel, in his brief to the Administrative Law Judge, argued that the International Lathers continued largely intact as the Lathing Subdivision, he did not allege or argue that the Carpenters liability should be based on anything other than its status as a successor.

[12] Since the Carpenters is a bona fide successor and engaged in no wrongdoing, we shall not order it to cease and desist from engaging in unfair labor practices. Further, since Local 46 was not part of the affiliation between the International Lathers and the Carpenters, there is no reason to order that the Carpenters notify employers that it does not object to the employment of Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott as foremen.

(a) Make Michael Cahill, William Murtha, and Lawrence McDermott whole for any loss of earnings and benefits suffered by reason of the unfair labor practices committed by its predecessor Wood, Wire and Metal Lathers' International Union, provided that the action required in this subparagraph shall be required of Respondent Carpenters only to the extent that Respondent Local 46 shall fail to do so.

(b) Post at its officers copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix B."[15] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 2, after being duly signed by its authorized representative, shall be posted by said Respondent immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to members are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Deliver to the Regional Director for Region 2 signed copies of said notice in sufficient number for posting by Dic Concrete Corporation, John T. Brady and Co., Inc., and J.P.D. Construction Co., Inc., said employers willing, at all locations where notices to employees are customarily posted.

(d) Notify the Regional Director for Region 2, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps Respondent Carpenters has taken to comply herewith.

UNITED BROTHERHOOD OF CARPENTERS AND JOINERS OF AMERICA

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

IRWIN KAPLAN, Administrative Law Judge: This case was heard by me in New York, New York, on September 13 and October 29, 30, and 31, 1979. The charge in Case 2-CB-7620 was filed by Michael Cahill, an individual, on January 17, 1979, alleging in essence that Local Union No. 46 Metallic Lathers and Reinforcing Iron Workers (herein Local 46) deprived Michael Cahill, William Murtha, and Lawrence McDermott of their status as foremen for Dic Concrete Corporation (herein Dic), John T. Brady and Co., Inc. (herein Brady), and J.P.D. Construction Co., Inc. (herein J.P.D.), respectively, for a period of 1 year because of their conduct at a union meeting in violation of Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (B) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended (herein the Act). On April 3, 1979, Michael Cahill filed a new charge in Case 2-CB-7767 against Wood, Wire and Metal Lathers' International (herein the International) and United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America[1] (herein the Carpenters) alleging in essence that on or about October 20, 1978, the International and the Carpenters also violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (B) of the Act by ratifying in part the penalties imposed by Local 46 which resulted in the removal of Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott as foremen for their respective employers.

The charges in Cases 2-CB-7620 and 2-CB-7767 gave rise to the issuance of complaints and notices of hearing on March 30 (amended May 30) and May 30, 1979, respectively. The aforenoted cases were then consolidated by Order on May 30, 1979, and amended at the hearing to include, inter alia, the Carpenters as a successor and additional Respondent for the purposes of liability insofar as the alleged unfair labor practices were committed by the International. (G.C. Exh. 1(p).)

The answers (amended at the hearing) filed by the International and Local 46 admit, inter alia, jurisdiction and the status of the labor organizations but deny the commission of any of the alleged unfair labor practices. Also, in dispute is the status of foremen within the meaning of Section 8(b)(1)(B) of the Act.

With respect to the Carpenters, liability is denied principally on the basis that said Carpenters denies any knowledge of alleged unfair labor practices committed by the International before the affiliation which took place on or about August 7, 1979. Further, the Carpenters contends that it was not timely and properly named as a respondent. The Carpenters does not contest jurisdiction. (G.C. Exh. 1(n), p. 2.)

Issues

The principal issues are:

1. Whether Michael Cahill, William Murtha, and Lawrence McDermott as foremen were representatives of their respective employers for the purposes of collective bargaining or the adjustment of grievances within the meaning of Section 8(b)(1)(B) of the Act.
2. Whether Local 46, by its executive board and membership, restrained and coerced employers in the selection of their employer representatives for the purposes of collective bargaining or the adjustment of grievances in violation of Section 8(b)(1)(B) of the Act.
3. Whether the International violated Section 8(b)(1)(B) of the Act by endorsing the suspensions imposed by Local 46 on Michael Cahill, William Murtha, and Lawrence McDermott.
4. Whether the acts of Local 46 and the International in suspending Michael Cahill, William Murtha, and Lawrence McDermott as foremen, in the circumstances of this case, also tend to restrain and coerce employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed by Section 7 of the Act, thereby violating additionally Section 8(b)(1)(A).
5. Whether Local 46 independently violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act on or about October 20 by its recording secretary's reading to the union membership the report, recommendation, and decision of International representatives with regard to the suspensions of Michael Cahill, William Murtha, and Lawrence McDermott.
6. Whether the Carpenters are liable as a successor to the International for the alleged unfair labor practices committed by said International prior to affiliation.[2]

Upon the entire record, including my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and after careful consideration of the post-trial briefs, I find as follows:

[1] The consolidated complaint was amended at the hearing to join United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America as an additional Respondent.

[2] Other issues as well as the Carpenters contention that it was not timely or properly named as a respondent and was otherwise denied due process will also be treated infra.

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

The Cement League (herein the League) is an association of employers who are engaged in general contracting and concrete contracting in the building and construction industry. The Building Contractors Association, Inc. (herein the Association), is an association of employers who are engaged in general contracting in the building and construction industry. The League and the Association exist, inter alia , for the purpose of representing their employer-members in collective bargaining and of administering collective-bargaining agreements on behalf of their employer-members with various labor organizations, including Local 46.

Dic Concrete Corporation, a New York corporation, is a concrete subcontractor involved in constructing residential, commercial, industrial, and office facilities and maintains its principal office in Hicksville, New York. Annually, Dic derives gross revenue in excess of $500,000 in connection with its operations described above. Further, it annually purchases goods and supplies in excess of $50,000 to be used for its New York operations directly from points outside the State of New York. At all times material herein Dic has been a constituent member of the League.

John T. Brady and Co., Inc., a New York corporation, has maintained its principal office in New Rochell, New York, and various other places of business in the State of New York. III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Background and Sequence of Events

At all times material herein Local 46 has maintained a collective-bargaining relationship with Brady and Dic, members of multiemployer associations (the Association and the League) and with J.P.D. covering all employees employed as lathers. Local 46's most recent contracts with these companies by their terms were effective from July 1, 1978, to June 30, 1981 (G.C. Exhs. 4 and 5). At a union meeting on June 30, 1978,[5] 1 month before the most recent contracts became effective, a fight broke out over contract ratification involving from 50 to 100 members, including Michael Cahill, William Murtha, and Lawrence McDermott.

Business Manager James Maher and four business agents of Local 46, including John Ryan, submitted a statement regarding the June 30 incident to Fred LeMoine, recording secretary, to read at the July 11 local union meeting. The statement put the membership on notice that the union officials intended to file internal union charges against Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott for assertedly engaging in, inter alia, physical and verbal abuse of the local union officers at the earlier meeting of June 30 in violation of sections 96 and 102 of the International Union's constitution and section 6 of Local 46's constitution. (See G.C. Exh. 6.) Shortly thereafter, Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott received formal notice of the aforenoted charges and notice that a hearing would be conducted before the executive board on August 18 on these charges. (G.C. Exhs. 7(a), (b), and (c).)

On August 18, Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott appeared before the Local 46 executive board and gave their account of the June 30 meeting. Later that day they learned that they were found guilty of the charges and as a penalty they could not serve as a foreman or shop steward for 2 years.[6] Formal notice of the executive board's action was received a short time later. The formal notices contained, inter alia, information relative to appeal procedures and notification that the executive board's recommended action in terms of penalties "will be presented to the General Membership for acceptance, modification or rejection at the next regular meeting," which was scheduled for September 12 at the Local 46 union hall. (G.C. Exhs. 9(a), (b), and (c).)

[3] By the time of the hearing, Local 46 had severed its relationship with Wood, Wire and Metal Lathers' International and had affiliated with the International Association of Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Iron Workers (herein the Iron Workers). The Iron Workers were not named as a party and did not appear.

[4] The International and the Carpenters admit and I find that on or about August 7, 1979, the International affiliated with the Carpenters. Further, the record reveals and I find that the International became the Lathing Subdivision of the Carpenters.

[6] At the time of the executive board hearing, Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott were foremen for Dic, Brady, and J.P.D., respectively. The relevant collective-bargaining agreements expressly include "foremen" in the unit description. (See G.C. Exh. 4, p. 1, art. II, par. 1.) As previously noted, however, the General Counsel contends that foremen are agents, supervisors, and representatives of employers for the purpose of adjustment of grievances within the meaning of Sec. 8(b)(1)(B). The status of these disputed individuals as foremen vis-a-vis Sec. 8(b)(1)(B) will be treated more fully in a separate section below.

Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott retained an attorney and contemplated seeking recourse in the Federal courts in the event the membership accepted the executive board's recommendations. According to Murtha, on September 8, while he was still a foreman for Brady at the Ossining Sewage Disposal jobsite, he had a long conversation with Business Agent Ryan wherein the latter told him, inter alia, that he would have "big problems" and faced ostracism by the union membership for retaining an attorney and going outside the Union for help.[7] Ryan testified that he told Murtha that he did not want to discuss the matter and denied telling Murtha that if he pursued his case in court he would be ostracized by the union membership. On September 11, Cahill visited with Business Manager Maher to dissuade him from encouraging the union membership to accept the recommendations of the executive board but was unable to do so. McDermott testified that he told (J.P.D.) Superintendent Jimmy Lynch on September 12 that commencing the next day there was a possibility that he would be precluded from serving as foreman because the union membership was going to vote that night on the executive board's recommendations. According to McDermott, Lynch told him that, if he could no longer serve as foreman, his services were not needed.

At the union membership meeting of September 12, Business Manager Maher and other local union officials spoke in favor of the executive board's recommendations and asked that they be adopted. Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott were all in attendance at this meeting and asked the membership to amend the findings of the executive board, but this was not done and the union membership voted to accept the recommendations. The next day, September 13, Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott were no longer foremen for their respective employers.

On the morning of September 13, Cahill appeared for work at Dic's Manhattan jobsite and met with Superintendent Thomas Lynom. According to Cahill, while he and Lynom were discussing the membership vote of the previous evening, Shop Steward Ray Hill came over and advised that he had just come from the union hall and Business Agent Ryan had told him that Cahill could not be the foreman. Cahill testified that Lynom told Hill that he knew of "the findings" and he was going to relieve him (Cahill) as foreman as of then. Ryan denied that he ever had a conversation with Ray Hill with regard to Cahill's serving as foreman.[8]

According to Murtha and (Brady) Superintendent Leahy, the latter told Murtha on September 13 that he could no longer be foreman because the membership upheld the action of the executive board.[9] Leahy testified, however, that he also knew that the constitution provided a further appeal to the International and he called the local union hall for clarification in terms of whether Murtha had to be relieved as foreman immediately or whether he could continue to serve in that capacity pending an appeal. According to Leahy, Business Manager Maher told him that consistent with union practice once the membership upholds the executive board a person is no longer a foreman and he, Leahy, had to relieve Murtha from that position as of that day. Maher's version of the conversation was somewhat different. According to Maher, Leahy asked him whether there would be any further communications from the executive board regarding Murtha's status and in response thereto he stated, "Buddy [Leahy is also known as Buddy], you were at the meeting last night and you heard the body uphold the determination of the Executive Board." Maher testified that Leahy in turn asked, "That's it," and he responded, "That's it," and that was the end of the conversation.

Leahy asserted that he immediately transmitted the substance of what Maher told him to Murtha and that he, Leahy, therefore had to appoint a new foreman. However, Leahy asked Murtha, his longtime friend, whether he would be willing to stay on the job as a journeyman and Murtha accepted the offer.[10]

McDermott testified that he called Lynch on September 13 and advised Lynch that the membership had found him (McDermott) "guilty" and he therefore could not serve as foreman that morning, to which Lynch responded that "[McDermott's] services were no longer needed."

On September 13, the same day that Cahill, McDermott, and Murtha were removed as foremen, they filed a suit in the Southern District of New York to enjoin Local 46 from "directly or indirectly, threatening or attempting to suspend or to prevent the employment of the [Charging Parties] as foremen." (G.C. Exh. 12, p. 4.) They also requested, inter alia, punitive damages in the sum of $500,000. (Id.) Further, that same day, Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott, pursuant to section 47 of the Local's constitution (G.C. Exh. 2, pp. 36–38), by telegram appealed the action taken by Local 46 to General President Charles Brodeur of the International.

By letter dated September 22, General President Brodeur responded to the aforenoted appeal and notified Cahill, McDermott, and Murtha that he had designated International Representative John L. Diver to conduct a hearing on said appeal on September 27. (G.C. Exh. 13.) He also acknowledged therein that he had been informed of the pending injunction and damage suit that they had brought against Local 46. (Id.)

The hearing on the appeal was conducted as scheduled on September 27 and in attendance were the Local 46 union officials who brought the initial charges, members of Local 46's executive board, and Cahill, McDermott, and Murtha. By letter dated October 16, International Representative Diver submitted his report and recommendations to General President Brodeur upholding the action and penalties imposed by Local 46 but recommending that the 2-year suspension of Cahill, McDermott, and Murtha as foremen be reduced to a 1-year suspension. (G.C. Exh. 14, pp. 7 and 8.)

[7] The General Counsel contends that Ryan's statements to Murtha on September 8 constituted a separate violation of Sec. 8(b)(1)(B).

[8] Neither Superintendent Lynom nor Shop Steward Hill testified. The General Counsel represented that Lynom was subpenaed but failed to appear. In any event no request was made for time to enforce the subpena. None of the parties explained the failure to call Hill as a witness.

[9] The record reveals that Leahy has long been a member of Local 46 and attended the union meeting on September 12.

[10] The record discloses that foremen receive, inter alia, $5 a day more than journeymen and $100 a week in expenses whether expenses are actually incurred or not.

By letter dated October 20, General President Brodeur notified Cahill, McDermott, and Murtha that he had adopted International Representative Diver's report and recommendations in their entirety and advised them that his decision was subject to a further appeal to the executive council of the International within 30 days. (G.C. Exh. 15.) An appeal was taken to the executive council but was rejected. (Resp. Carpenters Exh. 6, p. 38.)

At a local union meeting in October, Local 46 Recording Secretary LeMoine read to the membership both the report and recommendations of International Representative Diver and General President Brodeur's letter dated October 20 adopting the report and recommendations.[11]

B. Discussion and Conclusions

1. Whether Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott, as foremen, were employer representatives within the meaning of Section 8(b)(1)(B)[12]

Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott testified that as foremen they had, inter alia, the authority to assign work, to resolve grievances, and to hire, layoff, and discharge employees. Murtha's immediate superior (Brady) Superintendent Leahy, the only one of the superintendents to testify, substantially corroborated Murtha's testimony and confirmed that Murtha's responsibilities at the Ossining Sewage Disposal jobsite included the hiring and firing of employees.[13] Further, for almost one half of the approximately 5- to 6-week period in which Murtha was employed as foreman on the Ossining job, he alone directed the work of lathers; Leahy was on vacation for approximately 2-1/2 weeks.

With regard to processing grievances, only Cahill testified that he had been involved in their adjustment, although Murtha and McDermott asserted that they had the authority to do so. Murtha's testimony was corroborated by Superintendent Leahy. Cahill credibly testified and without contradiction that he and Shop Steward Raymond Hill[14] had been involved in adjusting at least five grievances which for the most part related to safety matters on the job. According to Cahill, if he and the shop steward were unable to resolve a grievance, the business agent would then be contacted to intervene. Business Agent Ryan confirmed that this was the acceptable procedure.[15]

The record also discloses that foremen receive, inter alia, $5 a day more than journeymen, $100 a week in expenses, and pay for holidays and days lost due to inclement weather which are not provided journeymen under the contract. (G.C. Exh. 4, p. 3.)

On the other hand, the record reveals some factors which tend to militate against a finding that the disputed individuals were statutory supervisors. Thus, it is noted that under the collective-bargaining agreement foremen are expressly included in the unit description.[16] (Id. at 1.) Further, much of the testimony adduced from the disputed individuals (particularly McDermott) was conclusionary. However, on the basis of the entire record, I am persuaded and I find that the disputed individuals possessed the degree of independent power necessary to satisfy the requirements of supervisory status within the meaning of Section 2(11) of the Act.[17]

I am also convinced on the state of this record that the disputed individuals, as foremen, were employer representatives for the purpose of adjusting grievances. While Business Agent Ryan characterized the grievances that these foremen handled as "minor ones," he conceded that they included job assignments. In any event it is not the gravity of grievances that is significant but rather the fact that foremen are involved in their adjustment which serves as the basis for their qualification as employer representatives within the meaning of Section 8(b)(1)(B). As observed by Administrative Law Judge Leff:

> The employer's bargaining obligation under the Act is as much applicable to minor employee grievances as to major ones. So, too, is management's need for representation in their consideration and adjustment.[18]

Ryan also explained that a foreman unlike other unit employees is hired by the contractor. Thus, on the jobsite, Ryan considered the foreman as a representative of the contractor. In these circumstances and on the basis of the entire record, I find that Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott, as foremen, were employer "representatives for the purpose of adjusting grievances" within the scope of Section 8(b)(1)(B) of the Act.

[11] The General Counsel contends that the reading of this material to the membership by itself constitutes a separate violation of Sec. 8(b)(1)(A).

[12] Sec. 8(b)(1)(B) makes it an unfair labor practice for a union "to restrain or coerce . . . an employer in the selection of his representatives for the purpose of collective bargaining or the adjustment of grievances."

[13] While the record discloses that Local 46 maintains an exclusive hiring hall, it is also noted that by contract the employer retains the "absolute and unconditional right to reject any workman referred by the Union . . . [and] shall have the absolute right to lay off any employee . . . either because of lack of work or the Employer's determination that the employee does not have the ability to perform the required tasks." (See G.C. Exh. 5, p. 5, art. VIII.)

[14] As noted previously, no explanation was advanced for the failure to call Hill as a witness. The complaint alleges, the record reveals, and I find that at all times material herein Hill, as shop steward, was an agent of Local 46, acting on its behalf. See Miscellaneous Drivers and Helpers Local 610, affiliated with International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America (Bianco Manufacturing Co., a Division of Falcon Products, Inc.), 236 NLRB 1048, 1049, fn. 5. (1978).

[15] This procedure is also spelled out in the constitution and bylaws of Local 46, which in pertinent part reads as follows:

RULES GOVERNING SHOP STEWARDS

Section 59

> Rule 4. Where the Steward and Foreman cannot agree, the Steward is not to stop the work but shall immediately get in touch with the Business Agent." (See G.C. Exh. 2, p. 44.)

[16] This factor standing alone does not negate a finding of supervisory status within the meaning of Sec. 2(11) of the Act. See, e.g., Florida Power & Light Co. v. International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local 641, et al., 417 U.S. 790 (1974); San Francisco-Oakland Mailers' Union No. 18, International Typographical Union (Northwest Publications, Inc.), 172 NLRB 2173, fn. 2 (1968).

[17] The constitution and bylaws of Local 46 tend to confirm this conclusion by stating in relevant part that "the hire and discharge of all lathers shall be the responsibility of the foremen." (G.C. Exh. 2, p. 24, sec. 20.)

[18] Columbia Typographical Union No. 101, International Typographical Union of North America, AFL-CIO (The Washington Post Company), 207 NLRB 841, 847 (1973), affd. 220 NLRB 1177 (1975).

2. The role of Local 46 in causing the removal of Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott as foremen

The record clearly establishes that Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott last worked as foremen on September 12 because of the acts and conduct engaged in by Local 46. This was manifest in the first instance by internal union measures in the form of charges against the above-named foremen, a hearing on said charges before Local 46's executive board, and finally, on September 12, membership ratification of the executive board's recommendations which included suspending these foremen for a 2-year period.

On September 13, Local 46 officials engaged in a more direct approach to ensure that the suspensions of Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott were implemented. Thus, Cahill credibly testified that, on the morning of September 13 while he was in the presence of (Dic) Superintendent Lynom, Shop Steward Hill encountered them with instructions from Business Agent Ryan that Cahill could not be the foreman. Lynom, a longtime union member, acknowledged to Hill that he knew of the Union's action and then relieved Cahill as foreman.[19] The credited testimony also discloses that on the same morning Business Manager Maher told (Brady) Superintendent Leahy that he had to relieve Murtha as foreman.[20] As noted previously, Leahy asked Murtha, his longtime friend, whether he would be willing to stay on the job as a journeyman and Murtha accepted the offer.

With regard to McDermott, there is no evidence tending to show that any union official spoke to his immediate superior (J.P.D.) Superintendent Lynch. McDermott notified Lynch on September 13 that the union membership upheld the guilty finding against him and he therefore could not serve as foreman. McDermott was then terminated.

On the basis of the foregoing and on the entire record, noting particularly the vulnerability of the foremen and superintendents as union members in terms of penalties, benefits, and adverse publicity, the conclusion is inescapable, and I find, that the removal of Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott as foremen on or about September 13 was predicated solely on union pressure, both direct and indirect.[21]

3. The International's role

The record discloses that on September 13 the suspended foremen appealed the action taken by Local 46 to General President Brodeur of the International. It is undisputed that the International was not involved in any disciplinary measures against these suspended foremen prior thereto.

Brodeur designated International Representative Diver to conduct a hearing on the appeal on September 27. The hearing was conducted before Hearing Officer Diver as scheduled with Local 46 officials and the suspended foremen presenting their respective arguments. By letter dated October 16, Diver submitted his report and recommendations to Brodeur. Diver recommended "that the finding of guilt by the Executive Board and the membership of Local 46 . . . be upheld" (G.C. Exh. 14, p. 4) but modified the term of suspension from 2 years to 1 year (Id. at p. 8). By letter dated October 20, Brodeur notified the suspended foremen that he had adopted Hearing Officer Diver's report and recommendations in their entirety. Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott's final appeal to the executive council of the International was also rejected.

As noted above, the International ratified the disciplinary measures of Local 46 which included suspending the foremen. I find that, by the International's giving its imprimatur to the appropriateness of "suspensions" as a disciplinary measure (albeit a reduced term), the acts and conduct of Local 46 vis-a-vis the suspensions are also chargeable to said International.[22]

4. Whether Local 46 and the International restrained and coerced employers within the intent of Section 8(b)(1)(B)

Having determined that the suspended foremen are employer representatives within the meaning of Section 8(b)(1)(B) and having further determined that Local 46 and the International are responsible for eliminating them as foremen for their respective employers, it must now be determined in the circumstances of this case whether Local 46 and the International thereby violated Section 8(b)(1)(B).

It is well settled that a union may not with impunity under Section 8(b)(1)(B) discipline its supervisor-members who are employer representatives for the purpose of collective bargaining or the adjustment of grievances for reasons related to, or growing out of, their supervisory responsibilities.[23] The matter at bar, however, is not a garden variety 8(b)(1)(B) case. It is not contended nor does the record reveal that the disciplinary measures taken against the suspended foremen were related to their activities as employer representatives. Rather, the record discloses that Local 46 invoked discipline solely because the foremen were aggressive combatants in a physical fight in an attack on union officials over contract ratification. Cahill apologized to the membership for this conduct at a subsequent union meeting. The foremen attended the union contract ratification meeting as union members, not employer representatives, and they were perceived only as union members by Local 46.[24]

[19] As noted previously, neither Lynom nor Hill testified. However, as I have heretofore found that at all times material herein Hill, as shop steward, was an agent of Local 46 acting on its behalf, I further find it appropriate to draw an adverse inference against Local 46 by its failure to call him as a witness. Further, I was unimpressed with Ryan's overall demeanor and reject his denial that he had a conversation with Hill concerning the removal of Cahill as foreman.

[20] Union Business Agent Ryan testified that superintendents are union members and as such receive certain unspecified fringe benefits. Superintendent Leahy, a longtime union member, testified as follows:

> The union had suspended him [Murtha] from being a foreman. I was the superintendent of the job and a union member. I took an oath by my Constitution and By-Laws to be a union member and to protect the union. The union said Mr. Murtha was no longer to be able to be a foreman, so I relieved Mr. Murtha from being a foreman.

[23] See American Broadcasting Companies v. Writers Guild of America, West, Inc., supra; ITO Corporation of Rhode Island, Inc., 246 NLRB 810 (1979); Local Union No. 841, International Union of Operating Engineers, AFL-CIO (M. L. Arnold Steel Company), 203 NLRB 429 (1973).

It is now well settled that Section 8(b)(1)(B) does not per se proscribe union discipline on supervisor-members.[25] In Florida Light, the Supreme Court upheld the union's right to fine its supervisor-members for performing unit work during a lawful strike. The Court observed as follows:

> Nowhere in the legislative history is there to be found any implication that Congress sought to extend protection to the employer from union restraint or coercion when engaged in any activity other than the selection of its representatives for the purpose of collective bargaining and grievance adjustment. The conclusion is thus inescapable that a union's discipline of one of its members who is a supervisory employee can constitute a violation of § 8(b)(1)(B) only when that discipline may adversely affect the supervisors conduct in performing the duties of, and acting in his capacity as, grievance adjuster or collective bargainer on behalf of the employer.[26] [Emphasis supplied.]

In a post-Florida Light case, where it was alleged that the union fined a supervisor-member in violation of Section 8(b)(1)(B), the Board stated:

> We recognize that a union's discipline of a supervisor-member falls outside the proscription of Section 8(b)(1)(B) where the offense occasioning the discipline involves a matter purely of internal union administration, unrelated either directly or indirectly to any dispute between the union and the employer. . . . This rule results in the finding of no violation where, for instance, a supervisor-member is disciplined for failing to pay his union dues or for disturbing a union meeting.[27] [Emphasis supplied.]

As noted previously, the suspended foremen were disciplined solely because of the disruptive tactics they engaged in at a union meeting not as employer representatives but as union members. If the disciplinary measures in the circumstances of this case were confined to a fine or some other similar penalty then clearly such conduct would not be proscribed by Section 8(b)(1)(B).

In the case at hand, however, no fine was imposed but rather the action taken was directed at employment status; to wit, suspending Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott as foremen. As a result of the membership vote upholding the executive board's "guilty" findings and recommended penalties which included "suspensions," McDermott obediently removed himself as foreman. He then advised his superior, Superintendent Lynch, of Local 46's action and was terminated. With regard to Cahill and Murtha, the membership's action on September 12 was followed by more direct pressure on employers to remove these individuals as foremen.[28] Thus, union officials told Superintendents Lynom and Leahy (also union members) on September 13 to relieve Cahill and Murtha, respectively.

The Board found in Northwest Publications[29] that union pressure on supervisory personnel violated Section 8(b)(1)(B), notwithstanding the fact that the union was not directly urging the replacement of the foremen. The Board reasoned:

> That Respondent may have sought the substitution of attitudes rather than persons, and may have exerted its pressures upon the Charging Party by indirect rather than direct means, cannot alter the ultimate fact that pressure was exerted here for the purpose of interfering with the Charging Party's control over its representatives. Realistically, the employer would have to replace its foremen or face de facto nonrepresentation by them.[30]

This case does not turn on the legitimacy of the reasons for the invocation of discipline on the foremen-members as contended by counsel for Local 46 and the International but rather whether such discipline may adversely affect their performance as employer representatives within the meaning of Section 8(b)(1)(B).[31] The consummate act in depriving an employer of a selected representative is to effectively remove that representative from the employer's control. Given the internal or institutional union pressures noted previously, the disciplinary action taken herein was tantamount to eliminating the suspended foremen as employer representatives.

[28] As noted previously, the General Counsel contends that Local 46 independently violated Sec. 8(b)(1)(B) by Business Agent Ryan's threatening Murtha on or about September 8 with "big problems" and that he would be "ostracized by the membership" if he went outside the Union to fight the impending suspension. Ryan admitted that Murtha told him that he was contemplating recourse in court in the event the membership upheld the suspension but denied threatening Murtha. According to Ryan, he told Murtha that he did not want to discuss the matter. I find it highly unlikely that Ryan would have passed up this opportunity to make some comment in response to Murtha's contemplated legal action or at least to offer a plausible reason as to why he refrained from doing so. In these circumstances and as I have previously noted that I was unimpressed with Ryan's demeanor, I credit Murtha's account and find that Ryan threatened him as alleged.

In sum, I find that, by suspending Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott and by taking steps to ensure compliance therewith, Local 46 and the International effectively deprived employers of their selected representatives within the meaning of Section 8(b)(1)(B). Accordingly, I find that Local 46 and the International violated Section 8(b)(1)(B) as alleged.

5. Whether Local 46 and the International violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) as alleged

As previously noted, the discipline administered to Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott by Local 46 and the International was based on their involvement in a physical fight with union officials at a union ratification meeting and not because of their opposition to the union leadership and/or contract ratification. It is not contended nor does the record reveal that these individuals were engaged in protected concerted activities.

The problem, however, is that this case involves much more than mere internal union discipline; it involves the employment status of the three individuals and other potential supervisor-members. Thus, the record discloses that journeymen lathers consistent with the operation of Local 46's exclusive hiring hall may be employed as rank-and-file employees on one job and as foremen on another. This fluctuation from supervisory to nonsupervisory position has also been experienced by Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott. Cahill and Murtha both reverted to journeymen status for the same employers the day they were removed as foremen. Further, the record discloses that foremen are expressly included in the bargaining unit description and receive certain benefits under the collective-bargaining agreement. While the Board in such circumstances has declined to find 8(b)(2) violations because the individuals involved were statutory supervisors, on the other hand, where, as in the instant case, such conduct coercively impacts on all unit employees by causing them to fear similar union control over employment status and related benefits, such conduct restrains and coerces them within the meaning of Section 8(b)(1)(A).[32]

As noted above, Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott fluctuated from supervisory to nonsupervisory jobs. I find in agreement with the General Counsel that the same 8(b)(1)(B) conduct described previously also constitutes violations of Section 8(b)(1)(A) vis-a-vis Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott insofar as such conduct tends to restrain and coerce them under the exclusive hiring hall procedures in their nonsupervisory capacities.[33]

Still further, the General Counsel contends that Local 46 independently violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) by its recording secretary's reading of the hearing officer's report to the membership at a union meeting on October 19, which, inter alia, upheld the "guilty" findings against Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott and recommended that they be "suspended" as foremen for 1 year. In IATSE, Local 659,[34] cited by the General Counsel, the Board found the disputed individuals to be employees and not supervisors within the meaning of the Act but observed, in pertinent part, as follows:

> Moreover, even if Coleman and Lapenicks were supervisors, we would still find the action directed against them by Respondent to be unlawful because of its impact on employees. The record shows that "Daily Variety," a publication distributed principally to employees in the motion picture industry in Los Angeles County, contained articles relating to Respondent's refusal to permit the hiring of Colman and Lapenicks . . . . In addition, the charges in this case were read to members at regular meetings. It can reaeonably be concluded that the discrimination thus directed by Respondent Union created an impact on other employees, the natural consequence of which was to restrain and coerce them with respect to their Section 7 rights, in violation of Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act.[35] [Emphasis supplied.]

Significantly, in IATSE, Local 659, the respondent union's discrimination was not predicated on opposition to union leadership or other forms of protected concerted activities but rather was based on the manner in which the respondent union maintained and applied its seniority roster. In this regard, the respondent union refused to give the disputed individuals experience credits for jobs worked for companies not under contract with respondent union and thereby restricted their employment opportunities based strickly on union considerations.

Similarly, in the case at bar, Local 46 and the International restricted the employment opportunities of Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott by denying them the opportunities of working as foremen for 1 year. Thus, here, too, as in IATSE, Local 659, employment opportunities were predicated on union considerations. Further, Local 46, by publicizing this action to the membership at the meeting of October 19, perpetuated the impact it had previously created on employees when Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott were first suspended and removed as foremen. In these circumstances, the natural consequence of Local 46's action was to restrain and coerce its members with respect to their Section 7 rights in violation of Section 8(b)(1)(A) as alleged. Accordingly, I find that Local 46 independently violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) by reading the hearing officer's report to the membership on or about October 24.

6. The Carpenters liability

a. Due process

Counsel for the Carpenters contends that it was denied due process by a failure of the General Counsel to provide adequate notice of the allegations and an opportunity to defend against them. In this regard, he asserts that the Carpenters was not served with a copy of the charge or a complaint naming said Carpenters as a respondent.

Counsel for the General Counsel represented that less than 2 weeks before the hearing opened he learned for the first time from counsel for the International that the International had merged with the Carpenters or was in the process of doing so. By letter dated September 7, 1979 (6 days before the hearing), counsel for the General Counsel served all parties, including the Carpenters, with a notice of intention to amend the complaint in Case 2-CB-7767 to name the Carpenters as a "successor" to the International and as an additional respondent for purposes of liability only. A copy of the complaint was enclosed for the Carpenters. The Carpenters appeared "specially" at the hearing by counsel for the International who objected to the amendments citing Section 102.20 of the Board's Rules and Regulations and Statements of Procedure, Series 8, as amended, which provides for the filing of an answer within 10 days. He represented that the Carpenters had only received the complaint 2 days before the scheduled hearing date and moved for a continuance to October 30. The amendments were received over objection with leave, however, for the Carpenters to file an answer within 10 days. Further and in order to provide the Carpenters with a reasonable opportunity to prepare for hearing, I granted the continuance of approximately 7 weeks. The Carpenters filed a timely answer (G.C. Exh. 1(n)) and appeared with counsel when the hearing reconvened on October 29, fully participating therein.

With regard to the failure to provide service of the charge and complaint naming the Carpenters as a respondent, it is undisputed that a copy of the complaint naming the International as Respondent and also naming Charles Brodeur as general president and an agent thereof was served on the Carpenters before the hearing opened. This complaint was amended early in the hearing and before any testimony was adduced to name Brodeur also as agent of the Carpenters in his capacity as assistant to the general president of the Carpenters. The charge giving rise to this complaint named Brodeur as the union representative to contact (G.C. Exh. 1(c)) and service thereof was admitted in the International's answer (G.C. Exh. 1(m)). In view of the foregoing and noting that the Carpenters fully participated at the hearing, I find that it had timely actual notice.[36] It is also noted that counsel for the Carpenters did not request additional time to meet the issues of the consolidated complaint and all amendments thereto, although he was told that a reasonable request might be entertained. In these circumstances, and on the basis of the entire record, I reject the Carpenters contention that it was denied due process or that it was otherwise prejudiced with respect to litigating the allegations in the complaint.[37] Accordingly, its motion to dismiss the complaint insofar as it relates to the Carpenters is hereby denied.

b. Liability

The record discloses, as described more fully below, that contemporaneous with affiliation, the International became a subdivision of the Carpenters and the latter organization became the "successor" entity. The General Counsel asserted that the Carpenters had knowledge of the alleged unfair labor practices committed by the International at the time of affiliation. He contends therefore that under the principles and rationale enunciated by the Board in Perma Vinyl[38] and the Supreme Court's decision in Golden State[39] (citing with approval the Board's Perma Vinyl doctrine) the Carpenters is jointly and severally liable with the International for the latter's unfair labor practices.

Under the Board's Perma Vinyl doctrine a "successor" employer who was a bona fide purchaser but with knowledge of the predecessor offending employer's unfair labor practices at the time of the transaction is held responsible for remedying its predecessor's unlawful conduct.[40]

Counsel for the Carpenters contends principally that it is unprecedented and unwarranted to extend the Perma Vinyl doctrine to an International Union (the Carpenters), where, as here, it assertedly did not have actual knowledge of the unfair labor practices prior to affiliation and, in any event, Local 46 still exists as a viable entity capable of providing a full remedy.

Insofar as the threshold question of whether the Carpenters had "knowledge," I find on the basis of the totality of the record that it is fair and reasonable to infer such knowledge, noting particularly that Brodeur, who became assistant to the general president of the Carpenters and an agent thereof at the time of affiliation, was also largely responsible for committing the unfair labor practices as general president and agent of the International. This is better understood by noting the events and circumstances which gave rise to the affiliation and Brodeur's agency status on behalf of the Carpenters.

For a number of years the International explored the possibility of affiliating with the Iron Workers and the Carpenters and engaged in separate negotiations with both organizations toward that end. The record discloses that there was substantial movement toward affiliation between the International and the Carpenters in September and October 1978 with an agreement in principle having been reached at a third session in January 1979. The International was represented at these sessions by General President Brodeur, Secretary-Treasurer Michael Brennen, and Vice President Harry Sullivan, whereas the Carpenters were represented by General President William Sidell, First General Vice President William Konyha, and Second General Vice President Campbell. Campbell testified that, in addition to the agreement in principle on affiliation and in connection therewith, a proposal was made for Brodeur to head up the lathers' division for the Carpenters.

[36] For reasons discussed more fully below, I find that, at all times material herein, Brodeur was an agent of the Carpenters. Cf. American Steamship Company, a Subsidiary of General American Transportation Corporation, 222 NLRB 1226, 1230-31 (1976).

On April 3, 1979, Cahill filed the charges in Case 2-CB-7767[41] against the International (service admitted) naming Brodeur as the union representative to contact. Brodeur testified that he "turn[ed] this situation over to his attorney for consideration" and conceded that he "thought" that the International was named in the charge. Further, he testified that his attorney, Markowitz (who also represents Local 46) was involved in the final drafting of the affiliation agreement. On April 13, 1979, representatives of the International and the Carpenters signed this affiliation agreement, which, inter alia, provided:

> 4. A Lathing Subdivision will be created within the Carpenters which will consist of all former Lathers Local Unions. The General President of the Lathers [Brodeur] will assume the title of Assistant to the General President of Carpenters, and shall supervise the activities of the Lathing Subdivision.
> The three International Representatives of Lathers shall be integrated into the International staff of Carpenters, and their primary duties and assignments shall be in the service of the Lathing Subdivision of Carpenters.[42] [G.C. Exh. 17., p. 1.]

Campbell, second general vice president for the Carpenters, testified that Brodeur acknowledged in April, at the time the above-noted affiliation agreement was finalized, that he would be working for the Carpenters. According to Brodeur, however, he never advised the Carpenters about the charges against the International because he was preoccupied with matters relating to affiliation and because he believed that the charges were really the responsibility of Local 46. As Brodeur also testified that he was under the impression the International was named as "a party" in the complaint,[43] I find his explanation incredible and not worthy of belief.[44] In this regard it is also noted that Brodeur conceded that he "probably" discussed the charges with his attorney after they had been forwarded. While Campbell denied any knowledge of the charges against the International, it is noted that neither General President Sidell nor any other Carpenter official testified. Campbell also testified that General Counsel McGowen of the Carpenters and Markowitz worked together on finalizing the "legal language" in the affiliation agreement on April 12 or 13. Thus, counsel for the respective Unions were in contact approximately 10 days after the charges against the International were filed, which further tends to support an inference that the Carpenters learned of the charges before affiliation was achieved, particularly in the absence of record testimony by these individuals denying such knowledge. Brodeur, for example, testified that he spoke with General President Sidell on a number of occasions after the last formal negotiating session on affiliation in January 1979, but before affiliation was finally achieved on August 7, 1979, and maintained that the charges against the International were never discussed.[45] As noted above, Sidell did not testify.

It is well settled that the burden is on the "successor" to establish that when it took over the operations of its predecessor it was without knowledge of the offending predecessor's unfair labor practices.[46]

As General President Sidell and other key Carpenter officials failed to testify and as I have previously rejected Brodeur's denial that he had informed the Carpenters, I am unpersuaded that the Carpenters established that it lacked knowledge of the charges at the time of affiliation. Moreover, the record discloses, as noted above, that Brodeur knew in April after the charges were filed against the International that he would be supervising the lathers as a subdivision of the Carpenters pending ratification by the International membership. He also knew before August 7, when affiliation was finally achieved and he assumed the title of assistant to the general president of the Carpenters, that the International was a "party" to the complaint and that he, too, was personally named therein. In these circumstances, I find it fair and reasonable at all times material herein to impute the knowledge of Brodeur of the charges against the International to the Carpenters. In any event, for the reasons noted previously and on the basis of the entire record, I find in agreement with the General Counsel that the weight of the credible evidence supports the inference that Brodeur informed the Carpenters of the charges before August 7 when affiliation was completed.[47]

Having determined that the Carpenters became a "successor" with knowledge of pending litigation against the International when the latter affiliated and became a subdivision, I further find that it is responsible for remedying the unfair labor practices of the International.[48] How-

[42] International Representative Diver, the hearing officer who recommended that Brodeur suspend the foremen, was one of the three International representatives employed by the Carpenters.

[45] I place no significance on Brodeur's testimony that Sidell on one such occasion requested a copy of the International's financial statement (without giving a reason for the request) because Brodeur also asserted that the International did not maintain formal records reflecting pending litigation. Moreover, Brodeur admitted that no one from the Carpenters ever asked him whether the International was involved in the pending litigation.

ever, as the Perma Vinyl doctrine is predicated on principles in equity,[49] as the Carpenters has not engaged in any wrongdoing, and as it appears that the International has largely remained intact as a subdivision of the Carpenters without the commingling of funds, I shall recommend that the Lathers' subdivision of the Carpenters and Local 46 be jointly and severally liable and the Carpenters secondarily liable to remedy the unfair labor practices found herein.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The League, the Association, Dic, Brady, and J.P.D. are now, and have been at all times material herein, employers engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. Respondents are labor organizations within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. On or about August 7, 1979, the International affiliated with the Carpenters and became a subdivision thereof,[50] with the Carpenters emerging as the "successor" entity.

4. Michael Cahill, William Murtha, and Lawrence McDermott, at all times material herein, have been employer representatives within the meaning of Section 8(b)(1)(B) of the Act.

5. Local 46[51] has violated Section 8(b)(1)(B) of the Act by invoking its constitution to cause the suspension of Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott as foremen for their respective employers, by independently coercing McDermott to accept the impending suspension, and by demanding that employers remove these individuals as foremen during the period of their suspension. By such conduct and by additionally publicizing to its membership the report and recommendations of the International's hearing officer, which included suspending Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott as foremen for 1 year, Local 46 has also restrained and coerced employees and potential supervisors with respect to their Section 7 rights under the Act in violation of Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act.

6. The International has violated Section 8(b)(1)(B) of the Act by adopting the hearing officer's recommendation that Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott be suspended as foremen for 1 year, thereby further enforcing the unlawful action taken by Local 46. By such conduct, the International has also restrained and coerced employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act in violation of Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act.

7. The Carpenters is secondarily responsible for remedying the unfair labor practices committed by the International.

8. The aforesaid unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

IV. THE EFFECT OF THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES UPON COMMERCE

The activities of Respondents set forth in section III, above, occurring in connection with the operations of the Employers named and described in section I, above, have a close, intimate, and substantial relationship to trade, traffic, and commerce among the several States and tend to lead to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow of commerce.

V. THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondents Local 46 and the International have engaged in certain unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (B) of the Act, I shall recommend that they be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and to take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

Having found that Local 46 and the International were responsible for unlawfully seeking and obtaining the removal of Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott as foremen for their respective employers by, inter alia, suspending them as foremen in violation of Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (B) of the Act, I shall recommend that they cease and desist therefrom and that they be ordered to notify the suspended foremen and their former employers, Dic, Brady, and J.P.D., in writing, that they have no objection to their serving as foremen. As the 1-year suspension for Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott has long past, and noting that they were employed at jobsites in the construction industry with the strong likelihood that the work that they were assigned to supervise has long been completed, I shall not recommend that they be ordered reinstated to their former positions. However, I shall recommend that Local 46 and the International be jointly and severally liable to make Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott whole for any loss of earnings and benefits they may have suffered by reason of their suspensions and removal as foremen.[52] With regard to the Carpenters, I have found for reasons previously stated that it is liable as a "successor" to the International; but, noting, inter alia, that the International has largely remained intact as a subdivision of the Carpenters with its own funds, I shall recommend that the Carpenters only be held secondarily liable for the unfair labor practices committed by the International for the purpose of making Cahill, Murtha, and McDermott whole for the backpay due in the manner set forth hereinabove.

I shall also recommend for reasons stated in Hickmott Foods, Inc, 242 NLRB 1357 (1979), that Local 46 and the International be ordered to cease and desist in any like or related manner from restraining or coercing employees in the excercise of the rights guarenteed them in Section 7 of the Act.

October 28, 1981

DECISION AND ORDER

By Members Fanning, Jenkins, and Zimmerman

On December 17, 1980, Administrative Law Judge James M. Kennedy issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, the General Counsel filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and Respondent filed an answering brief.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions[2] of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge and hereby orders that the complaint be, and it hereby is, dismissed in its entirety.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

James M. Kennedy, Administrative Law Judge: This case was heard before me in Denver, Colorado, on August 12-14, 1980, pursuant to a complaint issued by the Regional Director for Region 27 for the National Labor Relations Board on February 19, 1980, and which is based on a charge filed by United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipefitting Industry of the United States and Canada, AFL-CIO, Local Union No. 208 (herein called the Union), on January 8, 1980. The complaint alleges that Haynes-Trane Service Agency, Inc. (herein called Respondent), has engaged in certain violations of Section 8(a)(1), (3), (4), and (5) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended (herein called the Act).

[1] At fn. 10 of his Decision, the Administrative Law Judge stated that, according to its president, Fred Haynes, Respondent never sent employee Charles W. Ledford a warning letter regarding alleged threats to management because Ledford's suspension had been deemed warning enough. The record shows that Ledford was suspended solely because he refused to report to a temporary job assignment in Denver. Haynes' testimony that Ledford's suspension was considered warning enough was in the context that no useful purpose would have been served by disciplining Ledford for a second act of alleged misconduct at a time when he was being subjected to more severe discipline for an earlier act. Haynes did not suggest that Ledford's alleged threats motivated his suspension in any way.

[2] The General Counsel has excepted, inter alia, to the Administrative Law Judge's conclusion that Respondent did not violate Sec. 8(a)(4) and (1) of the Act by discharging employee Ledford. In support of this exception, the General Counsel points to certain testimony the Administrative Law Judge did not discuss which appears to establish some link between a threat Ledford made to file charges with the Board and his dismissal.

Service Manager Jan Aldrich testified on cross-examination that a letter was drafted, but never sent, which would have warned Ledford that continued threats to management personnel would result in his discharge. The letter reads as follows:

> Dear Mr. Ledford:
> On——occasions in the recent weeks you have made various threats to other management personnel in this company, apparently in connection with the charges you have filed with the NLRB. On October 23, in a phone conversation with Bill Watkins regarding your failure to accept a temporary assignment to Denver, you threatened that "Someone's head is going to be broken."
> The company cannot ignore or tolerate such threats. This letter should be considered by you as a serious reprimand of your conduct, and because you are already on a week's suspension without pay, no further action will be taken. However, any recurrence of threats, abusive, or insubordinate conduct will result in your immediate discharge.

Aldrich further testified that included among the threats contemplated by the letter were threats of civil action and bodily harm and a threat Ledford had made concerning the filing of charges with the Board. The General Counsel argues that, because one of the four reasons for discharge listed on Ledford's memorandum of dismissal was "Insubordination in the form of both passive and active threats to management, and a challenge by yourself for management to discharge you," Respondent must have terminated Ledford for attempting to exercise his rights under the Act as it stated it would do in its earlier letters.

Aldrich's testimony does in fact raise the possibility that, in drafting Ledford's dismissal memo, Respondent may have taken into account Ledford's threat to file NLRB charges as well as other unprotected threats. However, careful examination of the circumstances surrounding Ledford's dismissal establishes that Ledford's threat to file NLRB charges did not play a motivating role in his discharge.

On the morning of October 22, 1979, Ledford refused to report to a temporary job assignment in Denver. Later that day, he was notified by wire that he would be suspended for 1 week if he did not report to the Denver job the following day. On October 23, Ledford again refused to report. As a result, he was suspended from October 24 through October 31. Ledford returned to work on November 1, and was again ordered to report to a Denver job. Respondent accepted his excuse that he could not go to Denver that day for personal reasons. However, when Ledford again declined to go to Denver the next day, he was discharged. This sequence of events persuades us that Ledford's termination was precipitated by his repeated refusal to accept temporary work assignments in Denver. Thus, under the test adopted in Wright Line, a Division of Wright Line, Inc., 251 NLRB 1083, 1089 (1980), enfd. N.L.R.B. v. Wright Line, 662 F.2d 899 (1st Cir. 1981), we are compelled to conclude that the General Counsel has not made "a prima facie showing sufficient to support the inference that protected conduct was a 'motivating factor'" in Respondent's decision to discharge Ledford.

Because the General Counsel has failed to make a prima facie case, in which event the issues treated in Wright Line do not arise, Member Jenkins does not consider Wright Line pertinent.

Member Zimmerman agrees that Respondent did not violate Sec. 8(a)(4) and (1) of the Act. He finds that, through the testimony of Service Manager Jan Aldrich, the General Counsel made a prima facie showing that protected conduct was a motivating factor in Respondent's decision to discharge employee Ledford. The mention of the filing of NLRB charges in a proposed letter of discipline 1 week prior to the discharge, coupled with the repetition of the same language regarding "threats" in the actual dismissal letter, supports the inference that protected conduct was a motivating factor for the discharge. However, he further finds that Respondent established that it would have discharged Ledford for repeated refusals to accept temporary work assignments even in the absence of his protected conduct.

Issues

The principal issue is whether Respondent discriminatorily ordered its employee Charles W. "Bill" Ledford to transfer from its Colorado Springs office to its Denver headquarters as a reprisal for its employees' having chosen representation by the Union. When Ledford refused to transfer, he was suspended; he refused a second time and was thereafter discharged. Thus, a sequential issue is whether or not those acts were likewise unlawful. In an alternative theory the General Counsel has alleged that Respondent took its action against Ledford because he participated in a representation case hearing. Finally, as a third alternative, there is the allegation that the decision to transfer Ledford was a unilateral change in working conditions and designed to undermine the Union's majority status.

All parties were given full opportunity to participate, to introduce relevant evidence, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, to argue orally, and to file briefs. Briefs, which have been carefully considered, were filed on behalf of all parties.

Upon the entire record of the case, and from my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. THE BUSINESS OF RESPONDENT

Respondent admits it is a Colorado corporation engaged in the sale, installation, and service of heating and air conditioning equipment having its headquarters in Englewood, Colorado, and a subsidiary office in Colorado Springs. It further admits that during the past year, in the course and conduct of its business, it has purchased and received goods and materials valued in excess of $100,000 from suppliers outside Colorado. Accordingly it admits, and I find, that it is an employer engaged in commerce and in a business affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

Respondent admits, and I find, that the Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Background and Participants

Respondent is a heating and air-conditioning sales and service business which holds an exclusive Trane Company franchise for the State of Colorado and parts of Wyoming and Nebraska. As noted its headquarters are in Englewood (a suburb on the south side of Denver)[1] and it has a subsidiary office in Colorado Springs. In addition it has another subsidiary office in Cheyenne, Wyoming. The business is divided into two sections, the sale of new Trane Company equipment and the service of heating and air-conditioning equipment manufactured not only by Trane but by others. This case involves the service end of Respondent's business.

Respondent's entire operation is run by its president, Fred Haynes. His assistants with respect to the service agency are Controller William Watkins and Service Manager Jan Aldrich. Under Aldrich are field supervisors and so-called "service engineers," i.e., those individuals actually engaged in installation and/or repair of equipment.

The Colorado Springs office was also divided into the two divisions but was much smaller. During the period in question it had two or three sales persons, including a sales manager, two service engineers, including the alleged discriminatee, Bill Ledford, and two office workers who provided clerical support to both sides of the business. Until August 1979,[2] Ledford was in charge of the Colorado Springs service operation. For some period prior to the transactions to be described herein, he reported directly to Aldrich. However, the Denver operation also had an intermediate field supervisor who had direct supervision of the service engineers and who reported directly to Aldrich. Ledford did not report to him until August. At that time the field supervisor was Greg Koenig.[3]

B. The Union Organizing Drive and the Election

On April 25 Respondent issued a new policies and procedures statement with respect to the employer-employee relationship. On April 27 a group of employees, including Ledford, met with Fred Haynes to discuss the new policies. Dissatisfied with the changes and with management's responses the employees met at a nearby restaurant and discussed the possibility of seeking union representation. Ledford's participation in both meetings was not remarkable as compared to any other employee's. He later signed a union authorization card, but so did most of the other employees. A petition was filed by the Union and on June 12 a hearing was conducted in Denver with respect to it. One of the issues was the question of whether or not Ledford, as the head of the Colorado Springs service operation, was a supervisor within the meaning of Section 2(11) of the Act and whether he was properly includable in the voting unit. Through counsel Respondent sought a continuance of that hearing because it conflicted with a previously scheduled trade show in which Respondent was a participant, but the hearing officer denied the motion. Respondent thereupon did not participate further in the hearing.

Ledford, aware that his status was an issue, had left work that day to attend the hearing. He testified with respect to his duties at Colorado Springs and subsequently the Regional Director issued a Decision and Direction of Election which, among other things, found him not to be a supervisor. A mail election was arranged and the ballots sent to all eligible voters on July 27. On August 10 the returned ballots were opened and counted. The election result showed that the Union had obtained a majority and the Regional Director 10 days later certified the Union as the exclusive bargaining representative of the service engineers unit, covering the Denver, Colorado Springs, and Cheyenne offices.

[1] The parties refer to the Englewood headquarters as the "Denver" office. That terminology will be followed herein.

[3] The Cheyenne operation, which is not really pertinent here, was run by one individual who handled both service and sales.

C. Ledford's Employment at Colorado Springs

Ledford was originally hired by Respondent in 1979 and worked in the Denver office as a service engineer until 1976 when he was transferred to Colorado Springs. From 1976 to 1978 he was the only service engineer in Colorado Springs and was supervised by the manager of that operation, Dick Logue. In mid-1978 Respondent hired Mike Edde who was trained momentarily in Denver and then assigned to Colorado Springs. Shortly thereafter Logue resigned and Ledford became the service manager.[4] He held that position until August 27, 1979, when the senior clerical in Colorado Springs, Lois Gysin, became service coordinator and Ledford began reporting directly to Greg Koenig.

Also on that day Jan Aldrich, the service manager, informed Ledford that he was to relocate in Denver by December 1, 3 months hence. The only reason Aldrich gave Ledford for the decision was "economic considerations." Ledford contends that Aldrich said nothing further, but there is reason to believe that Aldrich either told Ledford, or that it was a company policy well known to Ledford because of his 1976 transfer, that Respondent would assume most, if not all, the costs of his relocation. Ledford testified that the decision came as a "total suprise."

That evening Ledford decided to ask Respondent's officials to reconsider their decision. His family had become well situated[5] in Colorado Springs and he had no desire to leave that city. He says he first called President Haynes at his home and told him he did not wish to move back to Denver. He told Haynes that he felt the decision was "a union reprisal"; they also discussed other matters including his assertion that he and the Colorado Springs office had been "more or less kept in the dark as to what the profit pictures were." Haynes told Ledford that the decision stood and that it was an economic consideration. Ledford later called Aldrich and had a similar discussion with him, also to no avail. Ledford testified that in both conversations he asserted he had made an agreement with the Company in 1976 when he had moved to Colorado Springs that if he liked that city he could stay. He says another agreement was reached in 1978 when Edde was assigned to that office. The second agreement was to the effect that in the event it became necessary to rotate an individual back to Denver it would be Edde, not him. Ledford says both Haynes and Aldrich professed lack of knowledge of such agreements. Their testimony, as well as Watkins', is similar; they knew of no such agreements.[6] On this record there is no evidence, other than Ledford's testimony, that either agreement existed.

On cross-examination Ledford explained the basis of his accusation to Haynes that the transfer was "a union reprisal." He said that the events which led him to that conclusion involved "times when we were ostracized by the Company." On further examination he said the Company's treatment of him was "an ignoring [sic] . . . very little was said to us."

On August 14, 4 days after the ballots were counted, Aldrich went to Colorado Springs. He met with Ledford at a local pancake house and a conversation covering a number of topics occurred. According to Ledford, Aldrich principally "discussed the union." Ledford says Aldrich told him "the guys had brought he [sic] and Fred [Haynes] to their knees with the Union, with voting in the Union." Ledford recalled Aldrich also said, "[Haynes] wouldn't have to sign an agreement. He just had to negotiate." In the same conversation, according to Ledford, Aldrich also told him that "the union vote is behind us, and that seemed to take up a lot of everyone's time . . . and let's continue with the work now."

Aldrich agrees that on August 14 he met with Ledford in Colorado Springs. He had gone there to review some job files and had picked up six files to examine. He recalled the pancake house conversation somewhat differently and places different emphasis on it. He remembers that when he spoke to employees, including Ledford, during that period it was common for them to quickly bring up the Union as a topic. He said he and other supervisors had been instructed to avoid conversations of that nature but it was hard to do so because of the employees' persistence. He remembers the conversation in question as occurring in the following manner.

> The way I recall, Mr. Ledford alluded to the fact that now we are union, we are going to do this, this, and this. I said, as I understand it, let me explain the position: we are not union, we are committed to sit down and bargain in good faith to establish a contract; we may end up establishing the existing contract, we may forge a new contract; I don't know, but we're not union. We are committed to sit down and bargain in good faith.

With respect to Ledford's testimony that he had said something to the effect that the Union had brought Haynes and him "to their knees," Aldrich said, "I may have used that expression. I can't honestly say that I said it, but I may have."

Between August 27 and mid-October Ledford's employment continued in the normal fashion with one exception. At some point Ledford decided he would not transfer to Denver though he may have hoped Respondent would change its corporate mind about requiring him to do so. On September 27 he signed a trade name affidavit, actually filing it on October 2 with the County Clerk, establishing a trade name for a new heating and air-conditioning business, Service Engineering, of which he was to be the proprietor. In addition there is his testimony that he had obtained a $90 receipt dated September 28 from the telephone company as a deposit on a business telephone. Also, he made an arrangement with the telephone company to buy a large Yellow Pages advertisement for Service Engineering. The dates of these activities are not quite clear but appear to have been in late September. On October 18 he established a business bank account for Service Engineering.

[6] Ledford at first testified Aldrich told him the question of such an agreement would be "settled in the courts." Almost immediately he backed off saying that such a remark may have occurred in another conversation with Controller Watkins much later.

Ledford said that on October 18 he had heard from Lois Gysin, who was scheduling the Colorado Springs employees, that he was to work on a Denver area job beginning Monday, October 22. He also said Koenig told him officially of that assignment on October 19. (Gysin also said she first told Ledford of the assignment on October 19 and described that conversation in some detail.) Koenig says it was either on October 18 or 19 that he told Ledford he was scheduled for a Denver job involving 2 days' work. Koenig testified Ledford responded saying he would not go to the job and that he had received advice that a temporary job in Denver was the same as a transfer and, if he acquiesced, it would be used against him in some fashion. Koenig also reported that Ledford told him the transfer was not part of "the deal" and if anyone were to go to a Denver job it should be Edde. Koenig replied he was unaware of any "deal"; Koenig later testified such arrangements did not exist for anyone else.

On October 22 Ledford refused to go to the Denver jobsite. It should be noted here that Ledford had possession of a company truck and regularly used it to commute from his home to work as well as driving it to various worksites. He was expected to drive the truck to the Denver job. He claims Koenig had said he would not be entitled to travel pay while enroute between Colorado Springs and the Denver site. Koenig was not asked that particular question, but Haynes said it is company policy to pay employees their standard hourly rate while engaged in lengthy commutes. The April 25 policies and procedures memo permitted an employee a half hour commute time. Ledford deemed that to be insufficient. But that provision seems aimed at the Denver-based employees for Denver-area jobs. It appears unlikely to have had applioation to Ledford who was in the process of being transferred and who was being staged into Denver. Oddly, Ledford never asked Aldrich who could have clarified the matter of travel pay. Haynes testified Ledford would have been on full pay for travel time to Denver during the transfer period. In any event, allowing for the policy's half hour travel time, the amount of money involved herein is probably in the neighborhood of half an hour's pay each direction as Colorado Springs is only approximately 70 miles from Denver. Ultimately Ledford conceded that the question of travel pay was not the reason he refused to report to the Denver site; it was his refusal to work in Denver at all.

Ledford's refusal to go to the Denver job on October 22 was promptly reported to Denver by Gysin. Shortly thereafter Controller Watkins called her back to tell her he had not decided what action to take. Later that day Aldrich sent Ledford a wire (originally telephoned to him, but later put in writing by Western Union) which read as follows:

> This wire will serve notice that because of your failure to report to your assigned job today, you have put the Company's account relationship in jeopardy. You are hereby instructed to report to your assigned job tomorrow. Failure to comply with this directive will result in one week's suspension without pay commencing 10-23-79 and ending 10-31-79.

On October 23 Ledford again refused to go to the Denver site. When Gysin reported his refusal to Denver she was told he was to be suspended; that did not occur immediately as there was some confusion over the exact suspension period. On that day Ledford assigned himself to go with Edde to a Colorado Springs job. His suspension actually began the following day.

On Thursday, November 1, Ledford was to return to work. Again he had been assigned to work a Denver area job. That morning he called Gysin to tell her he would not be leaving his home for some time as the wing window of his truck had been broken. He was afraid someone had broken into it the previous evening, Halloween night, and he needed to determine if any equipment was missing. He told Gysin he was waiting for the police.[7] She reported the situation to Denver and although Watkins thought his reason for not reporting to the Denver site was "flimsy" he tolerated the situation. Edde went to Ledford's home to help him. Ledford did no work that day, although later he and other employees had a discussion at the office with Watkins who had come down on another matter.

On the next day, November 2, Ledford picked up the truck at the Ford dealership where it was being repaired. He testified that, when he attempted to drive it, the motor did not run correctly.[8] He told Gysin that the vehicle was inoperable and he wanted to leave it at the garage for repairs. Either she or someone from Denver told him to get to Denver any way he could, including using Edde's truck, but he refused. She testified that he tried to get her to overrule the Denver assignment, but she would not do so because there was nothing more pressing to do in Colorado Springs. She reported his refusal to Denver and was told that someone would be right down to take care of the matter.

Later that morning Watkins appeared at the Colorado Springs office and discharged Ledford by memo signed by Aldrich. The memo recites four reasons for his discharge. The first and fourth reasons are connected. The first recites that on two occasions he failed to report for temporary job assignments and the fourth says that he had placed a customer's account in jeopardy by working on jobs which are not assigned to him. The second reason given was "questionable reporting of time worked on job assignments" and the third was "insubordination" taking the form of both "passive and active threats to management and a challenge by yourself for management to discharge you."

[7] A police report was never filed. Ledford says that when he told the police nothing was missing they refused to investigate his complaint.

[8] The dealership later reported the truck needed new spark plug wires, but Watkins declined the repair and drove the truck to Denver. The spark plug wires were never replaced, at least within the period pertinent here.

Items one and four encompass his October and November refusals to report to Denver assignments. These have been explicated above. Item two involved two things. The first was a time report for June 12, the day of the National Labor Relations Board's hearing in which Ledford had claimed to have worked a full 8-hour day. However he had been off the entire morning at the Board hearing and had not mentioned his absence to attend the Board hearing on his timecard. This resulted in Aldrich's questioning the timecard. Aldrich "officially" accepted Ledford's explanation that the time had been worked after the hearing had ended. In fact Aldrich continued to doubt Ledford but, not wishing to make an issue of it, let it drop.

The second, and more important, matter covered by item two involved an observation made by Gysin during Ledford's week on suspension. One of Gysin's duties was to perform the paperwork on each work order to collect data and material for proper billings to the customers. Although not particularly perceived by either her or Ledford at Colorado Springs, some of that same data was used by Denver, particularly the controller's office, to determine manpower efficiency. One of the calculations done for that purpose was to compare the number of billable hours per month with the number of hours actually billed. That was done for each job and Colorado Springs had been under some scrutiny since January because of a perceived managerial inefficiency in the service department. According to both Haynes and Watkins it was these figures, together with unfavorable profit projections, which led Haynes to decide to transfer Ledford to Denver in the first place. On August 14 Watkins had taken six files to examine for the purpose of identifying problem areas with respect to profit efficiency. During that time he had explained to Ledford, perhaps in nondetail form, what his concern was. In late October Gysin had occasion to go through similar files and had noticed that enclosures appeared to be stapled to the folders contrary to office practice and that some of the hours charged to the job were not consistent with the hours being submitted by the service engineer, principally Ledford. She thought the files had been doctored in some fashion and thought she detected Ledford's hand (albeit in printed form) where it normally would not be seen. Although uncertain of the situation, she nevertheless reported her observation to Watkins who, on November 1, came to Colorado Springs to conduct an investigation of the matter. After questioning everyone, including Ledford, as to whose handwriting it was, and after determining that recalculation of those hours made Ledford's efficiency appear better than it had been before, Watkins concluded that the individual who was likely to have doctored the forms was Ledford.

I note that the proof which Watkins had against Ledford is hardly conclusive. Nonetheless both he and Aldrich testified that this matter induced them to cite it as one of the reasons for discharging him. It should be observed that an unfair labor practice charge, Case 27-CA-6351, had been filed on September 12 alleging that Respondent's decision to transfer Ledford to Denver was unlawful. The record does not show when that charge was withdrawn, but it is conceivable that if Ledford were aware of the manner in which Respondent went about calculating employee efficiency, and was also aware that such material would be advanced by Respondent as a defense to an unfair labor practice charge, Ledford would understand the matter sufficiently well to realize that changing the underlying data would undermine that defense. Frankly, on this record neither fact has been sufficiently well proven for me to make any findings thereon. Nonetheless Gysin's testimony was not sufficiently shaken by the General Counsel or the Charging Party for me to discredit it; by the same token neither did Respondent clearly prove that Ledford doctored the documents, although he may have had both the motive and opportunity to do so.

The third reason listed in the discharge memo, "insubordination," involved Ledford's refusal to accept assignments as noted above and also included "threats" which are not truly denied by Ledford. These involve statements which he made to Koenig and Watkins to the effect that "heads will be broken." Ledford denies using that exact phraseology but admits he commonly uses the phrase "heads will roll" and concedes he may have used that statement to both those individuals. Respondent also points to a few occasions in which Ledford claimed he was compiling "dirt files" to be used against the Company in the event it carried out its demand that he move to Denver. Ledford denies making such threats but does say he was attempting to keep track of what happened to him in order to support the National Labor Relations Board's charges which had been filed. Finally, Watkins quotes Ledford, on November 1, as having "dared" Respondent to fire him, the challenge which is included in item three. Ledford denies having made that statement.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

In the foregoing section explicating the facts leading up to Ledford's discharge on November 2, I have described those facts which may properly be construed as part of the General Counsel's case-in-chief, together with appropriate dovetailing facts proven by Respondent which should be juxtaposed against it. I have not described with detail the procedure which Respondent says it followed with respect to reaching its decision of August 27 to require Ledford to transfer to Denver. I have not done so because it is not a part of the General Counsel's burden of proof nor is it particularly necessary to discuss the procedure in detail as a response to the General Counsel's proof.

Of course in every case before the Board it is the General Counsel's burden to prove the alleged violation. Here, it is somewhat difficult to follow the General Counsel's alternative theories. First, the General Counsel alleges that Respondent's decision to transfer Ledford as either straightforward reprisal for the election results, for Ledford's own union sympathies, or because he participated in the representation case hearing. The difficulty with these theories is that the principal element of union animus is only ephemeral, if not missing altogether. With respect to the General Counsel's claim that the decision to transfer Ledford violated Respondent's bargaining obligation to the Union, the theory is likewise unclear. Normally a unilateral change case can be made without a showing of animus. Here, however, the General Counsel has alleged that Respondent's purpose was to "undermine" the Union's majority status. These varying approaches to the facts, rather than strengthening the General Counsel's hand, demonstrate its weaknesses instead.

First, there is no particular showing by the General Counsel that Ledford's union activity was any greater than that of any other employee or that Respondent thought so or otherwise had reason to single out Ledford. Indeed, the initial contacts between the employees and management with respect to challenging the April 25 change in policy was made by a Denver employee, Steve Arneson. Haynes knew that. Ledford, though he may have spoken out at that meeting, has not been shown to be any more vocal or vociferous than anyone else. In any event the group's dissatisfaction with Haynes' response did not manifest itself to Haynes' perception as being aimed in a union direction. That direction did not materialize until after the meeting was over. Haynes has not been shown to have known who the union leaders were. Moreover, the General Counsel has not shown Ledford to have been such a leader.

Later, Ledford signed an authorization card, but so did others. And it is true that he participated in the Board hearing testifying to his status as an employee. In that sense Respondent may have deemed him to be in favor of union representation. However, Ledford himself appears to have neutralized that effect when both before and after the election he told Gysin, and others, first that he had not yet made up his mind, and, second, that he had voted against union representation. Thus even though he participated in the representation hearing, Respondent's management, who had been informed by Gysin that Ledford did not favor union representation, could not be sure of his stance. Thus, Respondent's state of knowledge regarding his union feelings and desires was not clear; Ledford sent them deliberately confusing signals. In that circumstance it does not seem likely that Respondent would have picked on Ledford as opposed to anybody else.

Respondent's alleged union animus, according to the General Counsel, can be seen from several angles. First the General Counsel points to the August 14 conversation between Ledford and Aldrich in which Aldrich, 4 days after the ballots were counted, allegedly told Ledford that the Union had brought Haynes and himself "to their knees." Ledford further testified that during that conversation Aldrich remarked that Respondent would not sign a contract with the Union. However, in the same conversation Ledford described Aldrich as having said Respondent would negotiate with the Union.

Ledford quoted Aldrich as saying Haynes "wouldn't have to sign an agreement. He just had to negotiate." In some respects the meaning of these remarks is unclear.[9] Certainly the National Labor Relations Act does not require Respondent to sign any proposal until an agreement is actually reached. Allowing for lay imprecision on Aldrich's part, such a statement contains no animus. If taken as an announced refusal to sign a negotiated agreement, such animus does not necessarily include an intention to discriminate against employees on a hire/tenure basis.

The second sentence—"he just had to negotiate"—likewise does not clearly evidence animus of a hire/tenure nature. Indeed, it can be understood as a recognition of the legal obligation to bargain with the Union, though conveying the likelihood of a hard bargaining stance. Even the statement that the Union had brought company officials "to their knees" is vague as animus evidence.

Aldrich himself says that he told Ledford Respondent was obligated to bargain in good faith and that the outcome of the negotiations could be any number of variables. In a sense, therefore, Ledford's statement that Respondent just had to bargain can be seen as a corroboration of Aldrich's denial. Frankly, if any animus has been shown here, it is more closely related to bargaining positions to be taken shortly, not reprisals against employees.

Other areas of alleged animus can be found, according to the General Counsel, in campaign literature and, apparently, by the fact that Respondent did not participate in the representation case hearing. With respect to the literature, the General Counsel's Exhibit 15, there is no animus whatsoever. Regarding Respondent's failure to participate in the representation case hearing, that failure is adequately explained by the fact that it conflicted with a trade show in which Respondent no doubt had invested a great deal of money. It did seek a continuance, but to no avail. To derive animus from that circumstance would be inappropriate. Also cited as evidence of animus is Ledford's claim that he and Edde were "ignored" after the election. However, the evidence does not show that, and even if it did, it would not amount to animus.[10]

Also mitigating against a conclusion that Respondent had union animus manifesting itself in ordering Ledford's transfer is the manner of the transfer itself. First, Aldrich gave Ledford more than 90 days in which to make the transfer. Respondent had transferred him to Colorado Springs in the first place and considered itself to have the power to transfer him back. In both instances its policy was to cover relocation costs. It was not a transfer designed to force Ledford to quit as it would have been had union animus been the motivating force. It was designed to make it palatable. Second, when Ledford refused the October 22 assignment, it did not act precipitously. It warned him. But Ledford's failure to heed the warning did not even result in his discharge, only a week's suspension. Respondent then tolerated his apparent balk of November 1, though it was suspicious of Ledford's veracity. Respondent clearly did not wish to lose Ledford as an employee. That being the case it is hard to see what Ledford's union sympathies or the majority's selection of the Union had to do with the transfer. The Union had won and had been certified. And, although bargaining had not yet commenced, Ledford's transfer could have had little, if any, impact on it. As Respondent could gain nothing by way of its future relationship with the Union by transferring Ledford, I fail to see any animus here.

[9] Aldrich may have been alluding to the Union's area agreement covering other employers as the expected proposal. Haynes had earlier referred to it in compaign literature dated May 18.

[10] Also in the category of nonconclusive evidence is an unsent letter to Ledford, drafted by counsel for Aldrich's signature, Resp. Exh. 6. That letter was to have served as a warning to Ledford regarding some threats he allegedly had made in October and during the suspension process on October 23. The letter does connect the threats to Ledford's Board charge, but the threats are not clearly described. In any event, the letter was never sent, because, according to Haynes, Ledford had already been suspended, and that was deemed warning enough.

The third element in any discharge case is that of timing. Timing, here, is double-edged. It is true that the decision to transfer Ledford was made only a week after the certification became final and 17 days after the election results were known. But that decision also closely followed a favorable periodic evaluation given Ledford on August 6. Because the evaluation and the retroactive raise that went with it coincided with the last campaign speech before the ballots were mailed and because Aldrich did not wish to be accused of improperly influencing Ledford's vote, he gave it to Ledford in a sealed envelope, offering to have it held by a third person pending the election.

General Counsel does not allege this to have been improper. Furthermore this evaluation is consistent with evaluations given Ledford previously and clearly marked him, if he had not already been so marked, as one of Respondent's best and most qualified service engineers.

That fact ultimately was the reason that Respondent selected him over Edde as the individual to be transferred to Denver. Clearly Denver is a larger market for air-conditioning and heating equipment than Colorado Springs and clearly there would be greater need for an individual of Ledford's skills as opposed to those of Edde's, whose experience was only slightly more than a year in the field. Thus, while it may be argued that the timing of the decision is close to the election results, the manner of selection tends to show that the election had nothing whatsoever to do with the decision. Eespondent was most careful, and took great pains, to avoid being accused of misconduct with respect to Ledford's evaluation. Second, the market situation in Denver required someone of greater skill.[11]

I am, therefore, unable to find that the General Counsel has made out a prima facie case that Respondent discriminated against Ledford either because he was a union activist or because it sought to take a reprisal against the union-represented employees generally. Certainly there is no evidence to show that Ledford's participation in the representation case hearing had anything to do with the decision.[12]

With respect to the 8(a)(5) allegation, once again the proof nears nonexistence. The General Counsel relies on Ledford's testimony that he had an agreement with Respondent to the effect that Edde, not he, would be transferred to Denver should economic circumstances require it. First of all, there is no reason to credit Ledford's testimony to that effect.[13] But, assuming that his testimony is credited, the agreement was a private one between him and Respondent. It was not a term and condition of employment for employees generally. He had negotiated it long before the union organizing drive and it related to him specially, to no one else. Thus, assuming Respondent reneged on that agreement, that act affected only him, not the terms and conditions of the other employees in the bargaining unit. It was not, therefore, a change in working conditions as contemplated by Section 8(a)(5) and 8(d). See Mike O'Connor Chevrolet-Buick-GMC Co., Inc., and Pat O'Connor Chevrolet-Buick-GMC Co., Inc., 209 NLRB 701 at 704 (1974), and Brown & Connelly, Inc., 237 NLRB 271 at 280 (1978). Cf. Orfont Orthodontic Laboratories, Inc., 156 NLRB 49 at 64-66.

And, as with the 8(a)(3) and (4) allegations, supra, the General Counsel's claim that the unilateral change was designed to undermine the Union's majority status depends on a showing of union animus. Here, as there, the evidence is nonexistent. There is no proof whatsoever that Respondent intended to undermine the Union's majority status or that Ledford's transfer would have that forseeable effect. Furthermore, the transfer contemplated Ledford's continued employment in the bargaining unit. Thus, the "undermining the Union" theory also fails for lack of proof.

Accordingly, I have concluded that Respondent did not violate Section 8(a)(1), (3), (4), or (5) of the Act here and I shall recommend dismissal of the entire complaint.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact and upon the entire record in this case, I make the following:

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Respondent, Haynes-Trane Service Agency, Inc., is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.
2. United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipefitting Industry of the United States and Canada, AFL-CIO, Local Union No. 208, is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.
3. Respondent has not engaged in any violations of Section 8(a)(1), (3), (4), or (5) of the Act.

[11] In this respect it should be noted that Respondent has been attempting to recruit experienced service engineers to work in its Denver office for some time. It had also recently experienced a loss of three such employees and had only been able to locate one new individual.

[12] Had Respondent truly wished to take a reprisal against Ledford for testifying in the representation case hearing, it could have done so as he had provided them with ready reason, his failure to note his whereabouts on his June 12 timesheet. That failure did trigger an inquiry by Aldrich, but he let it drop.

[13] With respect to Ledford's credibility generally, I found him to be glib and capable of explaining all questions in an innocent-appearing manner. His testimony must be carefully examined. For example, his denial that he "dared" Respondent to fire him on November 1 cannot be credited. He was already prepared to begin his new business. He had committed time and money to that effort. Once he had made up his mind that he was not going to Denver and had prepared for the worst, his "dare" becomes quite likely. His frustration level was then quite high and his dare, in light of his newly seen independence, is more than a mere possibility. Thus, where credibility matters, I cannot credit Ledford over others. Certainly the General Counsel has provided no reason to discredit Respondent's witnesses when compared to Ledford.

Upon the basis of the foregoing findings of fact and conclusions of law, and upon the entire record in this case, and pursuant to Section 10(c) of the Act, I hereby issue the following recommended:

ORDER[14]

The complaint is dismissed in its entirety.

[14] In the event no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Rules and Regulations of the National Labor Relations Board, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order herein shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules and Regulations, be adopted by the Board and become its findings, conclusions, and Order, and all objections hereto shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

Yellow Transportation Company, a Division of Yellow Cab Cooperative, Inc. and Raul Rodriguez. Case 20-CA-16274

October 29, 1981

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

Upon a charge filed on May 27, 1981, by Raul Rodriguez, an individual, and duly served on Yellow Transportation Company, A Division of Yellow Cab Cooperative, Inc., herein called Respondent, the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, by the Acting Regional Director for Region 20, issued a complaint on June 10, 1981, against Respondent, alleging that Respondent had engaged in and was engaging in unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) and Section 2(6) and (7) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended. Copies of the charge and the complaint and notice of hearing before an administrative law judge were duly served on the parties to this proceeding.

With respect to the unfair labor practices, the complaint alleges in substance that on April 3, 1981, following a Board election in Case 20-RC-15153, Independent Cab Drivers Association was duly certified as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of Respondent's employees in the unit found appropriate;[1] and that, commencing on or about April 20, 1981, and at all times thereafter, Respondent has refused, and continues to date to refuse, to bargain collectively with the Union as the exclusive bargaining representative, although the Union has requested and is requesting it to do so. On June 18, 1981, Respondent filed its answer to the complaint admitting in part, and denying in part, the allegations in the complaint, and raising an affirmative defense.

On June 21, 1981, counsel for the General Counsel filed directly with the Board a Motion for Summary Judgment. Subsequently, on July 31, 1981, the Board issued an order transferring the proceeding to the Board and a Notice To Show Cause why the General Counsel's Motion for Summary Judgment should not be granted. Respondent thereafter filed a response to the Notice To Show Cause.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

Upon the entire record in this proceeding, the Board makes the following:

Ruling on the Motion for Summary Judgment

In its answer Respondent denied the allegations in the complaint that it is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act, that the Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act, and that the unit is appropriate. Respondent denied these allegations on the grounds that the complaint merely stated legal conclusions and failed to state sufficient facts as to require an answer.[2] Respondent also denied that the Union was the exclusive representative of the unit employees. It further denied that it violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act. Respondent admitted that during the calendar year ending December 31, 1980, it derived gross revenues in excess of $500,000, and during the same period it purchased and received at its San Francisco location products, goods, and materials valued in excess of $5,000 directly from points outside the State of California or from other enterprises located within the State each of which other enterprises had received the said products, goods, and materials directly from points outside the State. Respondent also admitted that the Union was certified as the exclusive representative for collective bargaining for the unit of employees described in paragraph 5 of the complaint. Respondent further admitted that on April 15, 1981, the Union requested it to bargain collectively with the Union as the exclusive representative of unit employees with respect to their rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, and other terms and conditions of employment, and that since April 20, 1981, Respondent has failed and refused to recognize and to bargain with the Union.

As an affirmative defense Respondent alleges that the Board's certification in Case 20-RC-15153 was invalid, unlawful, and improper for the reasons set forth in its objections to the election conducted in the underlying representation proceeding. Also in its answer and response to the Board's Notice To Show Cause Respondent asserts that because of the invalid certification it has never been obligated to bargain collectively and that the sole reason for its refusal to bargain is to obtain judicial review of the Board's certification.

[1] Official notice is taken of the record in the representation proceeding, Case 20-RC-15153, as the term "record" is defined in Secs. 102.68 and 102.69(g) of the Board's Rules and Regulations, Series 8, as amended. See LTV Electrosystems, Inc., 166 NLRB 938 (1967), enfd. 388 F.2d 683 (4th Cir. 1968); Golden Age Beverage Co., 167 NLRB 151 (1967), enfd. 415 F.2d 26 (5th Cir. 1969); Intertype Co. v. Penello, 269 F.Supp. 573 (D.C.Va. 1967); Follett Corp., 164 NLRB 378 (1967), enfd. 397 F.2d 91 (7th Cir. 1968); Sec. 9(d) of the NLRA, as amended.

[2] In Case 20-RC-15153 Respondent stipulated that it is an employer engaged in commerce, that the Union is a labor organization, and that the unit, as described in the complaint, is appropriate.

Review of the record herein, including the record in Case 20-RC-15153, reveals that on September 9, 1980, Respondent and the Union entered into a Stipulation for Certification Upon Consent Election. As noted supra, Respondent stipulated that it is engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act, that the Union is a labor organization, and that the unit, as described in paragraph 5 of the complaint, is appropriate.

Subsequently, on October 24, 1980, the employees in the unit voted in an election for the purpose of selecting a collective-bargaining representative. The tally of ballots showed 43 votes cast for, 34 cast against, the Union, and 77 challenged ballots, a sufficient number to affect the results of the election. On October 31, 1980, Respondent filed timely objections to conduct affecting the results of the election, alleging in substance that the Union engaged in deceptive campaign practices and interfered with the employees' free choice in the election. On December 29, 1980, the Acting Regional Director issued a "Report on Objections and Challenged Ballots" to the Board recommending that the Employer's objections be overruled in their entirety, and that 72 challenges be sustained. On April 3, 1981, the Board found no merit in Respondent's exceptions to the Acting Regional Director's recommendations, and certified the Union as the exclusive bargaining representative of all the employees in the unit. By mailgram dated April 15, 1981, the Union requested Respondent to bargain. On April 20, 1981, and at all times thereafter, Respondent admittedly has refused, and continues to refuse, to recognize and to bargain collectively in good faith with the Union as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of the employees in the unit.

It is well settled that in the absence of newly discovered or previously unavailable evidence or special circumstances a respondent in a proceeding which alleges a violation of Section 8(a)(5) is not entitled to relitigate issues which were or could have been litigated in a prior representation proceeding. As noted supra, Respondent in its answer to the complaint denied that it is engaged in commerce within the meaning of the Act, that the Union is a labor organization, and that the unit is appropriate. In light of Respondent's stipulation in the underlying representation proceeding that it is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of the Act, that the Union is a labor organization, and that the unit described in paragraph 5 of the complaint is appropriate, it is apparent that Respondent is attempting to litigate issues which were or could have been raised in the underlying representation proceeding. This it may not do.[3]

All issues raised by Respondent in this proceeding were or could have been litigated in the prior representation proceeding, and Respondent does not offer to adduce at a hearing any newly discovered or previously unavailable evidence, nor does it allege that any special circumstances exist herein which would require the Board to reexamine the decision made in the representation proceeding. We therefore find that Respondent has not raised any issue which is properly litigable in this unfair labor practice proceeding. Accordingly, we find that Respondent, since on or about April 20, 1981, has violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by its refusal to bargain with the Union. We therefore grant the Motion for Summary Judgment.

On the basis of the entire record, the Board makes the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. THE BUSINESS OF RESPONDENT

Yellow Transportation Company, A Division of Yellow Cab Cooperative, Inc., stipulated that it is a California corporation engaged in the taxicab business in San Francisco, California. During the past fiscal year, Respondent has received gross revenues in excess of $100,000. During the same period, Respondent purchased items which originated outside the State of California valued in excess of $10,000.

We find, on the basis of the foregoing, and upon the entire record in this proceeding, that Respondent is, and has been at all times material herein, an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act, and that it will effectuate the policies of the Act to assert jurisdiction herein.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

Independent Cab Drivers Association is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. The Representation Proceeding

1. The unit

The following employees of Respondent constitute a unit appropriate for collective-bargaining purposes within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act:

[3] See Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. v. N.L.R.B., 313 U.S. 146, 162 (1941); Rules and Regulations of the Board, Secs. 102.67(f) and 102.69(c).

> All cab driver employees employed by Respondent at its San Francisco, California location; excluding all other employees, lessees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

2. The certification

On October 24, 1980, a majority of the employees of Respondent in said unit, in a secret-ballot election conducted under the supervision of the Regional Director for Region 20, designated the Union as their representative for the purpose of collective bargaining with Respondent.

The Union was certified as the collective-bargaining representative of the employees in said unit on April 3, 1981, and the Union continues to be such exclusive representative within the meaning of Section 9(a) of the Act.

B. The Request To Bargain and Respondent's Refusal

Commencing on or about April 15, 1981, and at all times thereafter, the Union has requested Respondent to bargain collectively with it as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of all the employees in the above-described unit. Commencing on or about April 20, 1981, and continuing at all times thereafter to date, Respondent has refused, and continues to refuse, to recognize and bargain with the Union as the exclusive representative for collective bargaining of all employees in said unit.

Accordingly, we find that Respondent has, since April 20, 1981, and at all times thereafter, refused to bargain collectively with the Union as the exclusive representative of the employees in the appropriate unit, and that, by such refusal, Respondent has engaged in and is engaging in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

IV. THE EFFECT OF THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES UPON COMMERCE

The activities of Respondent set forth in section III, above, occurring in connection with its operations described in section I, above, have a close, intimate, and substantial relationship to trade, traffic, and commerce among the several States and tend to lead to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow of commerce.

V. THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in and is engaging in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act, we shall order that it cease and desist therefrom, and, upon request, bargain collectively with the Union as the exclusive representative of all employees in the appropriate unit and, if an understanding is reached, embody such understanding in a signed agreement.

In order to insure that the employees in the appropriate unit will be accorded the services of their selected bargaining agent for the period provided by law, we shall construe the initial period of certification as beginning on the date Respondent commences to bargain in good faith with the Union as the recognized bargaining representative in the appropriate unit. See Mar-Jac Poultry Company, Inc., 136 NLRB 785 (1962); Commerce Company d/b/a Lamar Hotel, 140 NLRB 226, 229 (1962), enfd. 328 F.2d 600 (5th Cir. 1964), cert. denied 379 U.S. 817; Burnett Construction Company, 149 NLRB 1419, 1421 (1964), enfd. 350 F.2d 57 (10th Cir. 1965).

The Board, upon the basis of the foregoing facts and the entire record, makes the following:

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Yellow Transportation Company, A Division of Yellow Cab Cooperative Inc., is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. Independent Cab Drivers Association is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. All cab driver employees employed by Respondent at its San Francisco, California, location, excluding all other employees, lessees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act, constitute a unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act.

4. Since April 3, 1981, the above-named labor organization has been and now is the certified and exclusive representative of all employees in the aforesaid appropriate unit for the purpose of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(a) of the Act.

5. By refusing on or about April 20, 1981, and at all times thereafter, to bargain collectively with the above-named labor organization as the exclusive bargaining representative of all the employees of Respondent in the appropriate unit, Respondent has engaged in and is engaging in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) of the Act.

6. By the aforesaid refusal to bargain, Respondent has interfered with, restrained, and coerced, and is interfering with, restraining, and coercing, employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act, and thereby has engaged in and is engaging in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

7. The aforesaid unfair labor practices are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board hereby orders that the Respondent, Yellow Transportation Company, A Division of Yellow Cab Cooperative, Inc., San Francisco, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Refusing to bargain collectively concerning rates of pay, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment with Independent Cab Drivers Association as the exclusive bargaining representative of its employees in the following appropriate unit:

> All cab driver employees employed by Respondent at its San Francisco, California location; excluding all other employees, lessees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action which the Board finds will effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Upon request, bargain with the above-named labor organization as the exclusive representative of all employees in the aforesaid appropriate unit with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment and, if an understanding is reached, embody such understanding in a signed agreement.

(b) Post at its San Francisco, California, location copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[4] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 20, after being duly signed by Respondent's representative, shall be posted by Respondent immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

WE WILL NOT refuse to bargain collectively concerning rates of pay, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment with Independent Cab Drivers Association as the exclusive representative of the employees in the bargaining unit described below.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL, upon request, bargain with the above-named Union, as the exclusive representative of all employees in the bargaining unit described below, with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment and, if an understanding is reached, embody such understanding in a signed agreement. The bargaining unit is:

> All cab driver employees employed by the Employer at its San Francisco, California location; excluding all other employees, lessees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

DECISION, ORDER, AND DIRECTION OF SECOND ELECTION

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On May 15, 1981, Administrative Law Judge Richard J. Boyce issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge and hereby orders that the Respondent, Best Products Co., Inc., Stockton, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the said recommended Order.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the election conducted herein on September 11, 1980, in Case 32-RC-1104 be, and it hereby is, set aside, and that said case be, and it hereby is, remanded to the Regional Director for Region 32 for the purpose of conducting a new election at such time as he deems appropriate.

DECISION AND REPORT ON POST-ELECTION OBJECTIONS

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

RICHARD J. BOYCE, Administrative Law Judge: This consolidated matter was heard before me in Stockton, California, on January 29, 1981.

The charge in Case 32-CA-2910 was filed on July 28, 1980, by United Food and Commercial Workers Union, Local No. 197, affiliated with United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, AFL-CIO (herein the Union). The complaint which issued on September 12 was amended during the hearing and alleges that Best Products Co., Inc. (herein Respondent), committed certain violations of Section 8(a)(1) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended.

An election in Case 32-RC-1104 was held on September 11, 1980, among the full-time and regular part-time employees in Respondent's Stockton store. It derived from a petition filed by the Union on June 30, 1980, and a Stipulation for Certification Upon Consent Election approved on July 22. The initial tally was 32 for and 33 against representation, with 2 challenged ballots.

The Union filed objections to conduct allegedly affecting the outcome of the election on September 16. On October 29, the Regional Director issued his Report and Recommendations on Challenged Ballots and Objections recommending that one of the challenged ballots be opened and counted and concluding that the status of the other challenged voter and the objections issues could best be resolved after a hearing.

On November 19, the Board issued its Order adopting the Regional Director's recommendation and conclusions. The one challenged ballot, accordingly, was opened and counted on December 12, resulting in a revised tally of 32 for and 34 against representation, with 1 challenged ballot—that of Virginia Klopstock, Respondent's sales training coordinator.

By order dated January 6, 1981, the Regional Director consolidated the objections and complaint matters herein for hearing and decision, stating that it would "not be necessary to litigate" Klopstock's eligibility, her ballot no longer being determinative.

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent is a Virginia corporation engaged in the operation of a chain of discount department stores, including one in Stockton. The Stockton store realizes annual gross revenues in excess of $500,000, and annually takes delivery from outside the State of California of goods valued in excess of $50,000.

Respondent is an employer engaged in and affecting commerce within Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. LABOR ORGANIZATION

The Union is a labor organization within Section 2(5) of the Act.

[1] Respondent has excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Administrative Law Judge. It is the Board's established policy not to overrule an administrative law judge's resolutions with respect to credibility unless the clear preponderance of all of the relevant evidence convinces us that the resolutions are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, Inc., 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing his findings.

Although the Administrative Law Judge relied, in part, on Essex International, Inc., 211 NLRB 749 (1974), which has since been overruled by T.R.W. Bearings Division, a Division of T.R.W., Inc., 257 NLRB No. 47 (1981), in finding that Respondent violated Sec. 8(a)(1) of the Act by prohibiting employees from gathering outside the store on their own time, it is clear that Respondent violated the Act under either standard.

259 NLRB No. 16

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. David Meanor

1. Allegations

The complaint alleges that David Meanor, the manager of the housewares department and an admitted supervisor, violated Section 8(a)(1) on or about July 16, 1980, by threatening an employee with the loss of her position and with the loss of various benefits, including seniority rights and privileges, should the Union be voted in; and by telling the employee that Respondent would not sign a bargaining agreement, meaning that the employees "would inevitably have to go on strike," if the Union were voted in.

2. Evidence

Klopstock's version. Klopstock testified that she was walking through the housewares department when Meanor, noting her unsmiling countenance, asked what was wrong. She denied that anything was wrong, but Meanor persisted, asking, "Is it the union thing?" Klopstock conceded that she was troubled by the union situation. Meanor suggested that they "go upstairs and talk about it." Klopstock assented, and they went upstairs to the tag room.

In the tag room, Meanor asked if Klopstock had "any questions." She replied, "You tell me why shouldn't I want the Union." Meanor answered that, "personally," he did not think the Union would benefit the employees as much as they thought it would, elaborating that there would be "a lot of hidden things" that the employees probably did not know about. He particularized that, while they might get a pay raise, they would lose benefits elsewhere "to make up for it"; that they would "lose all [their] seniority" and would "start from scratch" as concerns seniority; that, "if you want a day off . . . you won't be able to get it off if the schedule is already posted," whereas, "the way it is now . . . [you] just go up to your manager and ask him and they can arrange it with no problem"; and that they would not "be able to sit here and talk like this anymore, because there's a third party that you'll have to go through, and that'll be the union representative."

Klopstock asked how all this would happen. Meanor said that it would be "step by step"; that winning the election "doesn't guarantee you anything." He continued that, if Respondent should "say no" to the Union's bargaining demands, the Union then would "order" the employees "to go on strike," and they would have no choice but to comply. Meanor added:

> You have to go on strike, and while they're on strike, the Company will not close. They will rehire people to fill your position, send you a letter telling you that your position's been filled and that they do not have to hire you back.

Klopstock asked, "Well, then, what's the point of all this?" Meanor remarked, "Yeah, what's the point?" To Klopstock's asking how he knew these things, Meanor said his brother had been in a union. Meanor concluded the exchange by telling Klopstock "just to keep it between us."

Meanor's version. Meanor, although conceding that he did not remember "this particular conversation . . . really well," testified at length about it. While professing concern that Klopstock looked "upset or tense," Meanor averred that the conversation was initiated by Klopstock saying that she had "some things to talk about" and asking if he "would talk with her." He assented, after which, in the tag room, she raised the recent discharge of three employees. She voiced concern that management could "arbitrarily" discharge people, opining that union representation would give greater job security. Meanor responded that a union would not have made "any difference whatsoever" in the cases she had cited.

Klopstock then remarked that she did not understand "the union situation," that she felt she was being judged "a union person unfairly," and that she was "being picked on" as a result. Meanor assured her that she was not being picked on, and invited her to "come talk to" him whenever she had "any problems."

Meanor described "the negotiation process," explaining that, once the Union "was voted in . . . everything from that point was negotiable, that benefits could be changed"; that, "depending on the contract, [you] could get more, [you] could get less." The main point I was trying to get across to her." Meanor testified, [was] that nothing was definite." Asked by Respondent's counsel if he said in this context that the employees "would start from scratch on all their benefits," Meanor implied that he did, answering, "And they have." He denied saying, however, that any negotiated raise might be at the expense of other benefits.

After describing the bargaining process, Meanor asserted that, regardless, he did not "see how the Company could pay or do more for the Stockton employees . . . , without doing it for the entire Company." "Fairness," he went on, was "what it was all about . . . and that wouldn't happen if we paid the Stockton employees more than Sacramento."

Meanor denied speculating whether Respondent would agree to the Union's demands—"I had no way of knowing"; and denied saying that the employees "would have to go on strike" should agreement not be forthcoming. He admittedly told Klopstock, though, that "if for some reason" there were not an agreement, "that's when you hear of strikes," and that the Union would do "whatever they had to if it came to an impasse." He continued that in the event of a strike Respondent would have "the right to . . . hire replacements," and that those striking "could be permanently replaced."

[1] Respondent challenged Klopstock's ballot on the ground that, as sales training coordinator, she is a confidential employee. Respondent's counsel stated on the present record, when Respondent rested, that "we have never abandoned our position that Mrs. Klopstock is a confidential employee." As earlier noted, that issue has been excluded from those to be litigated herein in the context of the representation case. Nor need it be resolved in the context of Respondent's alleged unfair labor practices. Assuming without deciding that Klopstock is a confidential employee, she nevertheless is entitled to the protections of the Act under prevailing Board law. Intermountain Rural Electric Association, 253 NLRB 1133 (1981), and cases cited. Respondent expressly disavowed any contention that Klopstock is a statutory supervisor.

Meanor denied speaking of the "hidden problems" that go with union representation, only to concede that he told Klopstock of his own "not very good" experiences with a union. He noted, in this regard, that it was "very easy" to arrange a day off as things were, but that with a union in the picture "you worked the schedule." He added that with a union management and the employees would not be able to discuss things "like we [are] doing now."

3. Conclusions

To the substantial degree that their stories diverge, Klopstock is credited. Her recital was richly detailed, internally consistent, and altogether believable. Meanor, apart from admitting that he did not recall the exchange "really well," betrayed a discrediting penchant to be evasive and unresponsive.

Meanor, by juxtaposing the ideas that there would be a strike if Respondent said "no" to the Union's demands; that considerations of "fairness" made it impossible for him to "see how the Company could pay or do more for the Stockton employees . . . without doing it for the entire Company"; that, should there be a strike, the strikers' positions would be filled and Respondent would not "have to hire [them] back"; and, in summary, that there was no "point" to it all, that a strike would be likely if not inevitable were the Union voted in, that those striking would lose their jobs, and that the organizational undertaking in general was a futility. It is concluded that Meanor, by so doing, violated Section 8(a)(1).[2]

It also is concluded that Meanor violated Section 8(a)(1) by saying that, among the "hidden things" about representation, the employees would "start from scratch" as concerns seniority, work schedules would be rigidly binding, and the employees no longer would be able to talk directly with management. The evil of these remarks is their implication that unionization alone would have the stated effects.[3]

It is concluded, finally, that Meanor's comment was not unlawful that the employees would lose benefits elsewhere "to make up for" any wage increases that representation might bring. Meanor plainly was referring to the workings of the bargaining process, and, as the Board has stated:

> An employer is free to indicate to his employees what the possible result of bargaining may be, and to call their attention to the possibility or even probability that certain existing benefits may be traded away for others.[4]

B. Terry Sauer (1)

1. Allegation

The complaint alleges that Terry Sauer, a manager trainee in the toy department,[5] violated Section 8(a)(1) on about July 18, 1980, by prohibiting employees from meeting and speaking with one another during nonwork times and in nonwork areas, to discourage their support of the Union.

2. Evidence

Kevin Sullivan, a sales counselor in the housewares department, testified that he and two coworkers, Gary Petitt and Don Winget, had gathered outside the toy department exit after work on July 18, "trying to decide what [they] were going to do" with their evening. This was their usual after-work practice. A sidewalk about 10 feet wide led from the exit, and they were seated on a planter along the edge of the walk. Sullivan continued that, after they had been there "about 15 minutes," Sauer came out and announced that he would "have to break [them] up," explaining: "I'm sorry, but I was told that any more than three employees in any one place at a time were to be considered a conspiracy."

[5] The parties are in disagreement over Sauer's status. The General Counsel contends that Sauer was a supervisor; or, even if not, an agent of Respondent. Respondent argues that he was neither. The ranking person in each of the store's departments is a departmental manager. Beneath the manager in some departments are an assistant manager, who is concededly a supervisor, and a manager trainee. The toy department, at most if not all relevant times, did not have an assistant manager, meaning that it wae run by the manager—a Mrs. Allen—and by Sauer, as manager trainee. The department had about seven employees beneath those two.

The store is open from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. weekdays, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Saturdays, and from noon to 5 p.m. on Sundays. Allen and Sauer alternated weekends running the toy department; and worked separate but overlapping shifts during the week, one opening the department in the morning and staying into the afternoon, the other reporting in the afternoon and closing the department at night. In Allen's absence, which also included a week or more when her daughter was ill, Sauer was in command of the department, accountable only to Michael Ebbensteiner. the overall showroom manager, whom Sauer labeled as his "boss."

Aside from the regularly recurring instances in which Sauer was the ranking person present in the department, it is uncontroverted that he attended weekly meetings of assistant managers and manager trainees (the managers attended weekly meetings at other times so that the departments would never be without leadership); shared an office with Allen; did not punch a timeclock, unlike the general run of employees; authorized the acceptance of customer checks and employee use of the departments' telephone; had the authority to give warnings, to permit employees to report late or leave early, and to grant days off; prepared department work schedules; assigned employees from task to task; sometimes evaluated job performance; participated with Allen in the interview of prospective employees; and made notations on timecards, enabling payment for extra hours.

Virginia Klopstock, one of whose duties is to teach new hires "how they are to respond to their managers," testified that Sauer in addition had authority to request that employees work extra hours and overtime; and Gary Petitt, a toy department employee, testified that Sauer in fact made such requests of him "on different occasions." Sauer's denial that he had such authority was unconvincing. As is elsewhere noted, he was not an impressive witness.

Finally, Klopstock credibly testified that she instructed the new hires whom she trained, that managers, assistant managers, and manager trainees were all managers in their departments, all to be accorded the "same respect."

It is concluded from this aggregate of circumstances that Sauer indeed was a supervisor and agent, and that his conduct therefore is binding on Respondent. Osco Drug, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Jewel Food Companies, Inc., 237 NLRB 231, 233-234 (1978).

With that, Sullivan went on, he and his companions "just laughed a little bit, got up, and left." He testified that they continued this practice to gather at the same place after work, hearing nothing further from Sauer.

Petitt, a sales counselor in the toy department, corroborated Sullivan in all significant respects. Sauer denied ever speaking to employees in this manner outside the building, offering that he once "had to ask" Sullivan, who was soliciting for the Union in the store while off duty, "to let the employees that were on duty do their work, and . . . to talk to them during their breaks or off-duty hours." Sauer denied ever using the word "conspiracy"—"I wouldn't use the word 'conspiracy.'"

3. Conclusions

Sullivan and Petitt are credited, as against Sauer's denial, that this incident occurred and was as they recalled. Both were persuasively cogent and forthright in their presentations; whereas, Sauer not only was unresponsive and evasive on frequent occasion but unconvincing in overall demeanor.

Given the surrounding context of a union campaign and the assorted other unfair labor practices found herein, it is concluded that Sauer's dispersal of the three employees on the stated ground that they were "considered a conspiracy" was meant to interfere with and restrain them in their exercise of organizational rights, violating Section 8(a)(1). It is further concluded that, regardless of motive, Sauer's prohibition against the employees' gathering outside the store on their own time, there being no showing of a valid business justification, was in the nature of an unlawfully broad ban on solicitation.[6]

C. Annette Menius

1. Allegations

The complaint alleges that Annette Menius, the assistant manager of the housewares department and an admitted supervisor, violated Section 8(a)(1) on or about July 24, 1980, by interrogating an employee concerning his union sentiments, by imparting to the employee "the impression that Respondent had engaged in surveillance of" some of the employees' union activities, and by telling the employee that Respondent "would force a 'stalemate' in bargaining with the Union and that employees would inevitably have to go on strike."

2. Evidence

These allegations concern a conversation on or about July 24 between Menius and Kevin Sullivan, previously identified as a sales counselor in the housewares department.

Sullivan's version. Sullivan testified that after he and Menius had finished discussing another matter, Menius asked, "What do you think about the union campaign?" Sullivan replied that he not only was "in favor of it" but was "working on the campaign."

Menius then showed Sullivan a list of those in the department, with an "X" or "O" designation behind each of about 14 names. After explaining that the designations signified who was prounion and who was procompany, and that the list was being prepared for John Case, regional personnel manager, and Michael Ebbensteiner, showroom manager. Menius asked Sullivan if the designations were accurate. He demurred that he preferred not to answer.

At this point, according to Sullivan, he told Menius that "there was the possibility" that he would file an unfair labor practice charge against her for instituting a conversation with him about the Union. She said that she had done "nothing illegal," then stated:

> If the Union was voted in and it came to negotiations . . . the Company would stalemate such negotiations and force the employees out on strike . . . .

Menius added that the strikers "would then be replaced"; and that Respondent, because of its wealth, "could outlast [the employees] on any strike."

Sullivan countered that Respondent "could not force us legally out on strike"—rather, that that would be the employees' "own personal choice"; and related his understanding of the distinction between economic and unfair labor practice strikers as concerns susceptibility to permanent replacement.

Menius also said, per Sullivan, that Respondent would try to schedule as many as possible of the procompany employees to work the day of the election, leaving off schedule as many as possible of the prounion people.

Menius' version. Menius testified that she and Sullivan "just sort of drifted into the talk about the Union," and that she said:

> [I]f it got to the negotiation table, there could be possibility, I guess, that if the Company and the labor union could not come to an agreement on various terms or what-not, they—it would be kind of like a dead-end thing and there could be the possibility of a strike.

Menius testified elsewhere that Sullivan "raised the subject" of a possible strike, remarking that any strike "would have to be voted on by the employees"; and, at another point, that she could not "really say for sure" whether he or she first broached the subject.

In any case, according to Menius, Sullivan exclaimed, after she had expressed herself as above set forth, that she had "committed a ULP," whereupon he departed and the exchange ended.

Menius denied asking Sullivan about his union sentiments, explaining that his feelings were apparent from the prounion T-shirt he was wearing; or that she said anything about rigging work schedules on election day; or that she mentioned Respondent's having the economic resources to withstand any strike.

Menius denied, finally, that she showed Sullivan a list of employees' names on which their union sympathies were denoted. On examination by counsel for the General Counsel, however, she grudgingly admitted that Case and Ebbensteiner had directed the several department managers to "figure out who might be for the Union, and who might be against it"; that she had kept a list indicating whom she thought was of which persuasion; and that she went over the information on that list with Meanor, who was her immediate superior, and with Case and Ebbensteiner.

[6] Cf. K.W. Norris Printing Co., 232 NLRB 985 (1977); Essex International, Inc., 211 NLRB 749 (1974).

3. Conclusions

To the considerable extent that their versions conflict, Sullivan is credited. His demeanor and the substance of his testimony suggested both competence and conscientiousness under oath, whereas Menius was often evasive and generally unconvincing.

It is concluded that Menius interrogated Sullivan in violation of Section 8(a)(1) by inquiring of his thoughts "about the union campaign" and by asking him if the designations on her list were accurate;[7] that she imparted the impression of surveillance, further violating Section 8(a)(1), by showing and explaining the list to him;[8] and that she committed yet another violation of that section by remarking that Respondent "would stalemate" bargaining, thereby forcing a strike and causing the strikers to be replaced, which conveyed the notion that representation would be both pointless and destructive of job security.[9]

1. Allegation

The complaint alleges that Sauer, previously identified as a manager trainee in the toy department, violated Section 8(a)(1) on July 25, August 2, and two other dates in July or August 1980 by interrogating employees concerning their and their coworkers' union sentiments.

2. Evidence

Gary Petitt, previously identified as a sales counselor in the toy department, testified of "a couple of" conversations with Sauer concerning the Union. The first, took place in the department manager's office towards the end of July. In it, Sauer asked Pettit how the Union "was going"; Pettit replied that it was "still going strong;" and Sauer then asked Petitt's opinion on why the Union "came in."

The second conversation, as recalled by Petitt, occurred in the same office around the "beginning of August." Petitt testified that Sauer, remarking that he had not heard too much about it of late, asked if the Union was dying down. Petitt assertedly answered that the cause had lost a number of people, but that its proponents were trying to get them back.

Mary Avila, also a sales counselor in the toy department, testified that she had "several" conversations with Sauer about the Union, "starting around July." Avila related that in one such conversation, at the customer service desk on July 25, Sauer asked if she wanted to go into the office with him and talk about the Union. To her negative answer, Sauer reportedly said that he was supposed to talk to all the employees and get their opinion of the Union.

Avila responded, so she said, that Sauer already knew her opinion, prompting Sauer to state that he was not going to use "the propaganda" he had been told to use. Avila persisted that she did not "want to discuss it," and Sauer allegedly said: "Let me say just one more thing. . . . [I]f you do not vote, it'll be a vote for the Union."

Sauer, while not addressing these particular pieces of testimony, denied generally that he ever questioned anyone about the Union—"No, sir, we were instructed not to."

3. Conclusions

Petitt and Avila are credited that Sauer made the remarks attributed to him. Sauer, as previously mentioned, was unconvincing both in testimonial content and demeanor. Petitt and Avila, in contrast, came across as sincere and capable witnesses.

It is concluded that Sauer violated Section 8(a)(1) by asking Petitt how the Union "was going," why it "came in," and if it "was dying down.[10] It also is concluded that Sauer in effect interrogated Avila about her union sympathies by the combination of his asking her if she wished to talk to him about the Union and telling her that he was supposed to obtain the employees' "opinion of the Union"; and that he thereby further violated Section 8(a)(1).

E. Terry Sauer (3)

The complaint alleges that Sauer violated Section 8(a)(1) on about August 2, 1980, by threatening an employee "with the inevitability of a strike and loss of employment" should the Union be voted in.

2. Evidence

Kevin Sullivan, previously identified as a sales counselor in the housewares department, testified that on August 2 while on vacation he went to the store to see when Gary Petitt would be getting off. Sullivan was wearing a prounion T-shirt. According to Sullivan, Sauer came up to him and remarked, "Don't you like working for the Company?" Sullivan assertedly replied that he did, whereupon Sauer stated that. "if the Union was voted in," Respondent "would force" the employees "out on strike" and they "wouldn't be coming back."

Sauer further stated, as Sullivan recalled, that he would "really miss" working with him and his coworkers, because they were a "great group"; and that "even if the Union lost the election" the employees "could still possibly lose" their jobs, for Respondent "would not forgive and forget."

Petitt was present during this exchange, according to Sullivan. Petitt corroborated Sullivan in this regard, and with respect to the salient substantive features of Sullivan's recital.

Sauer denied participation in any incident of this character—"No, sir, we were instructed not to mention anything of that nature."

3. Conclusions

For reasons earlier stated, Sullivan and Petitt are credited that Sauer bespoke himself as they described. It is concluded that Sauer, by indicating that a strike necessarily would follow from Respondent's bargaining posture, with attendant job loss to the strikers, conveyed the idea that representation would be at once a futility and a peril; and that he consequently violated Section 8(a)(1).[11]

F. Michael Ebbensteiner

1. Allegation

The complaint alleges that Ebbensteiner, previously identified as the showroom manager, an admitted supervisor, violated Section 8(a)(1) on and after June 24, 1980, by engaging in surveillance of the employees' union activities.

2. Evidence

The Stockton store has a single small lunchroom. It has food and drink vending machines, a refrigerator, a microwave oven, a few tables and chairs, a stereophonic radio, and sometimes a television set; and is for the use of both management and rank-and-file personnel. Some make purchases there and leave; others spend their breaks and/or lunch periods there. The weight of evidence indicates that it receives considerably more use from rank-and-file personnel than from management.

Ebbensteiner's office is down the hall from the lunchroom. Virginia Klopstock testified that, when the lunchroom door is open, lunchroom conversations can be clearly heard in Ebbensteiner's office.

Before the union campaign the lunchroom door was propped open most, if not all, of the time. With the campaign's onset, employees gathering in the lunchroom routinely closed the door so that their discussions of issues relating to the campaign would not carry outside. Just as routinely, the door would be reopened from the outside. Klopstock, who had a desk a few feet from the door, testified that the door was closed and opened in this manner "sometimes 10 times a day"; that it "got to be a game"; and that those recurrently opening the door were Ebbensteiner and his secretary, Joyce Davis.

Klopstock further testified that she once told Ebbensteiner that the employees were "upset about" the continued reopening of the door, and that he responded that he liked the door open "to hear the music." Before the campaign, according to Klopstock, Ebbensteiner sometimes turned off the radio in the lunchroom, presumably because it disturbed him.

Kevin Sullivan testified that when Joyce Davis once opened the door during the campaign she commented that she had been told that the door "must remain open." Sullivan also testified that he once complained to John Case, the regional personnel manager, about the "problems with the door"; and that, while Case said he would "check on it," nothing changed.

Gary Petitt corroborated Klopstock that the door "generally" stayed open before the campaign; and that, though it was frequently closed by the employees during the campaign, "it would always get opened again." Petitt, however, could not identify those opening it—"I've never seen anybody come out and open it.

Neither Ebbensteiner nor Davis testified.

3. Conclusions

It is inferable from the recitals just set forth, particularly Klopstock's, and absent testimony to the contrary, that Ebbensteiner was behind the recurrent opening of the door. And, while it might be speculated that his purpose was to ensure that the room's intended use not be subverted by a certain employee faction, neither he nor anyone else offered testimony giving substance to such speculation.

The further inference necessarily follows that Ebbensteiner's purpose was to eavesdrop, and to impart the impression that he was eavesdropping, on the employees' discussions of the Union. It is concluded, therefore, that Ebbensteiner violated Section 8(a)(1).

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

As previously concluded, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) by:

1. Imparting to its employees the impression that should the Union be voted in a strike was likely if not inevitable; that those striking would lose their jobs; and that the organizational undertaking in general was a futility.
2. Stating or implying to an employee that unionization would result in the employees' "starting from scratch" as concerns seniority, in work schedules becoming rigidly binding, and in the employees' no longer being able to talk directly with management.
3. Forbidding three employees from gathering outside the store on their own time, thereby issuing what amounted to an overly broad no-solicitation rule.
4. Interrogating employees about their opinions concerning the Union, and about their and their coworkers' union sympathies.
5. Imparting to its employees the impression that their union activities were under surveillance, and in fact engaging in surveillance of such activities.

THE OBJECTIONS

The several instances of misconduct above found occurred during the "critical period" after the June 30, 1980, filing of the election petition. It is concluded that this misconduct is sufficient to overturn the election.

ORDER[12]

The Respondent, Best Products Co., Inc., Stockton, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Imparting to its employees the impression that, should the Union be voted in, a strike is likely if not inevitable; that those striking will lose their jobs; and that the organizational undertaking in general is a futility.

(b) Stating or implying to its employees that unionization will result in their "starting from scratch" as concerns seniority, in their work schedules becoming rigidly binding, and in their no longer being able to talk directly with management.

(c) Forbidding employees from gathering outside the store on their own time, thereby issuing an overly broad no-solicitation rule.

(d) Interrogating employees about their opinions concerning the Union, and about their and their coworkers' union sympathies.

(e) Imparting to employees the impression that their union activities are under surveillance, and in fact engaging in surveillance of such activities.

(f) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in their exercise of rights under the Act.

2. Take this affirmative action:

(a) Post at its store in Stockton, California, copies of the notice which is attached and marked "Appendix."[13] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 32, after being duly signed by Respondent, shall be posted by Respondent immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees customarily are posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to insure that the notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(b) Notify the Regional Director for Region 32, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps Respondent has taken to comply herewith.

IT IS FURTHER RECOMMENDED that the election of September 16, 1980, be set aside and a new election directed.

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On May 15, 1981, Administrative Law Judge Jerry B. Stone issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, the Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the General Counsel filed an answering brief in support of the Administrative Law Judge.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge and hereby orders that the Respondent, Eastern Market Beef Processing Corporation, Alfred and Scott Street Divisions, Detroit, Michigan, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the said recommended Order.

[1] The Respondent has excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Administrative Law Judge. It is the Board's established policy not to overrule an administrative law judge's resolutions with respect to credibility unless the clear preponderance of all of the relevant evidence convinces us that the resolutions are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, Inc., 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing his findings.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

JERRY B. STONE, Administrative Law Judge: This proceeding, under Section 10(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, was heard by me pursuant to due notice on July 16, 17, 18, 22, and 23, 1980, in Detroit, Michigan.

The charge in Case 7-CA-16527 was filed on June 27, 1979; the original charge in Case 7-CA-16680 on August 7, 1979; the amended charge in Case 7-CA-16680 on August 22, 1979; and[1] the charge in Case 7-CA-17014 on November 2, 1979. The order consolidating cases and the consolidated complaint in this matter was issued on June 20, 1980.

The issues concern whether certain conduct of Respondent commencing in May 1979 constituted conduct violative of Section 8(a)(1), (2), (3), and (5) of the Act. In major effect some of the issues concern whether Respondent's opening of a new plant, unilateral setting of wages and terms of employment, transfer of work, and decision to close its old plant and to terminate employees constituted conduct of refusal to bargain in violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act, and constituted conduct of discrimination in employment in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act. Further, some of the issues concern whether Respondent unlawfully assisted a union, the NMU, by granting agents access rights to its plant, by recognition of NMU as bargaining agent, by execution of a collective-bargaining contract, and by threats. Such issues concern whether Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(2) by acts of assistance to NMU, and has violated Section 8(a)(5) of the Act by the same conduct by refusing to bargain with the Charging Party, Local 26.[2]

There are also issues raised concerning the General Counsel's reinstatement of charges filed in Case 7-CA-16527 and concerning the receipt in evidence of pretrial statements of a deceased individual.

All parties were afforded full opportunity to participate in the proceeding. Briefs have been filed by the General Counsel and Respondent and have been considered.

Upon the entire record in the case and from my observation of witnesses, I hereby make the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. THE BUSINESS OF RESPONDENT

Eastern Market Beef Processing Corporation, Alfred and Scott Street Divisions, Respondent, is, and has been at all times material herein, a corporation duly organized under, and existing by virtue of, the laws of the State of Michigan. At all times material herein until June 16, 1979, Respondent maintained its principal office and place of business at 1545 Alfred in the city of Detroit, State of Michigan.

Commencing on or around June 16, 1979, Respondent also maintained a plant in the State of Michigan at 1825 Scott Street, Detroit, and maintained and operated both said Alfred Street and said Scott Street plants until around November 26, 1979. At such time Respondent ceased operations at Alfred Street but continued operations at Scott Street. At all times during the operations at both plants, Respondent engaged in the processing, packing, sale, and distribution of meat and related products. Both plants are the only facilities involved in this proceeding.

During the fiscal year ending April 30, 1979, which period is representative of its operations during all times material herein, Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business operations, manufactured, sold, and distributed at its Michigan plants products valued in excess of $500,000, of which products valued in excess of $50,000 were shipped from said plants directly to points located outside the State of Michigan.

As conceded by Respondent and based on the foregoing, it is concluded and found that Respondent is, and has been at all times material herein, an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATIONS INVOLVED[3]

United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, Local 26, AFL-CIO-CLC, is, and has been at all times material herein, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

Industrial, Technical, and Professional Employees, a Division of National Maritime Union, AFL-CIO, is, and has been at all times material herein, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Case 7-CA-16527—The 10(b) Issue[4]

The Union filed the charge in Case 7-CA-16527 on June 27, 1979, averring that Respondent had engaged in conduct violative of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act. Included in such charge were the usual general allegations. Further, such charge specifically averred that:

> Since in and about May, 1979, the above-named Employer has refused and continues to refuse to bargain in good faith with the Charging Party as the collective bargaining representative of an appropriate unit of its employees, by repudiating a collective bargaining agreement between the Charging Party and the Employer, entered into on December 15, 1977 and effective November 22, 1976 to and including November 22, 1979.

The Regional Director for Region 7 issued a letter on August 2, 1979, in which the parties were advised that the Regional Director was refusing to issue a complaint in Case 7-CA-16527. The Regional Director referred the parties to an enclosed form as to the procedure and deadline for filing an appeal to his "dismissal action." Thereafter, the Charging Party on August 21, 1979, appealed the Regional Director's refusal to issue a complaint in Case 7-CA-16527. On October 9, 1979, the General Counsel denied the Charging Party's appeal.

In the meantime, the Charging Party filed on August 7, 1979, a charge in Case 7-CA-16680, averring that Respondent had violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act. Included in such charge were the usual general allegations. Further, such charge specifically alleged the discriminatory discharges of J. C. Bonner and Elmer Jordon. On August 21, 1979, the Charging Party filed an amended charge in Case 7-CA-16680, averring that Respondent had violated Section 8(a)(1) and (2) of the Act. Included in such charges were the usual general allegations and certain specific allegations. On September 28, 1979, the General Counsel issued a complaint in Case 7-CA-16680. However, the complaint was to a more limited effect than sought by the Charging Party. Accordingly, on September 29, 1979, the General Counsel issued a letter setting forth that he was refusing to proceed with allegations to the effect that Respondent had unlawfully assisted the National Maritime Union in obtaining its majority support. Thereafter, the Charging Party, on October 10, 1979, appealed the Regional Director's refusal to issue complaint in such regard.

On November 1, 1979, the Charging Party filed a charge in Case 7-CA-17014 alleging conduct violative of Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act. Included in such charge were the usual general allegations. Further, such charge had specific averments including the following:

> Since in or about June, 1979, the above-named Employer has refused and continues to refuse to bargain in good faith with the Charging Party as the collective bargaining representative of an appropriate unit of its employees, including its employees at its Scott Street facility, Detroit, Michigan, by repudiating a collective bargaining agreement between the Charging Party and the Employer, entered into on December 15, 1977 and effective November 22, 1976 to and including November 22, 1979.

On November 28, 1979, the Regional Director for Region 7 apparently issued a letter advising the parties of his refusal to issue complaint in Case 7-CA-17014. Thereafter, on December 10, 1979, the Charging Party appealed such decision.

It appears that at some point of time before May 27, 1980, the General Counsel sustained the Charging Party's appeals in Cases 7-CA-16680 and 7-CA-17014.[5] On May 27, 1980, the General Counsel issued a letter referring to his sustaining of appeals in the two cases. Further, the General Counsel averred that it had decided, sua sponte, to revoke his prior denial in Case 7-CA-16527 and sustain the appeal therein. The General Counsel averred that such decision was in view of the evidence adduced in the investigation of Cases 7-CA-16680 and 17014, and of the conduct as alleged in Case 7-CA-16527.

[3] The facts are based on stipulations or admissions in the pleadings.

[4] Sec. 10(b) of the Act provides in part:

> Provided, That no complaint shall issue based upon any unfair labor practice occurring more than six months prior to the filing of the charge with the Board and the service of a copy thereof upon the person against whom such charge is made . . .

[5] Counsel for the General Counsel avers in his brief that the General Counsel on May 16, 1980, sustained the Charging Party's appeal in both Cases 7-CA-16680 and 7-CA-17014. Said brief refers to Resp. Exh. 29 as the basis for such referred to evidence. I do not find a document setting forth such date of May 16, 1980. Perhaps, by inadvertence, the same has been left out of the original formal exhibit file. Excepting for the date of such action, a comparison of the complaints as issued and the other evidence as a whole would reveal no real issue on such contention.

Thereafter, a consolidated complaint alleging violations of Section 8(a)(1), (2), (3), and (5) of the Act was issued on June 20, 1980.

Respondent contends that only Case 7-CA-16527 is barred by Section 10(b) of the Act. In many respects, this issue may be said to be an exercise in academics. Thus, the charge in Case 7-CA-16527 concerned itself with conduct violative of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act. The charge in Case 7-CA-17014 concerned itself with conduct violative of Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (5) of the Act. The averred 8(a)(5) conduct set forth in the charge in Case 7-CA-16527 is essentially similar to some of the allegations as averred in Case 7-CA-17014. In the charge in Case 7-CA-16527, the commencement date of the averred refusal to bargain was set forth as "Since in and about May, 1979 . . . ." In the charge in Case 7-CA-17014, the commencement date of the averred refusal to bargain was set forth as "Since in or about June, 1979 . . . ."

The complaint allegations in the amended complaint avers the earliest conduct alleged to be violative of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act, as occurring, "Since on or about the last week of May."

Considering all of the foregoing, I am persuaded that all of the conduct alleged in the amended complaint is properly based upon the charge in Case 7-CA-17014. Thus, such charge was filed on November 1, 1979, and would support complaint allegations of conduct on or after May 1, 1979. It is clear that the alleged conduct of late May 1979 relating to the refusal-to-bargain issues is timely within the view of Section 10(b) of the Act. Thus, it would not appear necessary that the General Counsel use the charge in Case 7-CA-16527 as a basis for his complaint. However, the alleged conduct averred in Case 7-CA-16680 and 7-CA-17014 is closely related to the conduct alleged in Case 7-CA-16527 and, thus, it is clear that Respondent has been on notice of the issues under investigation in this case at all times since June 27, 1979. Therefore, the overall facts relating to the ultimate termination of employees in November 1979 warrant the reinstatement of the charge in Case 7-CA-16527.[6]

B. Statements of Jordon—Affidavit and Oral

The General Counsel's complaint alleges that Respondent discriminatorily discharged Elmer Jordon on or about August 6, 1979. On the second day of the hearing, July 17, 1980, the General Counsel (A. Bradley Howell) offered an affidavit of Elmer Jordon into the record as evidence. Howell stated, as counsel, that Jordon was deceased, that he (Howell) had personally taken the affidavit, and that Jordon had signed the same in his presence.

Further, statements of Howell were to the effect that Jordon had died around July 2, 1980; that Howell learned of Jordon's death on or around July 7, 1980; that Howell had advised one of Respondent's attorneys, Hyman, of Jordon's death, and that a copy of Jordon's affidavit had been mailed to Respondent's counsel on July 9, 1980.

Jordon's affidavit bears the date of oath as May 29, 1979. Respondent did not dispute Howell's statement of facts. However, Respondent disputed whether Jordon's affidavit as furnished counsel complied with Rule 804 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Thus, Respondent contended that the affidavit had not been expeditiously furnished nor was it complete. It is not disputed that a number of names had been deleted from the affidavit furnished Respondent prior to the hearing.

The affidavit of Jordon, dated May 29, 1979, was tentatively received into the record, and the parties were advised to brief the question of such admissibility. At such time said affidavit, unedited and with all names therein, was made available to Respondent's counsel, who was advised that he would be given time at that time or that he could have time at the end of the General Counsel's case in connection with preparation for the issues raised by the substance of the affidavit. At such time, Respondent's counsel elected to take such time at the end of the General Counsel's case. It appears that Respondent did not find it necessary to take time with respect to such issues at the end of the General Counsel's case.

The General Counsel in his brief alludes to Respondent's argument concerning Rule 804, appears to argue that Respondent's counsel was not prejudiced by failure to furnish a complete affidavit prior to the hearing, and argues that Board case law reveals that affidavits of deceased persons, even those with interests in the proceeding, are admissible.

Respondent argues that the affidavit is not admissible, that the requirements of Rule 804 for admissibility have not been made, that an affidavit of a deceased person having interest in the proceeding lacks inherent trustworthiness, that the affidavit was not timely furnished to Respondent, and that the affidavit as furnished to Respondent was not complete.

The Board has always been guided as to the receipt of evidence by Section 10(b) of the Act which provides in effect that its proceedings shall, so far as practicable, be conducted in accordance with the rules of evidence applicable in the district courts of the United States under the rules of civil procedure for the district court. In this regard the Board has found affidavits of deceased persons having an interest in the proceeding to be admissible as evidence.[7] The Board, however, has determined that statements of deceased persons should be considered with the utmost care and caution and closest scrutiny. The weight to be given such statements depends on consideration of the richness and fullness of detail and whether such details are corroborated or disputed and the resultant logical consistency of such statements with all other facts presented on the issues involved.

The Federal Rules of Evidence contain the following rules relevant to the issues presented concerning the receipt of Jordon's affidavit into evidence:

[7] See Prestige Bedding Company, Inc., 212 NLRB 690, 701, fn. 13 (1974); Canterbury Gardens and Manchester Gardens, Inc., 238 NLRB 864, 868 (1978).

> Rule 102. Purpose and Construction
> These rules shall be construed to secure fairness in administration, elimination of unjustifiable expense and delay, and promotion of growth and development of the law of evidence to the end that the truth may be ascertained and proceedings justly determined.
> Rule 804. Hearsay Exceptions: Declarant Unavailable
> (a) Definition of unavailability.—"Unavailability as a witness" includes situations in which the declarant—
> (4) is unable to be present or to testify at the hearing because of death or then existing physical or mental illness or infirmity; or . . . .
> (b) Hearsay exceptions.—The following are not excluded by the hearsay rule if the declarant is unavailable as a witness:
> (5) Other exceptions.—A statement not specifically covered by any of the foregoing exceptions but having equivalent circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness, if the court determines that (A) the statement is offered as evidence of a material fact; (B) the statement is more probative on the point for which it is offered than any other evidence which the proponent can procure through reasonable efforts; and (C) the general purposes of these rules and the interests of justice will best be served by admission of the statement into evidence. However, a statement may not be admitted under this exception unless the proponent of it makes known to the adverse party sufficiently in advance of the trial or hearing to provide the adverse party with a fair opportunity to prepare to meet it, his intention to offer the statement and the particulars of it, including the name and address of the declarant.

Considering all of the foregoing, I am persuaded that the Board should adhere to the principles of Federal Rule 804 insofar as practicable and as consistent with its past decisions relating to the receipt of evidence.

Thus, I am persuaded that receipt or consideration of a statement, as to which the proposing party has not complied with the requirement of furnishing a copy of said statement to the adverse party sufficiently in advance of the hearing, is dependent on discretion requiring consideration of all of the circumstances. In the instant case, it appears that the General Counsel furnished the affidavit, with certain names deleted, to his opponent within a reasonable time considering the timing of the events. There is no indication that Respondent, on receipt of the "affidavit," found it necessary to ask that the hearing as scheduled be postponed. I am persuaded that the better policy for the General Counsel would have been to furnish the affidavit without deletion of names, well before the time of the hearing, that, if the affidavit were needed as evidence, such need outweighed any internal policy relating to confidentiality. I note that it is standard practice, at the hearing and upon request after a witness has testified, to furnish unedited affidavits of said witnesses to counsel. The trier of fact in his discretion might refuse to receive such proposed affidavit if to do so under all the circumstances would be unfair to respondent or an abuse of the hearing process. In the instant case, however, Respondent's counsel was advised that time would be given him to prepare concerning the affidavit. Thus, the timing of the furnishing of the affidavit to Respondent and the presentation of an edited affidavit at such time do not constitute an impairment to the receipt of the affidavit in evidence.

As to the question of whether an affidavit by a deceased person who has an interest in the proceeding has guarantees of trustworthiness, Board case law reveals that the affidavit is admissible but subject to careful and cautious consideration and to close scrutiny with the weight to be given subject to consideration of all of the circumstances and facts. Accordingly, I reaffirm the ruling wherein the affidavit of Jordon was received into the record.

The General Counsel further attempted to present testimony of Calloway as to statements made by Jordon to Calloway concerning the events surrounding his discharge. Such testimony was objected to and rejected. It is clear that the General Counsel did not advise Respondent prior to the hearing that he intended to introduce evidence through Calloway of statements by Jordon. Normally, such evidence would be inadmissible because of its hearsay characteristics. In the instant case, the principles of Federal Rule 804 has not been followed or practically applied. I reaffirm the ruling rejecting such testimony.

C. Supervisory Status[8]

At all times material herein, except as limited by indication, the following named persons occupied the positions set forth opposite their respective names, and have been and are now supervisors of Respondent at its Scott Street plant, within the meaning of Section 2(11) of the Act, and its agents: Marcus Rohtbart—owner; James Richardson—plant manager; Benjamin Govaere—supervisor; Lawrence Selig—supervisor until July 1, 1979, thereafter Michael Mislevy—supervisor; Matthew Guilfoyle[9]—boning room supervisor.

[8] The facts are based on the pleadings and admissions therein, and on stipulations. The General Counsel further contends and Respondent denies that Lawrence Selig's supervisory status commenced in the beginning of June 1979. It suffices to say that the evidence is not sufficient to establish that fact. Under the facts of this case as later found out, this appears to have little significance.

[9] The motion to amend the complaint to include Guilfoyle as a supervisor as indicated on the record sets forth the name "Matt Gilford." Witness Matthew Guilfoyle testified in this proceeding. The names sound similar. Under the circumstances I am persuaded that the correct name of the supervisor referred to is Matthew Guilfoyle.

D. Background

From in or about 1972 and through November 22, 1979, Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America, Local 26, AFL-CIO, or United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, Local 26, AFL-CIO-CLC, and Eastern Market Beef Processing Corporation had a collective-bargaining relationship and had collective-bargaining agreements, the last of which was effective from November 22, 1976, until November 22, 1979.

The last collective-bargaining agreement and perhaps earlier ones were agreements negotiated when Eastern Market Beef Processing Corporation bargained as part of the Detroit Meat Packers Association. Said agreement spelled out the covered appropriate bargaining unit as follows:

> All employees who are engaged in janitorial, receiving, boning, breaking, cutting, grinding, slicing, curing, preparing, processing, sealing, wrapping, bagging, prefabricating, of all meat products, sausage, poultry, fish and sea food products, whether such products are fresh, frozen, chilled, cooked, cured, smoked or barbecued, including those employees operating equipment used in wrapping, cubing, tenderizing of such meat products and who perform those duties in all areas where such products are prepared. All services as indicated above performed in the plant shall be performed by employees covered by this agreement.

The General Counsel alleges, and Respondent denies, in effect that the above-described appropriate bargaining unit of employees employed by Respondent at its facility located at 1545 Alfred Street, Detroit, Michigan, but excluding office clerical employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act, constitutes an appropriate bargaining unit within the meaning of the Act.

Respondent's counsel indicated an understanding that cleanup janitorial employees were not in the unit. Apparently in support of such contention, Respondent presented into evidence memorandum agreements relating to janitorial service employees and "night cleanup" employees. I would note, however, the 1976-79 contract was executed on December 15, 1977, and appears to have absorbed earlier agreements as indicated in such memorandum.

I note that the facts reveal that Respondent, prior to March 1979, had two plants, one on Alfred Street and the other on Adelaide Street. The plant on Adelaide Street apparently closed around March 1979 and its employees were transferred to the Alfred Street plant. Further, the union steward for the Adelaide plant became the union steward at the Alfred Street plant when the old steward left. Thus, it appears that Respondent's 1976-79 collective-bargaining agreement covered employees at both the Alfred and Adelaide Street plant until March 1979 and thereafter covered the employees at the Alfred Street plant. Further, it appears that, whether or not janitorial employees of Respondent were covered or in the bargaining unit prior to 1975 and 1976, such employees were included in the bargaining unit during the time of the before-referred-to 1976-79 collective-bargaining agreement. The sum of all of the facts establishes, and I conclude and find, that the bargaining unit as set forth above with respect to Respondent's employees at the Alfred Street plant and/or the Scott Street plant constitutes an appropriate collective-bargaining unit.

E. Bargaining and the New Plant—Scott Street Plant

In January 1979, Rohtbart, president of Respondent, discussed with his attorney the fact that Respondent was doing some subcontracting of work. It appears that at such time Rohtbart was contemplating and exploring the possibility of subcontracting agreements and was also involved in the planning of acquisition of new plant facilities and "changes" in operations, including changes in methods of payment for labor services. Respondent's attorney informed Rohtbart that he needed to notify the Union about his subcontracting of work.

Rohtbart, after exploring the idea of subcontracting, apparently decided not to enter into any extensive agreement with anyone for the subcontracting of work. Excepting for the foregoing reference to subcontracting, later events do not involve the question of true subcontracting. It appears from all of the evidence, and I draw such inference, that Respondent considered that it had the same obligation of notifying and bargaining with the Union about the relocation of its Alfred Street plant to Scott Street and about changes in operations and wage plans. In such regard, terminology of "subcontracting" appears to have been used with reference to said relocation and changes in operations or as a result of confusion otherwise.

Thus, in January 1979, Respondent was in the midst of arrangements to acquire a plant at Scott Street and of plans for the relocation of its Alfred Street plant.[10] Armstrong, business agent for Local 26, informed Seely, business representative for Local 26, that Respondent Plant Manager Richardson desired a meeting to discuss contracts and the procedure for moving the Alfred Street plant to the Scott Street facility.

Following the foregoing, Seely had a meeting with Richardson in the latter part of January 1979. What occurred is revealed by the following credited excerpts from Seely's testimony:

> Q. (By Mr. Howell) Where did the meeting take place?
> A. In the union office.
> Q. Who was present at this meeting?
> A. Mr. Jack—Maynard Jack Armstrong, Jim Richardson, and myself.
> Q. What time of day did that occur?
> A. In the morning.
> Q. What was said and by whom at this meeting?
> A. Mr. Richardson explained to me that the company had acquired the Scott Street facility and was intending to move very shortly into the Scott Street facility. That the Alfred Street facility would be closed, that the company was desirous of entering into a new collective bargaining agreement, which would be patterned after the Western—and I am putting that in quotes—"The Western Type Beef Packers" and that also the company was desirous of having a contract also comparable to the Western Beef Packers. Mr. Richardson further showed me a list of grades or classifications with pay rates describing the work content of the new radical type operation. He described it as a new on-the-rail beef boning operation.

* * * * *

All right. I said, "Do you want rates comparable to the Western Beef Packers also? He said, "Yes." I said, "You have your beef boners on an incentive plan at the Alfred Street facility. What happens to the incentive plan? He said, "There will be no incentive plan at the new operation." And I said, "Jim, you've got to be kidding. You're talking about cutting people's wages."

Later, on or about February 9, 1979, Richardson continued Respondent's approach to Local 26 concerning its desired changes by sending a letter to Maynard Armstrong which set forth reference to further discussion of proposed changes as follows:[11]

> Re: Current Status of Eastern Market Beef
> Dear Mr. Armstrong:
> As I am sure you are quite well aware, the small independent beef packers in the State of Michigan, and especially the City of Detroit, have experienced many problems of a financial nature in the last year. Several independent meat packers in the City of Detroit have been forced to close their facilities because they were unable to cope with the economic reality of meat packing in today's economy. Management has been actively engaged in studying the methods and procedures regarding the operation of a plant facility that are currently being used by independent meat packers in the western portion of the United States. It is our opinion that we can no longer continue to operate Eastern Market Beef as it is currently known to the union. There have been many innovations in the past couple of years that enable a packer to run its operations in a more effective, efficient, and competitive nature. As I am quite sure you know, the competition has become fierce in this industry.
> The union and the employer must work together to effectuate the changes that must be made in the current operations of Eastern Market Beef to enable it to remain a viable entity. We have no intention to displace any union employees. Our only goal is a reorganization that would enable us to be competitive in the marketplace. We intend to make some changes in areas that are not specifically covered under the current collective bargaining agreement. For this reason, we think it is proper at this time to invite you to contact us so we may arrange a mutually agreeable time to meet and discuss the future of Eastern Market Beef. Please bear in mind that these changes are essential to prevent Eastern Market Beef from going the same way as the following: Rem Packing Company, Prime Meat, Ray's Beef, Standard Beef, and Snow Beef.
> We are looking for your response in the very near future.

At some point of time in February 1979, Plant Manager Richardson and Local 26's chief steward, Peter C. Kitka III, engaged in a discussion concerning a grievance. During the time of such discussion, Kitka questioned Richardson as to whether Respondent had purchased the "Wolverine" plant on Scott Street. Richardson told Kitka that Respondent had purchased the Wolverine plant, that the operations at such plant would involve a different type of procedure for "boning," that there would be no need for artisan boning, and that this was the way "they do it out west and that is our competition. That's the way it is."

Later, around March 4, 1979, Respondent held meetings with chosen employee groups. At one of such meetings at least, Richardson showed the Alfred Street employees blueprints of the "Scott Street Plant," told the employees that they would be working there, and spoke concerning the proposed Scott Street plant as is revealed by the following excerpts from Kitka's credited testimony:

Q. What was said and by whom in that meeting?

A. Well, Jim was up there and he had the blueprints of the Scott Street plant.

Q. Did you examine those blueprints?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. What did they show?

A. Well, it had the whole floor plan of the whole Scott Street plant, showing the meat as it would come in. How they would bring it in off the trucks and how they would send it along the rails to different spots in the plant to be boned out and processed.

* * * * *

He started the meeting by saying, "You'll be working there. We will not have any need for any artisan boning or any skilled jobs." He also said that he did not care what kind of seniority we had, plant or departmental seniority. He said that that would be a different procedure altogether. Our competition is out west and that's what we're against. And he also said that March 15 was a deadline for signing the mortgage for the loan for plant and in 60 days after that we would move in. He also wanted the expiration date of our contract to be moved up to July 1. When he was asked about wages, he would say that we would have to negotiate that with the union.

[11] In the meantime, Local 26 had apparently taken no steps to comply with Respondent's request for discussions. It should be noted that, where there is a collective-bargaining agreement, changes therein cannot be made unilaterally even if there occurs bargaining to an impasse.

> One of the other employees asked him about new machinery in the plant, and he said that during the upcoming months they would be taking a line out of Plant 2 and a line out of Plant 1 and moving them over there, both the roll-omatic machines and other machines that would be used.
> He also said, if I can recall, that to remain solvent we would need, you know, a loan. He wanted our contract moved up. I've already said that, sorry. Right now, that is all I can recall.

At some point of time in March 1979, Respondent convened around 30 employees for a meeting in President Rohtbart's office. At such meeting were Plant Manager Richardson and President Rohtbart. During such meeting, a movie was shown the employees. What occurred is revealed by the following credited excerpts from David Dziepak:

> Q. What was the movie about that he showed?
> A. Mr. Richardson and Mr. Rohtbart explained that the movie was taken on a trip out West. And the movie depicted meat cutting operations in a plant out West. And the description of the movie was showing how beef was cut out West on the rail, and Mr. Richardson and Mr. Rohtbart explained that the way this meat was cut out West was a more efficient way of cutting it than the way we were cutting it at the Alfred Street plant.
> Q. Okay. Was anything else said at this meeting?
> A. Mr. Richardson and Mr. Rohtbart, I am not sure which one, said the general explanation, but they said this was a more efficient—boning on the rail, which is the way they bone it out West, was a more efficient way of boning it than the way we did at Scott Street, on the table.
> Q. Scott Street or Alfred Street.
> A. Alfred Street. At Alfred Street we were boning the meat on the table. And Mr. Richardson explained that they were planning on going to the more efficient way of boning meat, which would be on the rail.

At some point of time in March 1979, Local 26 received a petition from employees at the Alfred Street plant. Said petition requested Local 26 to enter into immediate negotiations with Eastern Market Beef for the purpose of negotiating a new contract. Seely, for Local 26, convened a union meeting to discuss the referred-to petition. What occurred is revealed by the following credited excerpts from Seely's testimony:

> Q. What occurred at this meeting?
> A. I presented the petition that had been given to the union and opened the floor immediately to questions as to what had precipitated their drawing up and signing a petition, reminding them that they had a contract in effect and they were being well taken care of and that their contract would continue until November 1979.

Following the above-referred-to union meeting, Seely had a telephone conversation with Plant Manager Richardson. What occurred is revealed by the following credited excerpts from Seely's testimony:

> Q. Who called who?
> A. Mr. Richardson called me.
> Q. What did he say and what did you say?
> A. He demanded to know who and why the union could act contrary to a petition that had been signed by the majority of the employees of Eastern Market Beef, and which the employees had demanded that Local 26 enter into contract negotiations. I responded that the petition had no weight because a local union had a contract with the company that ran to November of 1979.
> Q. Was anything else said during this conversation?
> A. I am trying to remember.
> Q. Was anything said regarding the multiemployer group?
> A. Yes that was the other part. This was also explained at the membership meeting, that there were some legal and or technical—
> Q. Who is doing the explaining?
> A. I am.
> Q. What did you say?
> A. That there were some legal or technical questions that barred Local 26 from terminating the contract with Eastern Market Beef because Eastern Market Beef were members, or a member of a multiemployer group that were signatory parties to the current collective bargaining agreement and that if we were desirous of terminating that contract the union would have to obtain approval from all the other signatory. This I considered at that time to be impossible.

On March 23, 1979, Respondent completed the purchase of the Wolverine plant facilities at Scott Street.

On or about April 15, 1979, President Rohtbart telephoned Seely. What occurred is revealed by the following credited excerpts from Seely's testimony:

> Q. And who called who?
> A. Mr. Marcus Rohtbart called me at approximately 4:00 o'clock in the afternoon.
> Q. What did he say and what did you say?
> A. He said to me, "Harold, we have to have a new contract." And I said, "Marcus, what's the hurry? You've got a contract that runs until November." I said, "We're covered. There's no problem." And he said, "No, I am having trouble with the bank. We had a lot of money involved and we have loans and the bank has to have some assurances before we can move over there to the Scott Street operation that we have to have a contract in effect." And I said, "Marcus, it is late in the day. Maybe I can make it tomorrow or possibly next week." Mr. Rohtbart said to me, "No, I am leaving town. You have to come over right now."

Following the above-referred-to conversation, Seely left his office and went to Respondent's office and met with President Rohtbart, Richardson, and Respondent's attorney, Hyman. What occurred is revealed by the following credited excerpts from Seely's testimony:

> Q. And what was said and by whom?
> A. Well Mr. Rohtbart again impressed or attempted to impress me with the fact that they had to negotiate a new agreement before they moved to Scott Street, that it was imperative and again, in his words, that they have a contract in effect when they made the move. One of the main—the primary purpose, as he explained to me, was that he had no intention of moving over to the new facility and then having to enter into negotiations and face a possible strike in November of 1979. I said that that made sense to me. I said, "So your only purpose in early negotiations are negotiating a new contract was to establish labor peace for operation in a new facility." And, he assured me that that was the only reason.
> Q. Was anything else said?
> A. Yes. I said, "As long as you have told me what your position is, I will tell you what our fears are." I said, "There has been talk in an membership meeting that I got from the membership that the company had planned to discontinue their participation in the various trust funds; pension, health and welfare, dental, optical, and prescription drug funds. So, there is a fear on the part of the union and the employees that the company intends to withdraw their participation from those funds." At that point, Mr. Rohtbart said, "Well, what can we do to assure you that we will not withdraw from the funds or hurt the employees?" And, I gave him some examples of what could happen. And, he said, "Well, I don't want to hurt the employees. What do you need?" I said, "I will need a written commitment from the company that the company will not withdraw from the funds, thereby protecting the employees interest." He looked around to Mr. Hyman and he said, "Can we do that?" And, Mr. Hyman assured him that we could. He then directed Mr. Hyman to draw up such a letter and present it to the union. And, I said, "When we get that letter, we can begin negotiations."

On Monday, April 2, 1979, Eastern Market Beef Processing Corporation held a special meeting of its board of directors. What occurred is revealed by the following excerpts of the minutes of said meeting:

> A Special Meeting of the Board of Directors was held at the office of the Company on Monday, April 2, 1979. All Directors were present.
> A discussion was had regarding the affairs of the Company. The Company has acquired a new plant located at 1825 Scott Street, Detroit, Michigan. The Company will be required to purchase equipment and remodel said plant. The operations to be conducted at said plant are different from the operations presently conducted by Company at its plant at 1545 Alfred Street, Detroit, Michigan.
> Upon motion duly made, seconded and carried, it was unanimously
> RESOLVED, That Company hereby establishes two divisions to be known as the Scott Street Division and the Alfred Street Division.
> FURTHER RESOLVED, That the business of the Scott Street Division shall be conducted at 1825 Scott Street, Detroit, Michigan, and the business of the Alfred Street Division shall be conducted at 1545 Alfred Street, Detroit, Michigan.
> FURTHER RESOLVED, That seperate bank accounts and separate books and records shall be maintained for each Division.
> FURTHER RESOLVED, That transfers of merchandise from one Division to another Division shall be invoiced and billed by the transferor Division and paid by check by the transferee Division.
> FURTHER RESOLVED, that each Division shall be maintained as a separate profit center.

On or about April 17, 1979, Plant Manager Richardson transmitted a letter to Seely. In said letter, Respondent gave the requested assurances as is revealed by the following excerpts from said letter:

> Management at Eastern Market Beef offers this letter to the union in order to show our good faith and to maintain labor peace.
> On February 9, 1979, a letter was sent to Mr. Armstrong inviting the union negotiating committee to meet with management and discuss the possibilities of subcontracting. We are anxious to resolve this matter with the present union and the present work force.
> Eastern Market Beef does not intend to revoke any of the benefits, embodied in the current Collective Bargaining Agreement dated November 22, 1979, that are presently being enjoyed by employees.

Following the receipt of Richardson's April 17, 1979, letter, Seely set up a meeting to elect a bargaining committee and to obtain proposals for demands to use in negotiation on a new contract. There is nothing in the record to indicate the exact date of such scheduled meeting.

On or around May 1, 1979, Seely received information from the Union's chief shop steward that Respondent had posted a copy of a letter from Attorney Hyman to Armstrong.[12] Later that day, a copy of the referred-to letter was hand-delivered to the Union's office. Such letter was as follows:

Re: Potential Subcontracting at Eastern Market Beef

Dear Mr. Armstrong:

In both our letters of February 9, 1979 and April 16, 1979, the employer, Eastern Market Beef, has expressed the urgency of meeting with the bargaining committee to discuss the potential effects of subcontracting on bargaining unit members. I have met with you at the plant and discussed this on one occasion.

As our letter of April 16, 1979 indicates, we do not intend to revoke any of the benefits embodied in the current collective bargaining agreement. I do not know what further we could have done to express the urgency of meeting with the bargaining committee and discussing these matters.

Still you have failed to heed our request to come to the table and negotiate. It is unfortunate for both the employer and the union that you have not done so. We are at a point in time where we are forced to negotiate with subcontractors. We intend to be negotiating with subcontractors during the month of May. Your failure to respond to our repeated requests has left us no other alternative.

Following the receipt of the above letter, Seely telephoned Richardson. What occurred is revealed by the following credited excerpts from Seely's testimony:

> Q. What was said during the conversation?
> A. Okay I then called Mr. Richardson and explained to him that the letter obviously was not intended for the union but was intended for the employees. I said that I did not appreciate the company posting a letter that was addressed to the union, posting it for the employees' intimidation before we had a chance to look at it. Further, I said to Mr. Richardson, I said, "Look, the company is telling us that they want to negotiate and then your hanging this sub-contracting thing over our head." I said, "You go ahead and talk to the sub-contracts first. And when you get through with them we will sit down and talk with you." And then Mr. Richardson said, "Look, we don't want to talk to any subcontractor. Let's just get started negotiating a contract so we can move."
> Q. Was anything else said?
> A. I think it was at that point that I told him that I had scheduled a meeting for the purpose of electing a bargaining committee and drawing up a proposal and I said that as soon as I was done he would get a copy of the proposals and we could begin.

Thereafter, Local 26 prepared proposals for negotiations. On May 14, 1979, Local 26 met with certain Respondent officials to discuss the oncoming negotiations. At such time, Local 26 presented certain proposals. Attending for Respondent were David Rohtbart, son of President Rohtbart, and Plant Manager Richardson. Attending for Local 26 were Seely, Chief Steward Kitka, Pat Hardy, Dave Dziepak, and apparently six other members. What occurred in effect is revealed by the following credited excerpts from Seely's testimony:

> Q. (By Mr. Howell) What was discussed at this first preliminary meeting?
> A. At the preliminary meeting most of the discussion was centered around the urgency on the company's part.
> Q. Who was doing the talking?
> A. Mr. Richardson. The urgency of reaching an agreement so that the move could be made to the new facility, the company further said—

* * * * *

> Mr. Richardson again. That Mr. Rohtbart senior and he had decided that a target date should be picked at which time an agreement should be reached. Must be reached. And if no agreement were reached by that date that the company would start sub-contracting the work.
> Q. Was anything else said?
> A. Well, I at that point, explored with Mr. Richardson about what he specifically meant by subcontracting. Because I was of the opinion or the feeling that sub-contracting as I have known it in the past was not being applied here in the interpretation of Mr. Richardson. So, I asked him to explain what he meant by sub-contracting. And, he told me that, "Our plan is to set up a satellite company in the new facility at Scott Street and have them do the work that is presently being done by the Alfred Street operation."

The first real bargaining session occurred on May 16, 1979. Later, on May 22, 1979, Richardson transmitted a letter to Seely which stated: "This is to clarify and inform you that Eastern Market Beef Processing Corp. will be negotiating its new contract by itself and on its own, apart from the Detroit Meat Wholesalers Assoc." Following this, there were around seven bargaining sessions with the last bargaining session occurring on June 7, 1979. It appears that the parties had reached agreement on all items for a new contract excepting the parties could not reach agreement on certain cost-of-living provision language.

The respective positions of the parties were as revealed by the following credited excerpts from Seely's testimony:

> Q. What was the union's position?

> A. The union's position was we had proposed a semiannual cost of living adjustment which would have allowed full adjustment of cost of living without regard to maximums. The company's position was that there would be a continuation of the cost of living formula in the old contract which provided for a ten cent cap every six months.

What occurred with respect to the disagreement on the cost-of-living language in the proposal and the proposal as a whole is revealed by the following credited excerpts from Seely's testimony:

> Q. What occurred at this June 7th, 1979 bargaining session?
> A. Well when we reached a point where we could not agree on the cost of living language, the company then requested that the union take the offer to the employees, to the membership, for a vote. And requested also that the union—first ask the union if we would recommend it for acceptance. We said that we would not. The company had requested, or asked if we would take the package to the members with no recommendation. And, we agreed that we would.

Thereafter on June 12, 1979, Local 26 held a ratification vote for the contract proposals. These were rejected by the Union's membership.

On June 13, 1979, Seely telephoned Richardson and related the results of the vote by the membership. What occurred is revealed by the following credited excerpts from Seely's testimony:

> Q. What did he say and what did you say?
> A. Well it was the following morning and I was reporting to him the results of the vote that had been taken. I would like to point out that was a secret ballot vote. I explained to Mr. Richardson that the final proposal of the company had been rejected by a vote of 76 to 6 and that we were interested in getting back to the bargaining table. Mr. Richardson asked me if Mr. Shapiro was back in town and I said that he was not yet back and, he said, "Well have Mr. Shapiro call me as soon as he gets back and we will get back together again."

In the meantime certain employees had been hired by Respondent to engage in cleanup work at the facility it had purchased on Scott Street. On June 16, 1979, Respondent assigned production jobs at the Scott Street facility. On the same day Respondent recognized the Industrial, Technical, and Professional employees, a Division of National Maritime Union, AFL-CIO, as the exclusive collective-bargaining agent for its Scott Street plant employees. On June 17, 1979, Respondent executed a collective-bargaining agreement with NMU. The bargaining unit covered by such contract is as follows:

> All production and maintenance employees employed by the Respondent at its plant located at 1825 Scott Street, Detroit, Michigan; but excluding office employees, employees of independent contractors, sales personnel, professional employees, and guards and supervisors as defined in the National Labor Relations Act.

During the week preceding June 17, 1979, Howard Shapiro, Local 26's business agent, was in Washington, D.C., in connection with the merger which changed Local 26 from being Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America, Local 26, AFL-CIO, to United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, Local 26, AFL-CIO-CLC. Shapiro returned to Detroit on the night of June 17, 1979. During the week following, Shapiro telephoned Plant Manager Richardson's office on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday (June 18, 19, and 20, 1979). On such occasions, the person who took Shapiro's call informed him that Richardson was not available.[13] Said person, however, took Shapiro's name and telephone number and told him that Richardson would return his telephone call.

On June 21, 1979, Shapiro transmitted the following letter to Respondent:

> As you are aware, at the urgent behest of the Company, we have been in negotiations with you for more than a month, despite the fact that our current agreement is not due to expire until November of this year.
> We responded to the urgency of your request because of your representation that it was necessary to finalize a new agreement preparatory to moving into a new plant which would necessitate a revolutionary change in your methods of operation.
> During this one month period we have attempted in all good faith to arrive at a new, mutually acceptable agreement. However, as you know, the most recent proposal by the Company was voted down in a secret ballot vote by an overwhelming majority.
> I have since that time requested that we resume negotiations in an attempt to resolve the outstanding issues. You have failed to set a date for this purpose, and phone calls I have made to you have found you unavailable and were not returned.
> Additionally, you have begun operations in the new plant, hiring approximately 30 new employees who will be performing the same work covered by our existing and un-expired [sic] Collective Bargaining Agreement.
> It appears to me that you have provoked serious doubts about the good faith bargaining required by law and implemented over many years in the relationship between your Company and the Union.
> We hereby assert that the so-called new plant is an integral part of the operation of the Eastern Market Beef Company and demand that the new employees hired by you receive all the wages and conditions provided for in our Collective Bargaining Agreement.

[13] Shapiro in his testimony revealed that the person who took his telephone calls was a female. Shapiro described her as the operator who took his telephone calls.

> Should you fail to do so, the Union will be compelled to utilize its full resources under law to assure compliance with the contract and the full protection of the wages, conditions and seniority of your employees.
> We do not seek a confrontation with your Company. We much prefer to resolve things peaceably and maintain and strengthen a decent relationship which has existed over the years.
> It is my sincere hope that you feel the same way.
> May I expect to hear from you soon.

On June 26, 1979, Plant Manager Richardson transmitted a reply to Shapiro's June 21, 1979, letter, as is revealed by the following:

> Thank you for your June 21, 1979 letter. As I am sure you are aware, I was unable to meet last week because Markus was out for several days and I was extremely busy for reasons I am sure you well understand.
> When we made our last offer to you, it was my fondest hope that the union would recommend it to the employees and that the employees would approve it. Unfortunately, our best offer was rejected by an overwhelming majority.
> To remove any possible doubt in your mind, it is our current intention to continue to operate the Alfred Street facility.
> We reject the other assertions set forth in your June 21, 1979 letter.
> If after reviewing the above you still desire to meet, please give me a call and we can set up a meeting this week.

On the next day, Local 26 filed an unfair labor practice charge which was docketed as Case 7-CA-16527. Such charge alleged in effect that Respondent "Since in or about May. 1979," had refused to bargain in good faith by repudiating the collective-bargaining agreement in existence between Respondent and Local 26 and entered into on December 15, 1977, and effective November 22, 1976, to and including November 22, 1979. Such conduct was alleged to be violative of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

Around July 23, 1979, an agent or agents for Local 26 commenced monitoring activities at Respondent's Scott Street plant, and commenced organizational efforts directed at Respondent's Scott Street plant employees. On August 2, 1979, the Regional Director issued a letter advising the parties that he was refusing to issue a complaint in Case 7-CA-16527.

Among the employees who worked at the Scott Street plant and who engaged in some union activity toward the end of July and first part of August were employees J. C. Bonner and Elmer Jordon. On or about August 1, 1979, Respondent discharged J. C. Bonner. On or about August 6, 1979, Respondent discharged Elmer Jordon. On August 7, 1979, Local 26 filed unfair labor practice charges against Respondent. Such charges, docketed as Case 7-CA-16680, allege in effect that Respondent had discriminatorily discharged Bonner and Jordon because of their activities on behalf of the Union. Such conduct is alleged to constitute conduct violative of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act. Following this, on August 21, 1979, Local 26 took an appeal to the General Counsel from the Regional Director's August 2, 1979, refusal to issue a complaint in Case 7-CA-16527. On the same day, August 21, 1979, Local 26 filed an amended charge in Case 7-CA-16680, alleging in effect that Respondent had assisted and recognized NMU improperly and in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (2) of the Act.

On September 6, 1979, Kearis, president of Local 26, transmitted a letter to Respondent Plant Manager Richardson. Said letter in effect notified Respondent of Local 26's desire to negotiate changes in the existing collective-bargaining agreement between the parties. At the same time Local 26 gave notice to the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service of the proposed modification of the existing contract.

On September 28, 1979, the Regional Director issued a complaint in Case 7-CA-16680. Such complaint alleges conduct violative of Section 8(a)(3), (2), and (1) of the Act. At the same time the Regional Director refused to issue complaint in the broadest scope of Section 8(a)(2) of the Act.

On or about October 1, 1979, Business Representative Seely spoke to Plant Manager Richardson concerning negotiations and whether Respondent intended to negotiate as part of the multiemployer group or intended to negotiate on an individual basis. Richardson indicated to Seely that Hyman would handle the negotiations from that point on. On October 1, 1979, Seely transmitted a letter to Attorney Hyman and requested a response as to whether Respondent intended to bargain individually or as a group. Said letter indicated that enclosed with such letter were proposals for the new collective-bargaining agreement. Thereafter, on October 4, 1979, Hyman, by letter, indicated receipt of Seely's October 1, 1979, letter, advised that Respondent intended to negotiate on an individual basis, and informed Seely to feel free to contact him at his office.

On October 9, 1979, the General Counsel denied the Charging Party's appeal from the Regional Director's refusal to issue a complaint in Case 7-CA-16527.[14] On October 10, 1979, the Charging Party appealed the Regional Director's refusal to issue complaint in Case 7-CA-

[14] As noted previously, the charge therein alleged conduct violative of Sec. 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act and referred to an alleged repudiation of the collective-bargaining agreement.

16680 in certain aspects with regard to alleged conduct violative of Section 8(a)(1) and (2) of the Act.[15]

On or about October 23, 1979, Hyman, for Respondent, transmitted the following letter to Seely for Local 26.

> I am writing this letter to inquire when and if you intend on negotiating with Eastern Market Beef on the Alfred Street plant. I have discussed this matter with you on several occasions and you have informed me that you would get back to me.
> I received your cover letter dated October 1, 1979 in which you inquired as to whether we would be bargaining as a group or individually. On October 4, 1979, I answered with my letter informing you that we intended to negotiate individually. Since that date, I have heard nothing further from you regarding these negotiations.
> Please be put on notice that the employer is, and has at all times, been ready, willing, and able to negotiate on the Alfred Street facility. Please contact me so that we may arrange to negotiate at times mutually agreeable to both parties.

On or about October 23, 1979, James Williams III, for the USDA, gave Plant Manager Richardson a memorandum dated October 23, 1979. Such memorandum referred apparently to a prior inspection date of July 23, 1979, of various "projects" of correction which had been due to start on 8-15-79 and due to have been completed by 9-15-79, and due to start on 9-12-79 and to be completed by 10-12-79. Further, such memorandum indicated that Williams had to have from Respondent the dates when corrective action would be taken and completed. Such memorandum indicated that, if this were not done, the areas mentioned would have to be "rejected."[16]

Sometime after Seely received Hyman's October 23, 1979, letter, Respondent and the Union agreed to have a bargaining session on October 29, 1979. Considering the timing of events, I find it reasonable to infer that the agreement to have a bargaining session on October 29, 1979, occurred after Respondent had received Williams' October 23, 1979, memorandum.

In the meantime, on March 23, 1979, when Respondent purchased the "Scott Street plant," Respondent entered into certain financial arrangements with the Michigan National Bank of Detroit as is revealed by excerpts from a summary of transactions in evidence as an exhibit. Such excerpts are as follows:

> SUMMARY OF TRANSACTIONS
> On March 23, 1979, EMB purchased from Wolverine Packing Co. the plant and equipment located at 1825 Scott Street, Detroit, Michigan, for $1,500,000 cash. The purchase price was allocated as follows:

Land and Building	$841,720.00
Equipment	$658,280.00

> On the same day, EMB borrowed $1,500,000 from Michigan National Bank of Detroit. The promissory note evidencing said debt bears interest at 1/2 of 1% over prime and is payable in monthly installments beginning May 1, 1979, of $12,500 per month plus accrued interest. A balloon final payment of $312,500 plus accrued interest is due on April 1, 1987.
> On the same day, EMB entered into a loan agreement with MNB covering a $2,500,000 line of credit including obligations on outstanding letters of credit. The interest on the line of credit loan is prime. Letter of credit charges are 1/2 of 1% per annum. EMB agreed to maintain compensating balances with MNB of $600,000, of which $300,000 must be collected funds.
> Present and future obligations and debts of EMB to MNB are secured by a mortgage on the Scott Street real estate and by a security interest in all presently owned and hereafter acquired equipment, inventory, accounts, etc.
> The foregoing summary is a general outline only and the complete terms of the transactions are set forth in the documents attached.

At some point of time between March 1979 and October 22, 1979, Respondent's letter line of credit had been increased by the Michigan National Bank of Detroit to $4 million. In any event, on October 22, 1979, the Michigan National Bank of Detroit approved a "reapproval" of a $4 million letter line of credit and approved a $500,000 term loan to be added to the existing $1-1/2 term loan.

Around October 25, 1979, President Rohtbart spoke to Peter P. Miller of the Michigan National Bank of Detroit and told him that he needed $2 million as an additional loan. Miller told Rohtbart the bank had extended him loans in an amount as considered possible and that the bank was not willing to extend any higher loan.[17]

F. The Closing of the Alfred Street Plant

On October 29, 1979, Local 26 and Respondent met at the Union's offices as scheduled. What occurred is revealed by the following credited excerpts from Seely's testimony:

> Q. Who was present?
> A. Present was Pete Kitka, the chief steward, Dave Dziepak, committee man, Robert Walker, an executive board member of Local 26, who had been

---

[15] Although the timing of these events might suggest that the October 10, 1979, appeal was with knowledge of the General Counsel's October 9, 1979, action, I would find the evidence insufficient to so establish. If the October 9, 1979, action were by letter, it would not appear that the parties would be aware of the same by October 10, 1979. The parties may have been aware of such actions by telegrams, or by telephone communication. However, the facts do not so establish.

[16] The evidence does not reveal whether the October 23, 1979, memorandum from Williams occurred before or after Hyman had transmitted his letter of October 23, 1979, to Seely.

[17] I credit that the conversation took place. Rohtbart's testimony revealed that he was very knowledgeable about money, collateral, and other facts of business life. Considering all of the facts, I am not persuaded that Rohtbart seriously sought said loan. Rather, I am persuaded that Rohtbart sought to obtain the answer he expected and received the same.

> working with me on negotiations. And for the employer were Mr. Hyman, and a man I believe whose name was Woods, his associate.
> Q. Okay what was said and by whom?

> Yes this is a letter that Mr. Hyman had delivered at the bargaining table.

The letter delivered to the Union and bargaining committee was as follows:

> Dear Mr. Seeley & Bargaining Committee Members:
> The employer, Eastern Market Beef Processing Corporation, regrets to inform you that we are here today to negotiate the closing of the Alfred Street Plant. The purpose of this negotiating session is to negotiate the closing of the plant and the effect of the closing on current employees at the Alfred Street facility.
> Economic conditions have made it impossible to continue the operation of the Alfred Street facility. The conditions involve but are not limited to the following:
> (A) Less credit availability.
> (B) Higher interest costs.
> (C) Tighter margins
> (D) United States Department of Agriculture requirements for refurbishing the Alfred Street facility which must be met prior to licensing.
> The employer has every intention of paying off accrued vacation time, accrued sick pay time, and with dealing with all pending grievances which remain unsettled as of the date of this agreement.
> Respectfully yours,
> /s/ Douglas A. Hyman
> Douglas A. Hyman
> Attorney for Eastern
> Market Beef Processing
> Corporation

After deliverance of the letter, what occurred is revealed by the following credited excerpts from Seely's testimony:

> We read the letter. And I said, "Do you intend to keep operating at the Scott Street facility?" And, he said, "Yes." And, I said, "Will any of the Alfred Street employees be transferred over to the Scott Street facility?" And his answer was, "We are taking applications." And I said, "Are you going to recognize seniority at the Scott Street application of the Alfred Street employees?" He said, "No. We are taking applications." I said, "On those employees that you do hire will you recognize their Alfred Street seniority?" And, he said, "No." And, I said, "Do you really intend to put a 160 people out on the street just like that?" And, he shrugged, you know like tough.
> Mr. Sykes: I object, your honor, and move to—
> The Witness: That's what he did.
> Mr. Sykes: Your honor, I object and move to strike the witnesses—
> The Witness: I am testifying under oath, your honor.
> Mr. Sykes: —Characterization of that's tough.
> Judge Stone: I will strike the words and impression like that's tough. If the witness is testifying that he in effect shrugged his shoulders, I will allow the record to still show that. Go ahead.
> Q. (By Mr. Howell) Did he advise you of a date?
> A. Yes he did.
> Q. What did he say?
> A. He told me that the plant would be closed at the expiration of the contract which was November 23rd.

After the October 29, 1979, meeting between Respondent and Local 26, the facts reveal a number of unfair labor practice charges and letters exchanged by the parties in such a manner that the same appeared similar to that of filing pleadings and motions.

On November 1, 1979, Local 26 filed an unfair labor practice charge against Respondent. In such charge, docketed as Case 7-CA-17014, Local 26 in effect reiterated its earlier charge in Case 7-CA-16527, added more detailed language relating to discrimination and transfer of work, and added a of refusal-to-bargain allegation concerning the closing of the Alfred Street plant. In sum, the charge alleged conduct violative of Section 8(a)(5), (3), and (1) of the Act.

On November 2, 1979, Hyman, attorney for Respondent, transmitted a letter to Seely which set forth the following relating to the meeting earlier held on October 29, 1979.[18]

> Dear Mr. Seeley:
> Please accept this letter as a follow up to our plant closing negotiations which took place on October 30, 1979 at your offices at 10:00 a.m. in the morning.
> During that meeting, we explained to you we would be closing the Alfred Street facility and also discussed briefly, the reasons for closing. In that meeting, I informed you that the employer has every intention of negotiating the effects of plant closure on current employees at the Alfred Street facility. At that meeting, I informed you and your negotiating committee that we have every intention > of paying off accrued sick time, accrued vacation time and with dealing with any and all pending grievances.

---

[18] Said letter set forth that such meeting was held on October 30, 1979. The testimony revealed that such meeting was held on October 29, 1979. Whether such meeting was held on October 30 or on October 29, 1979, would not vary the effect of the meeting.

> It is important that you contact me so that we may arrange a time and place to work out the final phases of the plant closure. I will be expecting to hear from you within the next week, as to an agreeable time and place to work out the figures and final dollar amounts that may be due to employees.

Following this November 2, 1979, letter was a letter dated November 8 and a letter dated November 12, 1979. The sum effect of such letters reveals an effort to have the Union negotiate concerning the effects of the closing of the Alfred Street plant.[19]

At some point of time, apparently around November 12, 1979, Local 26 filed a grievance concerning Respondent's decision to close the Alfred Street plant.

On November 16, 1979, Attorneys Kruszewski and Steckloff, for Local 26, transmitted a letter to Plant Manager Richardson with copies of the same apparently transmitted to Local 26, Howell (of Region 7 of the National Labor Relations Board), and to Douglas Hyman (attorney for Respondent). Said letter set forth a contention that Respondent had been under an obligation to bargain with Local 26 about the decision to close the Alfred Street facility, demanded that Respondent fulfill such obligation before carrying out its intention to close, demanded transfer rights to the Scott Street facility for the Alfred Street employees, requested certain specific information relating to Respondent's decision and actions, demanded an audit of Respondent's books, and demanded that negotiations resume.

On or around November 20, 1979, Respondent's attorney, Hyman, responded to the foregoing letter by transmittal of a telegram and a letter. The telegram was transmitted to Seely and Shapiro of Local 26, referred to Kruszewski's letter of November 16, and indicated that Hyman was waiting for Local 26 to contact him with dates "to negotiate the decision to close and to negotiate the effect of closure if it does take place." The letter was transmitted to Kruszewski with copy thereof to Seely. Said letter referred to Kruszewski's November 16, 1979, letter, and set forth the following:

> As you know, Eastern Market Beef has requested bargaining over the decision and effects of the contemplated closing of the Alfred Street plant for sometime. On October 30, 1979, I hand carried a letter to the union at a negotiating session relative to same and was ready, willing and able to discuss any aspects of the contemplated closing and effects. On November 2, 1979, November 8, 1979 and November 12, 1979, I wrote the union a letter relative to the foregoing.
> It is unfortunate at this late date that the union now desires us to contact them relative to a meeting; it would seem that the union could have called me instead of having you write a letter requesting me to contact them. Be that as it may, I have this date, sent a telegram to the union requesting to know what dates they are available to meet.
> The company not having heard from the union, has gone ahead and made plans for the immediate discontinuance of production effective upon the termination of the contract. We are still ready to discuss the long term future of the plant including the decision and effects of any permanent closure.
> Relative to the information you have requested us to tender to the union, we will take that up with the union as requested in the last paragraph of your November 16, 1979 letter. We will, of course, provide the union such information as is required by the National Labor Relations Act as amended.

On November 21, 1979, Local 26 filed a suit in the United States District Court, Eastern District of Michigan, Southern Division. Such suit, against Respondent, was directed toward prohibiting Respondent's closure of the Alfred Street plant.[20] Following the filing of the suit, apparently with notice to Respondent and with the presence of Respondent's attorney, Hyman, in court, United States District Judge, Honorable Ralph M. Freeman, issued a temporary restraining order directed at restraining Respondent from closing its Alfred Street plant. On the same day, after the filing of said suit in court, Respondent filed an unfair labor practice charge against Local 26. Such charge was docketed as Case 7-CB-4620 and alleged that Local 26, since October 1, 1979, had refused to bargain with respect to a decision to close the Alfred Street facility and with respect to the effects of the closing of such facility.

On November 27, 1979, a hearing was conducted, and Judge Freeman dissolved the temporary restraining order issued in Case 9-74420 on November 21, 1979. On the same date or the next day, Respondent closed down its operations at its Alfred Street plant.[21]

On November 28, 1979, the Regional Director for Region 7 of the National Labor Relations Board issued a letter setting forth that he was declining to issue a complaint in Case 7-CA-17014 (involving refusal-to-bargain charges—Sec. 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act). At some point of time in the first week of December 1979, Respondent and the Union met and discussed certain grievances that were outstanding. On December 7, 1979, Respondent transmitted a letter setting forth in effect a request that the charges in Case 7-CB-4620 be withdrawn. Apparently, the Regional Director approved said withdrawal request on or about that date.

On December 10, 1979, Local 26 initiated an appeal of the Regional Director's decision not to issue a complaint in Case 7-CA-17014. On the same day, Respondent and

[19] I note that the parties during the events spoke of the "closing" of the Alfred Street plant. Further, the facts reveal that, with respect to the operation of the Alfred Street plant, such plant was closed on November 27, 1979. Respondent, however, amended its pleadings to admit only that it ceased operations on or about November 26, 1979.

[20] Docketed as Case 9-74420.

Local 26 met and negotiated an agreement relating to certain grievances.

On December 18, 1979, Respondent's attorney, Hyman, transmitted a letter to Kruszewski, Local 26's attorney. Certain excerpts from such letter are as follows:

> Enclosed please find documentation pursuant to your request and letter dated November 16, 1979.
> Since June 1, 1979 and prior to your letter, the employer moved two 8200 cryovac machines, one bonematic, and a portion of a box conveyor from the Alfred Street facility.

In January 1980, Respondent let a contract for certain repairs or changes to the Alfred Street plant. The expenditure for such work was in the amount of $33,030.

Later, on February 28, 1980, Respondent's attorney, Hyman, by letter, advised Local 26's attorney, Kruszewski, that Respondent had decided to sell the Alfred Street facility and that the sale was expected to be consummated immediately.

G. Miscellaneous

1. Some of the testimony of witnesses and the exhibits in the case suggest that economic considerations had some bearing on Respondent's actions in this case. As to Respondent's actions concerning the acquisition of the Scott Street plant and the attempt to bargain for a new contract in mid-1979, the facts are sufficient only to support a finding that President Rohtbart considered that Respondent would end up with a better financial arrangement with the purchase of such plant, changed operational procedures, and new wage agreements.

The evidence as presented concerning financial conditions covered Respondent and its wholly owned subsidiaries. The record does not reveal what such subsidiaries are. Further, such records for 1980 contained data relating to both the Alfred Street and Scott Street plants and negates a real comparison of the different systems of operation. One of Respondent's letters alludes to the cost of production but excludes therefrom the cost of fringe benefits. Further, Respondent's letters refer to "economic" reasons but also set forth that Respondent was not pleading poverty. In sum, the facts relating to Respondent's initial acquisition of the Scott Street facility and the attempt to negotiate a new contract are sufficient only to show that President Rohtbart believed that Respondent would end up with a better financial arrangement with the purchase of said plant, changed operational procedures, and new wage agreements.

The above affords little help toward the understanding of the events in June 1979, whereby Respondent commenced operations with new employees and different wages and other conditions at Scott Street as compared to Alfred Street. The instant proceeding is not one whereby Respondent planned to and did subcontract work to another employer or where Respondent ceased operations entirely because of economic conditions. It can always be said that if a respondent could obtain a different contract with wage rates or other conditions of a nature to be more financially advantageous to itself that such has economic overtones. Such does not constitute a defense, however, to unilateral changes of contractually agreed-to conditions during the time of the contract. In sum, most of the evidence relating to economics has little relevance to the issues in this proceeding.

The same problem as to relevance or materiality of the economic evidence is also presented with respect to Respondent's termination of the Alfred Street employees. As indicated later herein, Respondent's actions in June 1979 in hiring employees for the Scott Street plant and in unilaterally setting wages and conditions were violative of Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (5) of the Act. This being so, Respondent's ultimate November 1979 action of termination of employees without having corrected the earlier unfair labor practice makes the "economic" factors largely immaterial.[22]

2. The evidence relating to a comparison of the operation and other factors pertaining to Respondent's Alfred Street and Scott Street plants may be summarized as follows:

On April 2, 1979, Respondent established two divisions to be known as the Scott Street Division and the Alfred Street Division. Such divisions were to have separate bank accounts, books, and records; transfers of merchandise from one division to the other would be handled by invoice, bills, and checks; and the two divisions were to be handled as separate profit centers. James Richardson was plant manager at Alfred Street prior to June 16, 1979, and appears to have continued such responsibilities thereafter until November 23, 1979. The evidence on such point is scanty. However, Respondent presented into the record a document which Richardson testified was given him around October 23, 1979, by an agent of the United States Department of Agriculture. Such document indicated that it was directed to Plant Manager Richardson and concerned itself with the contention at the Alfred Street plant. The overall tenor of the facts indicates that Richardson functioned as plant manager of both the Alfred Street plant and the Scott Street plant and that he had assistants to help him supervise the plants.[23] The facts are clear that Richardson handled labor relations for both plants in the matter of collective bargaining. The customers and suppliers for both the plants were the same. The employees at both the plants were engaged in the fabrication and processing of beef. It may be said that all except a small number of the employees at the Scott Street plant engaged in such fabrication and processing. A few employees at the Scott Street plant engaged in maintenance and laundry work not performed by employees in the bargaining unit at the Alfred Street plant. The testimony of Richardson as to whether rendering work was performed at the Alfred Street plant was confused. It appears that a few employees performed such work at the Scott Street plant and that such rendering work was not performed at the Alfred Street plant.[24]

It appears that, at times before the termination of the Alfred Street plant, Respondent had had to utilize services of public cold storage warehouses. At the Scott Street plant, Respondent had a cold storage warehouse of its own. The record is silent as to whether after June 16, 1979, Respondent, for its Alfred Street plant, utilized its Scott Street plant storage facilities, or whether it had to use public cold storage warehouses. From the overall testimony as to finances, the evidence suggests that Respondent would have used its cold storage warehouse at the Scott Street plant for needs at the Alfred Street plant.[25] Further, Respondent had an automatic weigher at the Scott Street plant and did not have a similar weigher at its Alfred Street plant.

Around the middle of August 1979, Respondent moved its business office from the Alfred Street plant to its Scott Street plant, and commenced its office functions from such changed location. Further, several items of machinery were moved from the Alfred Street plant to the Scott Street plant. Some of such machinery was replaced at the Alfred Street plant by machinery which served the same functions.

H. Contentions and Conclusions

1. Hiring of employees and establishment of wages and terms and conditions of employment of employees at Respondent's Scott Street plant

The General Counsel contends and Respondent denies that Respondent discriminatorily selected employees for hiring for commencement of its Scott Street plant operation instead of utilizing the employees who were engaged at Respondent's Alfred Street plant. The General Counsel contends and Respondent denies that Respondent discriminated in employment conditions and refused to bargain with the Union by unilaterally setting wages and terms and conditions of employment for employees at Respondent's Scott Street plant. The General Counsel contends and Respondent denies that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (5) of the Act by the above-referred-to conduct.

Considering all of the facts, I find merit in the General Counsel's contentions. Thus, the credited facts reveal that Respondent's agents told Local 26's agents that the Alfred Street plant would be closed and that Respondent was going to move its operations to a new facility at Scott Street. Respondent's agents told Local 26 that it desired a new contract geared to its contemplated new type "boning on the rail" operation. Thereafter, despite the fact that the existing contract did not expire until November 22, 1979, the parties attempted to negotiate a new contract. After the parties had reached agreement on all items except certain cost-of-living proposals, Respondent requested Local 26 to submit the same to the membership. Such was done and the proposal was rejected. It was only then, and without notice, that employees outside the bargaining unit were hired. It was also, and without notice, that Respondent instituted at the Scott Street plant new wages and working conditions which were different from the wage scales and conditions of employment in existence at its Alfred Street plant.

Respondent contends in effect that it intended to have two divisions and that it only ceased operations of the Alfred Street plant in November because of certain economic problems. In this regard, only Respondent's minutes of April 2, 1979, tend to support such contention. It should be noted, however, that the handling of the affairs of the Alfred Street plant and the Scott Street plant as contemplated very well could only be a bookkeeping device so as to know clearly the profitability or lack thereof of the "rail-boning" procedure. Contrary to this contention is the fact that Respondent was bargaining with Local 26 for a contract at a time when the old contract was still in existence and would be in existence for 5 or 6 months. Further, no evidence was presented to reveal that Respondent was thinking of refurbishing the Alfred Street plant or that it communicated to the Union that it had refurbished the Alfred Street plant. Even after notices from the USDA in July 1979 of problems to be corrected, Respondent took no steps to correct building problems at the Alfred Street plant. If Respondent had actually planned to continue operations of two plants, I am persuaded that Respondent's request for loans, made prior to October 22, 1979, would have included amounts sufficient for the Alfred Street plant operation. The sum of the facts reveals that Respondent in May and June had decided to move its Alfred Street plant operation to the Scott Street plant and had determined to utilize its existing bargaining unit as its employee unit at the Scott Street plant. Similar to the reasoning in N.L.R.B. v. Burns International Security Services, Inc., 406 U.S. 272 (1972); and Howard Johnson Co. v. Hotel Employees, 417 U.S. 249 (1974), Respondent's determinations as set forth above fixed its obligation to bargain with Local 26. This being so, Respondent was not free to determine unilaterally wages and terms and conditions of its Scott Street plant employees since the same were covered by an existing collective-bargaining agreement. It follows that Respondent's unilateral setting of new terms of wages, hours, and conditions of employment constituted conduct violative of Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act. It further follows that Respondent's determination to hire employees not in the existing bargaining unit, following bargaining unit employees' rejection of the contract Respondent desired, and in the context wherein Respondent had previously thereto decided to move its bargaining unit employees to the new location at Scott Street, constitutes conduct violative of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.[26]

[23] A finding, however, that Richardson from June 16, 1979, onward was plant manager only at Scott Street would not affect the ultimate findings of facts herein.

[24] A different finding as regards the rendering work would not affect the overall findings of facts herein.

[25] A different finding would not affect the overall findings herein.

2. The termination of operations at the Alfred Street plant and the termination of these employees

The General Counsel alleges and contends in effect and Respondent denies that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (5) of the Act by terminating its Alfred Street plant employees and terminating the Alfred Street plant operations on November 27, 1979.

It has been previously found in effect that Respondent had decided before June 1979 that it would move its Alfred Street plant employees to the Scott Street plant, that its bargaining unit at the Scott Street plant would be the Alfred Street plant unit, and that Respondent had bargained with Local 26 on such a basis. This being so, Respondent's contract covering its Alfred Street plant employees covered its Scott Street plant unit, and Respondent was not free to make unilateral changes in the terms and conditions for its Scott Street employees absent consent by the Union. It, thus, was found that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act by unilaterally setting terms and conditions of employment for the Scott Street employees which were different from the existing terms and conditions covering the Alfred Street plant employees.

The facts reveal in effect that commencing around June 16, 1979, Respondent engaged in conduct of discrimination against the Alfred Street plant employees by not employing them at the Scott Street plant under the terms and conditions of the existing collective-bargaining contract with Local 26. The facts also reveal that Respondent gave misinformation to Local 26 and disguised its plans. Such conduct clearly constitutes violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act.

Further, the facts as later set out reveal that Respondent, commencing around June 16, 1979, engaged in conduct violative of Section 8(a)(1) and (2) by rendering aid and assistance to the Industrial, Technical, and Professional Employees, a Division of National Maritime Union, AFL-CIO, by recognition of such union and by executing a collective-bargaining agreement with said Union in the face of Local 26's rights and claims, and by other acts.

Considering all of the facts, I find it clear that Respondent terminated its Alfred Street plant and employees of such plant without bargaining with Local 26, and that such conduct was violative of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act. I also find it clear that Respondent's termination of the Alfred Street employees constituted a discriminatory termination in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

Thus, where the facts reveal that Respondent had determined that its employees at the Scott Street plant would be its Alfred Street plant bargaining unit and thereafter has violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by the hiring of other employees and has violated Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act by unilaterally setting different wages and terms and conditions for the Scott Street employees as compared to the Alfred Street plant employees, absent a correction of such unfair labor practices or other evidence persuasive of good-faith bargaining, the facts preponderate for a finding of failure to bargain in good faith as to the termination of the Alfred Street plant when such occurred. Thus, the facts preponderate for a finding that Respondent's termination of the Alfred Street plant operations constituted conduct violative of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act. Similarly, where Respondent's discriminatory conduct in the hiring of new employees has not been corrected and in the absence of affirmative steps to eliminate any effect of discrimination upon the Alfred Street plant employees, the facts preponderate for a finding that Respondent's termination of the Alfred Street plant employees on November 27, 1979, constituted discriminatory conduct based on their membership and support of Local 26 and in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

The General Counsel contends and Respondent denies that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act by not transferring or allowing Alfred Street plant employees to transfer to the Scott Street plant. The facts are clear that the Union clearly sought to have Alfred Street plant employees transferred to the Scott Street plant in November 1979, and that Respondent set forth in effect that it would not do so but would accept "applications" for employment. In the context of all of the facts, such conduct reveals that Respondent has not transferred and has refused to allow Alfred Street plant employees to transfer to Scott Street. In the context of the findings of conduct violative of the Act otherwise, such conduct is found to constitute violations of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

I would note further that the facts reveal that Respondent's letter of October 29, 1979, and statements made by Respondent's agents to the Union revealed in effect that the decision to close Alfred Street had already been made and that negotiations were in real effect only to be about the effects of the closing. Further, the overall facts reveal in my opinion that Respondent, as of June 16, 1979, only intended to operate the Alfred Street plant until the end of the collective-bargaining agreement and that the overall plans were to rid itself of the existing bargaining unit and Local 26 because of difficulties in obtaining the contract Respondent desired.

Briefs and arguments suggest that the factual issues in this case warrant a consideration of "subcontracting" issues. In my opinion, this case does not involve a subcontracting issue. Rather, Respondent planned on moving a bargaining unit of employees from one plant to a different plant and bargained with Local 26 on such basis. Under such circumstances, Respondent's bargaining unit when it hired new employees at the Scott Street plant and when it continued its Alfred Street plant at the same time constituted one unit and Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) and (5) by setting wages and terms and conditions of employment for the Scott Street employees different from those in effect at the Alfred Street plant. Thus, an offer to bargain about the effects of closing of the Alfred Street plant without considering the Alfred Street plant and Scott Street plant employees as part of one bargaining unit in effect constituted a meaningless offer to bargain.

[26] See P.A. Hayes, Inc. and P.H. Mechanical Corp., 226 NLRB 230 (1976).

In sum, the facts reveal that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act by failure to bargain about its decision to close the Alfred Street plant, and violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by its selection of the Alfred Street plant employees for termination as part of a plan to rid itself of its Alfred Street plant bargaining unit and obligation to bargain with Local 26.

3. Recognition and assistance to the NMU

The General Counsel alleges and contends and Respondent denies that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) and (2) of the Act by (1) recognizing Industrial, Technical, and Professional Employees, a Division of National Maritime Union, AFL-CIO, as the exclusive collective-bargaining agent for employees in a production and maintenance unit at Respondent's Scott Street plant, (2) executing a contract with NMU, (3) assisting NMU in obtaining support from the Scott Street plant employees, (4) granting NMU access to the Scott Street plant during working hours for the purpose of encouraging those employees to sign authorization cards, and (5) threatening to withhold paychecks of employees until they signed membership authorization cards for NMU.

Considering all of the facts, it is clear that Respondent had an obligation to recognize United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, Local 26, AFL-CIO-CLC, as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of the employees at the Scott Street plant as the same or extended portion of the established Alfred Street plant unit, at the time when Respondent recognized, and executed a collective-bargaining agreement with, the Industrial, Technical, and Professional Employees, a Division of National Maritime Union, AFL-CIO, as the exclusive representative of a P&M unit of employees at the Scott Street plant.[27] Thus, it is clear that Respondent was not free to recognize, or enter into a contractual relationship with, NMU as the representative of the Scott Street plant employees and the recognition and establishment of a contractual relationship with such union for such employee complement clearly constituted unlawful aid and assistance to NMU in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (2) of the Act.

The facts reveal that Respondent did grant access in June and July 1979 to NMU agents to its Scott Street plant to see employees after Respondent had entered into a contractual relationship with the NMU. Further, it is clear that such NMU agents spoke to employees and solicited employees to sign cards. Whether such cards were union authorization cards or "dues checkoff" cards is not clearly established. For the same reasons previously given, the granting of access to the NMU agents to the Scott Street plant, at a time when Respondent was obligated to recognize and bargain with the United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, Local 26, AFL-CIO-CLC, clearly constituted unlawful aid and assistance to NMU in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (2) of the Act.[28]

The General Counsel's allegation relating to a threat was as follows: "On or about August 17, 1979, Respondent through its agent, James Richardson, at its Scott Street plant threatened to withhold the paychecks of its employees until they signed membership authorization cards for NMU."

There was no evidence presented concerning acts by James Richardson. Employee Beeman testified in effect that he commenced work around July 24, 1979, signed a NMU card around August 17, 1979, was told on such date by someone, who he stated was a supervisor named Larry, that he could not get his check because a lady wanted to see him in the office, went to the office and had a short conversation with the lady in the office, and was told that he had to sign a card before he could get his check because Respondent was getting stricter. On cross-examination, Beeman testified that all that "Larry" told him was that the secretary wanted to see him and that he signed some insurance papers while in the office. "Larry" Selig was not presented as a witness on the above issue.[29]

Considering all of the facts, I am not persuaded that the testimony of Beeman has sufficient probative value to establish that an agent of Respondent threatened employees that paychecks would be withheld until they signed union membership authorization cards. First, the supervisor who was alleged to have made such threats was James Richardson. No evidence was presented to reveal that Richardson had any involvement with employee Beeman on the occasion that Beeman allegedly signed a union authorization card.[30] Beeman initially indicated that a supervisor named Larry had told him that he could not get his check, that "the lady wanted to see" him in the office. On cross-examination, Beeman testified that Larry only told him that the lady in the office wanted to see him. Thus, the evidence is insufficient to reveal that a supervisor named Larry threatened Beeman that his check would be withheld until he signed a union card. Accordingly, the allegation of violative conduct in such regard will be recommended to be dismissed.

[28] As to the issues of whether Respondent has violated Sec. 8(a)(1) and (2) of the Act, I do not find it necessary to determine whether Respondent would have violated the Act if Respondent had not been obligated to recognize and bargain with said Local 26 but, faced with a claim for recognition by said Local 26 and in the face thereof, recognized and bargained with said NMU Union. Nor do I find it necessary to determine whether certain conduct of Respondent, as alleged, would be violative of Sec. 8(a)(1) and (2) of the Act if not undertaken in the face of an obligation to recognize and bargain with Local 26 or a realistic claim for recognition by said Local 26. Further, I find it unnecessary to discuss some of the other evidence relating to aid to NMU since the same would not add to the ultimate findings herein. Thus, the evidence relating to employees, away from the plant, seeing NMU agents getting out of cars driven by a respondent supervisor has little if any value in resolving the issues herein.

[29] Respondent had a supervisor named Laurence "Larry" Selig.

[30] An employee named Jimmy Wheeler was present with Beeman and the lady secretary.

I. The Alleged Discriminatory Discharge

1. J. C. Bonner

J. C. Bonner was initially employed by Respondent on July 13, 1979, and worked thereafter until he was discharged on August 1, 1979. Bonner was employed as a meat boner and his immediate supervisor was Benny Govaere. Sometime within several days of July 13, 1979, Supervisor Govaere warned Bonner about "disturbing" employees on the workline.

During the last part of July 1979 Dan Calloway, a representative for Local 26, was parking near the entrance to the Scott Street plant. Bonner had known Calloway when Bonner had worked for Wolverine Packing at the Scott Street site. At such time Bonner had been a member of Local 26.

On or about July 29 or 30, 1979, Bonner met with Calloway at noon and had lunch with Calloway. Later, on July 31, 1979, around noontime, Calloway gave Bonner some union authorization cards.[31]

After seeing Calloway, Bonner returned to work. After work, Bonner again saw Calloway and explained that he had not had enough time to get anyone to sign union authorization cards. Bonner told Calloway that the employees had finished work and had started leaving for home.[32] Bonner promised to get some union cards signed for Calloway by the next day.

On August 1, 1979, Bonner and several other employees met Calloway at noon and had lunch with him. Supervisor Selig was observed appearing to be looking where Calloway and Bonner were near the plant entrance. Apparently, the employees with Bonner signed union authorization cards. Bonner had signed a union authorization card on July 31, 1979. Bonner gave these cards to Calloway. At lunch Bonner had a sandwich and several beers.[33] Bonner returned to work. Later that afternoon, Supervisor Govaere observed that Bonner was walking up and down the production line talking to employees, that employees were at least momentarily stopping from work, and that Bonner appeared to be laughing and joking and was leaving his work station.[34] What occurred then is revealed by the following credited excerpts from Govaere's testimony:

> Q. What, if anything, did you say to him when you called him over to the side.
> A. Well, I told him to stop disrupting the line, and at the time I noticed alcohol on his breath, so I told him that I can smell alcohol, and I don't want you disrupting the line. Just calm down, and stay at your station and do your work.
> Q. Do you know about what time of the day this was approximately?
> A. Shortly after lunch. It would be between say a quarter to one and one o'clock, somewhere in there.
> Q. Then what did you do, if anything, after you talked to him?
> A. The balance of the day I just observed him.
> Q. What did you observe?
> A. A continuation of the same thing.
> Q. What, if anything, did you do at the end of the shift?
> A. I called him in the office, and I told him this was the last straw, because the previous times—
> Q. What did you say, if anything, to Mr. Bonner when he was in the office?
> A. I said this was the last straw because I had previously warned you within the previous two weeks about disrupting the line, nothing about drinking. I hadn't warned him about that. I told him this was the last straw because of the drinking and the continuation of disturbing the line after I had warned him right after lunch time.

Following this, Govaere terminated Bonner from his employment. An employee named Jordon later spoke to Supervisor Govaere about taking Bonner back in a couple of weeks. Govaere indicated that he would do so.[35] Thereafter, Respondent did not call Bonner back to work.

[31] The General Counsel's evidence relating to the events leading to Bonner's discharge is contradictory of itself and reveals much confusion. Thus, Bonner testified to the effect that he first saw Calloway on July 31, 1979, that several days later he received union authorization cards, and that the next day he was fired. Calloway's testimony suggests that he first saw Bonner on July 30 or 31, 1979, that he gave him union cards on such occasion, and that Bonner was discharged the next day. Jordon's affidavit indicates that he and others were with Bonner and Calloway on July 30, 1979, that he and Bonner received union cards from Calloway and that Bonner was discharged several days later. Considering the logical consistency of all of the evidence, I find the facts as set forth.

[32] Bonner's testimony concerning the obtaining of signatures to union cards was confused and contradictory. Such testimony did not have the ring of truth. I discredit his testimony to the effect that he received signed union cards at any time prior to the receipt of one or two signed cards while in Calloway's car on August 1, 1979. Although Calloway appeared to be a truthful witness, considering the logical consistency of all of the evidence, Jordon's affidavit relating to cards distributed by Jordon, and Bonner's and Calloway's testimony as a whole, I am persuaded that Calloway's testimony was mistaken as to the number of cards received from Bonner on August 1, 1979, before Bonner's discharge.

[33] Many of the questions directed to Bonner and the other witnesses were leading in nature. To one such question, Bonner replied that he only had "one" beer at lunch. At another point, Bonner replied in effect that "We had a beer or two."

[34] The General Counsel presented testimony through witnesses for the purpose of establishing that Bonner did not talk any more or louder than others, and that his condition was normal. The questions were leading in nature, and the answers to the questions were qualified. Thus, the witnesses qualified their statements and indicated as an example that their answers were "to the best of their knowledge." Howard testified relating to Bonner's condition that "wasn't nothing violent, you know he wasn't intoxicated or nothing you know. At least to my knowledge."

[35] In making these findings I have considered the affidavit of Jordon as evidence and have carefully considered the same in view of Jordon's own interest in the proceedings at the time he gave such affidavit. I do not find the affidavit to be reliable evidence except as is consistent with the facts found herein.

2. Conclusions—discharge of Bonner

The sum of the facts reveals that Bonner engaged in some union activity before his discharge on August 1, 1979, that Bonner was seen by a supervisor with an agent for Local 26 prior to his discharge, and that Respondent has some animus toward Local 26. The facts also reveal, however, that Respondent had warned Bonner, within 2 or 3 weeks of his discharge, about disturbing the production line, that such warning was unrelated to any possible union activity by Bonner, that on August 1, 1979, Bonner did have the odor of alcohol on his breath at work and was away from his work station talking to other employees. I found Govaere to be a thoroughly truthful appearing witness and credit that he observed Bonner's conduct and considered that he was disturbing other employees. Considering all of the evidence, I am persuaded that the facts preponderate for a finding that Respondent discharged Bonner on August 1, 1979, for cause.

3. Elmer Jordon

Jordon started working for Respondent on July 26, 1979. Jordon's job was that of a lugger (loader), and the rate of pay for such job was one of the highest in the plant. On Friday, July 27, 1979, around 3:15 p.m., Jordon spoke to Local 26's agents, Calloway and Armstrong. At the time Jordon, Calloway, and Armstrong were at Calloway's car which was parked on Scott Street near the plant. As Jordon was leaving in Calloway's car, Jordon saw Govaere driving Govaere's car. Apparently there was not a great distance between the two cars.[36]

On July 30, 1979, around 12 to 12:30 p.m., Jordon, an employee named Simmons, and Bonner were in Calloway's car. Calloway gave each some union cards. After work that day Jordon passed out some union authorization cards to fellow employees.

On July 31, 1979, Jordon was at a lunch wagon located close to the plant. At such time Jordon passed out a few union cards to fellow employees. While at the lunch wagon Jordon saw Supervisors Govaere and Selig nearby, approximately 10 feet away. Govaere and Selig were looking at him.[37]

On August 1, 1979, Jordon again passed out some union cards to fellow employees at lunchtime. Later that afternoon Jordon learned that Respondent had discharged Bonner. After work Jordon went and spoke to Govaere about Bonner's discharge. What occurred when Jordon asked Govaere about the reason for Bonner's discharge is revealed by the following excerpts from Jordon's affidavit.

> I asked him why he fired "Pee Wee." He said, "For one thing, Pee Wee has too much mouth." I said "What do you mean too much mouth." He said, "You know what I mean." I said I didn't. He said "Another thing I smelled alcohol on his breath when he come from work." I asked if it interfered with his work. He said, "No, but we don't have them here at all." He said, "If you're not careful you're next." I said, "Man, the guy has a family." I said, "Me and you go back a ways why don't you talk to him in a few days." Benny said, "I'll agree to that." I said, "Will you give me your word?" Benny said, "Yes." Nothing else was said that I can recall.

Jordon went out of the plant and related to Local 26's agents Calloway and Bonner what Govaere had said. Jordon then passed out some union cards to employees who apparently were leaving work. During the time period that Jordon was passing out union cards outside the gate, Govaere drove nearby and apparently momentarily paused.[38]

On or about August 2 or 3, 1979, Jordon passed out and collected some union cards before he punched in for work. Later, employees were told to go to the lunchroom. In the lunchroom were Plant Manager Richardson, some supervisors, and an NMU agent. Richardson told the employees that with cards being passed out that there were rumors that there was not a union there and that he was there to clear it up. There then ensued a discussion about the NMU union. Jordon was one of the employees who asked a question or two about the Union.

After the meeting Jordon asked Richardson what he was going to do about Bonner. Richardson said that it was up to Benny Govaere. Later, around 12:45 p.m., Jordon, at lunchtime, went to Calloway's car which was parked on Scott Street. Calloway and Armstrong, Local 26 agents, and Bonner and another person were present. On such occasion Jordon gave Calloway some cards. While there, Govaere was nearby at the guard shack. On such occasion Govaere looked at Jordon.

On the morning of August 6, 1979, Supervisor Govaere asked Jordon if he could break "fronts." Jordon told Govaere that he could. Govaere instructed Jordon to break fronts. Govaere did so until he was later ordered to unload some trucks. Around noon Jordon was on his way to the lunchroom when he was told by an employee named "Buster" that Calloway wanted to see him. Govaere was nearby at the time.[39] Jordon went outside the plant to Calloway's car. About this time Jordon saw Govaere go to Govaere's car about 12-15 feet away from Calloway's car. Jordon left with Calloway to get a sandwich.

Jordon returned to work and completed his shift. At the end of the shift Jordon was told that Govaere wanted to see him. Jordon then went to see Govaere. What occurred is revealed by the following excerpts from Jordon's affidavit:

> I went downstairs and Benny was waiting at the foot of the steps. He said, "Bouncer, I want to talk to you." I said, "What is it about." He said, "We're going to have to let you go. We don't have enough

[36] The evidence is insufficient to establish that Govaere saw Jordon and Calloway.

[37] The evidence is insufficient to establish that Govaere and Selig were observing Jordon when he was passing out union cards.

[38] The evidence is insufficient to reveal that Jordon was passing out union cards at the exact time that Govaere drove by and paused. Nor is it sufficient to reveal that the "pause" was more than a stop preceding the entrance into a street.

[39] The evidence is insufficient, however, to establish that Govaere heard what "Buster" said. Buster did not testify in the proceeding.

> work to keep you." I replied, "What do you mean you don't have enough work to keep me you just hired four guys this morning." He said, "We'll call you. You are not a knife man you are lugger." I said, "I said that is what you hired me in as." I told him that [I] make a rail and one half fronts in an hour. [A rail and a half is about 120 fronts.] One job of a knife man is to break fronts.) He said that I had only broken 10 or 12 fronts in an hour. I called him a liar. I asked to see Jim Richardson. He said Jim was gone for the day . . . .

Later that evening Jordon spoke to Richardson about his being laid off. What occurred is revealed by the following credited excerpts from Richardson's testimony.[40]

> We needed approximately a hundred fronts done an hour, and even after a week or two of attempts, he was still down to thirty or forty fronts an hour. So, I told Mr. Jordon that I cannot afford to pay him seven dollars and twenty-five cents an hour, or seven dollars and ten cents an hour, whatever it was back then, and I could not afford to pay him that kind of money just for a laborer's rate, and we were going to have to lay him off until we would build the loading back up.
> He said, you mean I am fired.

On August 7, 1979, Jordon returned to speak to Richardson. What occurred is revealed by the following credited excerpts from Richardson's testimony:

> That was in the evening. He came back the next morning at approximately six or six-thirty in the morning, and he approached me in the cooler, and he said, why did you fire me.
> I tried to explain to him we really didn't have enough work for him, and that once the operation got going, that I could justify his existence as strictly an unloader because he wasn't working fast enough to handle the other part of it, we would bring him back.
> He got all upset and told me, that I would be the last guy—he would be the last guy I would ever fire, and that I would see him another time. I got worried and Bennie happened to be standing there with me. I didn't know whether he was talking about me, or he was talking to Bennie, but anyways I asked him to please leave the plant.
> Well, after he told me that, I said, look we are parting company. You are fired. I am not going to have someone threatening me or management.

In addition to the foregoing, Richardson credibly testified to the effect that Jordon was laid off because of lack of need for him as a loader. As indicated, Richardson credibly testified to the effect that Jordon was later fired because of belief of a threat by Jordon.[41]

4. Conclusions concerning Jordon's discharge

The facts are sufficient to establish that, prior to Jordon's discharge, he had engaged in some union activity and at least had been seen by supervisors talking to known Local 26 agents. The facts are also sufficient to reveal that Respondent had some animus against Local 26. However, the facts reveal a legitimate basis for the layoff and ultimate discharge of Jordon. The General Counsel seems to emphasize that Govaere made statements to Jordon, after Bonner's discharge, to the effect that if he were not careful he would be next. However, the total remarks are to the effect that Respondent did not keep employees who had the odor of alcohol on their breath and that Jordon should be careful in such regard. Considering all of this, the facts are insufficient to reveal that Respondent discriminatorily laid off and then fired Jordon. Accordingly, the allegations of unlawful conduct in such regard will be recommended to be dismissed.

IV. THE EFFECT OF THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES UPON COMMERCE

The activities of Respondent set forth in section III, above, occurring in connection with Respondent's operations described in section I, above, have a close, intimate, and substantial relationship to trade, traffic, and commerce among the several States and tend to lead to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow of commerce.

V. THE REMEDY

It having been found that Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(a)(1), (2), (3), and (5) of the Act, I shall recommend that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom, and to take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

With regard to the 8(a)(5) violations, I shall recommend that Respondent, upon request, bargain collectively with United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, Local 26, AFL-CIO-CLC, concerning the effects upon the represented employees of the plant relocation from Alfred Street to Scott Street, particularly the transfer rights of such employees, and further that Respondent recognize and, upon request, bargain collectively with said Local 26 as the exclusive bargaining representative of all employees who are engaged in janitorial, receiving, boning, breaking, cutting, grinding, slicing, curing, preparing, processing, sealing, wrapping, bagging, prefabricating, of all meat products, sausage, poultry, fish and sea food products, whether such products are fresh, frozen, chilled, cooked, cured, smoked or barbecued, including those employees operating equipment used in wrapping, cubing, tenderizing such meat products and who perform those duties where such products are prepared, employed by the Employer at the facility located at 1545 Alfred Street, or at 1825 Scott Street, Detroit, Michigan, but excluding office clerical employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act. Moreover, I shall recommend that during the period of negotiation toward a new contract that Respondent be ordered to maintain in effect the terms of the collective-bargaining agreement with Local 26 which was in force at Respondent's Alfred Street plant at the time of relocation, unless the parties mutually agree to do otherwise, and to apply the provisions of said collective-bargaining agreement to all employees who were members of the bargaining unit at the time of the termination of the Alfred Street plant, including the provisions of said agreement, if any, applicable to laid-off employees, as well as to all employees in the unit as it exists at the Scott Street plant, excepting as to provisions of a non-mandatory nature, or until after an impasse has been reached.

[40] In the conversation Richardson told Jordon in effect when the loading built back up that he would be hired again.

[41] I do not find statements in Jordon's affidavit to the effect that Richardson told him that he was "an instigator" to be reliable. Thus, I note that as to many details set forth in such affidavit that such details have not been corroborated even when there were other potential witnesses. It is clear that Jordon had an interest in the proceeding and that the affidavit was given after charges had been filed on his behalf. As noted at the hearing, hearsay statements by Calloway, apparently relating to what Jordon stated that Govaere had said, were rejected. I would note that if the same had been received that such statements in fact are contradictory of Jordon's affidavit. Thus, Calloway's testimony in the nature of an offer of proof was that Jordon said that Govaere said he was an instigator. Jordon's affidavit attributed such remarks to Richardson. There is a great suspicion in this case as to the reliability of testimony of Bonner and of Jordon's affidavit as regards any predischarge distribution of union cards by Jordon and Bonner.

With regard to the 8(a)(2) violations, I shall recommend that Respondent be ordered to withdraw recognition from Industrial, Technical, and Professional Employees, a Division of National Maritime Union, AFL–CIO, as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of any of the employees in the appropriate unit described above as the unit represented by United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, Local 26, AFL–CIO–CLC, or as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of a unit described as follows:

> All production and maintenance employees employed by the Respondent at its plant located at 1825 Scott Street, Detroit, Michigan; but excluding office employees, employees of independent contractors, sales personnel, professional employees, and guards and supervisors as defined in the National Labor Relations Act.

I shall also recommend that Respondent be ordered to cease and desist from giving effect to any collective-bargaining agreement with said NMU to the extent that it purports to cover employees in either described unit.

With regard to the 8(a)(3) violations, I shall recommend that Respondent offer the Alfred Street plant employees represented by Local 26, who were terminated as a result of Respondent's unlawful actions, immediate reinstatement at the Alfred Street or Scott Street plants, to their former or substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or other rights and privileges.[42] In addition, I shall recommend that Respondent be required to make whole each of the aforementioned employees for backpay from the date of the discrimination against them to the date that Respondent offers reemployment to them in compliance with the instant decision, backpay and interest thereon to be computed in the manner prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Company, 90 NLRB 289 (1950), and Florida Steel Corporation, 231 NLRB 651 (1977).[43]

Further, as to employees hired at the Scott Street plant at different terms and conditions of employment than those enjoyed by the Alfred Street plant employees, it will be recommended that Respondent make such Scott Street employees whole for loss of wages or other benefits are suffered as a result of Respondent's unilateral setting of wages and terms and conditions of employment for the Scott Street plant. Computations of loss of wages and benefits are to be computed in the same manner as indicated above.

In view of Respondent's widespread violations of Section 8(a)(1), (2), (3), and (5), as referred to above, and the nature of the same revealing a general disregard for employees' fundamental statutory rights, a broad cease-and-desist order will be recommended. Hickmott Foods, Inc., 242 NLRB 1357 (1979).

Upon the basis of the above findings of fact and upon the entire record in the case, I make the following:

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Eastern Market Beef Processing Corp., Alfred and Scott Street Divisions, Respondent, is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, Local 26, AFL–CIO–CLC, and Industrial, Technical, and Professional Employees, a Division of National Maritime Union, AFL–CIO, each is, and has been at all times material herein, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. By discriminating in the selection of employees for hire, retention, or discharge, and/or by acts which have the inherent effect of discrimination in employment, Respondent has encouraged membership in Industrial, Technical, and Professional Employees, a Division of National Maritime Union, AFL–CIO, and discouraged membership in United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, Local 26, AFL–CIO–CLC, by discriminating in regard to tenure of employment, thereby engaging in unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

4. The following employees constitute an appropriate unit for purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act:

> All employees who are engaged in janitorial, receiving, boning, breaking, cutting, grinding, slicing, curing, preparing, processing, sealing, wrapping, bagging, prefabricating, of all meat products, sau> sage, poultry, fish and sea food products, whether such products are fresh, frozen, chilled, cooked, cured, smoked or barbecued, including those employees operating equipment used in wrapping, cubing, tenderizing such meat products and who perform those duties where such products are prepared employed by the Employer at its facilities or facility located at 1545 Alfred Street, or at 1825 Scott Street, Detroit, Michigan, but excluding office clerical employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

(b) Since in or about 1972, and continuing to date, United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, Local 26, AFL-CIO-CLC, by virtue of a series of collective-bargaining agreements with Respondent, the most recent one being effective from November 22, 1976, until November 22, 1979, has been the designated exclusive collective-bargaining representative of the unit of Respondent's employees described above.

5. By unilaterally setting terms and conditions of employment, by refusing to bargain about the relocation of an existing appropriate collective-bargaining unit, by refusing to bargain about the termination of a part of an existing appropriate collective-bargaining unit, or about the termination of an identifiable group of employees in such appropriate collective-bargaining unit, and by related acts, Respondent has engaged in conduct of refusing to bargain with United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, Local 26, AFL-CIO-CLC, as exclusive collective-bargaining representative as regards terms and conditions of employment of employees in an appropriate collective-bargaining unit and thereby has violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

6. By recognizing and entering into a collective-bargaining agreement with, and by rendering aid and assistance to Industrial, Technical, and Professional Employees, a Division of National Maritime Union, AFL-CIO, Respondent has aided and assisted a labor organization and thereby has engaged in conduct violative of Section 8(a)(2) and (1) of the Act.

7. By the foregoing and by interfering with, restraining, and coercing its employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act, Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices proscribed by Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

8. The aforesaid unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact, conclusions of law, and the entire record, and pursuant to Section 10(c) of the Act, I hereby issue the following recommended:

ORDER[44]

The Respondent, Eastern Beef Processing Corporation, Alfred and Scott Street Divisions, Detroit, Michigan, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Transferring work or relocating appropriate bargaining unit operations from one plant site to another without giving notice to, bargaining with, or with the consent of the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of said appropriate bargaining unit described hereinafter.

(b) Unilaterally setting wages, fringe benefits, and other terms and conditions of employees in an appropriate bargaining unit or part thereof without giving prior notice to, bargaining with, or with the consent of the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of said appropriate bargaining unit, or otherwise refusing to bargain with said Union in any other manner.

(c) Refusing to transfer or allow employees to transfer from one part of an appropriate bargaining unit to another part of said appropriate bargaining unit because of their membership in United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, Local 26, AFL-CIO-CLC, or any other labor organization.

(d) Engaging in conduct of giving misinformation or acting in a disguised manner so as to deceive the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of its employees in its representation of the employees in the appropriate bargaining unit described hereinafter with respect to matters of transfers of work or employees or relocation of operations.

(e) Terminating operations or employees without giving notice to, bargaining with, or with the consent of the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of the employees in the appropriate bargaining unit described hereinafter.

(f) Engaging in conduct of relocation of business operations or otherwise discriminating against employees so as to rid itself of contractual obligations or bargaining obligations otherwise with United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, Local 26, AFL-CIO-CLC, or any other union as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of employees in the appropriate bargaining unit as follows:

> All employees who are engaged in janitorial, receiving, boning, breaking, cutting, grinding, slicing, curing, preparing, processing, sealing, wrapping, bagging, prefabricating, of all meat products, sausage, poultry, fish and sea food products, whether such products are fresh, frozen, chilled, cooked, cured, smoked or barbecued, including those employees operating equipment used in wrapping, cubing, tenderizing such meat products and who perform those duties where such products are prepared employed by the Employer at its facilities or facility located at 1545 Alfred Street, or at 1825 Scott Street, Detroit, Michigan, but excluding office clerical employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

(g) Granting recognition to, executing a collective-bargaining agreement with, or otherwise maintaining, enforcing, or giving effect to recognition or bargaining agreements with, or otherwise aiding and assisting or granting access to agents thereof to Respondent's premises to Industrial, Technical, and Professional Employees, a Division of the National Maritime Union, AFL-CIO, or aiding or assisting said Union in any other manner to be and/or as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of any of the employees in the appropriate unit described above or of the employees in the below described unit:

[44] In the event no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Rules and Regulations of the National Labor Relations Board, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order herein shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules and Regulations, be adopted by the Board and become its findings, conclusions, and Order, and all objections thereto shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

> All production and maintenance employees employed by the Respondent at its plant located at 1825 Scott Street, Detroit, Michigan; but excluding office employees, employees of independent contractors, sales personnel, professional employees, and guards and supervisors as defined in the National Labor Relations Act.

(h) In any other manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act except to the extent that such rights may be affected by lawful agreements in accord with Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action which it is found will effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Offer to the Alfred Street plant employees terminated on or about November 27, 1979, immediate and full reinstatement tc the employee's former position, discharging if necessary employees hired for work at the Scott Street plant facility or, if such position no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position, without prejudice to the employee's seniority or other rights previously enjoyed, and make each whole for any loss of pay or other benefits suffered by reason of the discrimination against each in the manner described above in the section entitled "The Remedy."

(b) Make whole all Scott Street plant employees for any loss of wages or other benefits, if any, suffered as a result of the unilateral institution of different wages, terms, and conditions of employment then in effect in the established bargaining unit.

(c) Preserve and, upon request, make available to the Board or its agents, for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(d) Withdraw recognition from Industrial, Technical, and Professional Employees, a Division of the National Maritime Union, AFL-CIO, as the exclusive bargaining representative of any of the employees in the appropriate unit described above as the unit represented by United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, Local 26, AFL-CIO-CLC, or of the employees in the below-described unit:

> All production and maintenance employees employed by the Respondent at its plant located at 1825 Scott Street, Detroit, Michigan; but excluding office employees, employees of independent contractors, sales personnel, professional employees, and guards and supervisors as defined in the National Labor Relations Act.

(e) Rescind any existing collective-bargaining agreement with Industrial, Technical, and Professional Employees, a Division of the National Maritime Union, AFL-CIO, covering employees in the above-referred-to bargaining units.

(f) Reimburse all employees for all initiation fees and dues paid by them to Industrial, Technical, and Professional Employees, a Division of the National Maritime Union, AFL-CIO, through dues checkoff since on or about June 17, 1979.

(g) Recognize United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, Local 26, AFL-CIO-CLC, as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of employees at its Alfred Street and/or Scott Street plant in the unit described above in paragraph 1(f), and institute the terms and conditions of employment set forth in the collective-bargaining agreement it had with such Union until November 22, 1979, excepting such provisions which might be of a nonmandatory bargaining type, unless and until the parties have agreed upon a new collective-bargaining agreement or impasse has been reached.

(h) Upon request, bargain in good faith with United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, Local 26, AFL-CIO-CLC, as exclusive bargaining representative of the employees in the unit of employees described in paragraph 1(f) above, for a new collective-bargaining agreement covering wages, rates of pay, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment, and as to the effects of the relocating of the plant.

(i) Post at Respondent's plants at Detroit, Michigan, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[48] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 7, after being duly signed by Respondent's representatives, shall be posted by it immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by Respondent for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(j) Notify the Regional Director for Region 7, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps Respondent has taken to comply herewith.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the allegations of unlawful conduct not specifically found to be violative herein be dismissed.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

WE WILL NOT transfer work or relocate appropriate bargaining unit operations from one plant site to another without giving notice to, bargaining with, or with the consent of the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of said appropriate bargaining unit described hereinafter.

WE WILL NOT unilaterally set wages, fringe benefits, and other terms and conditions of employment in an appropriate bargaining unit or part thereof without giving prior notice to, bargaining with, or with the consent of the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of said appropriate bargaining unit, or refuse to bargain with said union in any other manner.

WE WILL NOT refuse to transfer or allow employees to transfer from one part of an appropriate bargaining unit to another part of said appropriate bargaining unit because of their membership in United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, Local 26, AFL-CIO-CLC, or any other labor organization.

WE WILL NOT engage in conduct of giving misinformation or act in a disguised manner so as to deceive the exclusive collective-bargaining representative in its representation of the employees in the appropriate bargaining unit described hereinafter with respect to matters of transfers of work or employees or relocation of operations.

WE WILL NOT terminate operations or employees without giving notice to, bargaining with, or with the consent of the exclusive collective-bargaining unit described hereinafter.

WE WILL NOT engage in conduct of relocating of business operations or otherwise discriminate against employees so as to rid ourselves of contractual obligations with or bargaining obligations otherwise with United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, Local 26, AFL-CIO-CLC, or any other union as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of employees in the bargaining unit described hereinafter as the appropriate bargaining unit.

WE WILL NOT grant recognition to, execute a collective-bargaining agreement with, or otherwise maintain, enforce, or give effect to recognition or bargaining agreements with, or otherwise aid and assist or grant access to agents thereof to Respondent's premises to Industrial, Technical, and Professional Employees, a Division of the National Maritime Union, AFL-CIO, or aid and assist said Union in any other manner as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of any of the employees in the appropriate unit described hereinafter as the appropriate bargaining unit or of the employees in the below-described unit:

> All production and maintenance employees employed by us at our plant located at 1825 Scott Street, Detroit, Michigan; but excluding office employees, employees of independent contractors, sales personnel, professional employees, and guards and supervisors as defined in the National Labor Relations Act.

WE WILL NOT in any other manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act except to the extent that such rights may be affected by lawful agreements in accordance with Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

WE WILL offer to the Alfred Street plant employees terminated on or about November 27, 1979, immediate and full reinstatement to the employee's former position, discharging if necessary employees hired for work at the Scott Street plant facility or, if such position no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position, without prejudice to the employee's seniority or other rights previously enjoyed, and make each whole for any loss of pay or other benefits suffered by reason of the discrimination against each, with interest.

WE WILL make whole all Scott Street plant employees for any loss of wages or other benefits, if any, suffered as a result of the unilateral institution of different wages, terms, and conditions of employment then in effect in the established bargaining unit, with interest.

WE WILL withdraw recognition from Industrial, Technical, and Professional Employees, a Division of the National Maritime Union, AFL-CIO, as the exclusive bargaining representative of any of the employees in the appropriate bargaining unit or as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of a unit described above.

WE WILL rescind any existing collective-bargaining agreement with Industrial, Technical, and Professional Employees, a Division of the National Maritime Union, AFL-CIO, covering employees in the above-referred-to bargaining unit.

WE WILL reimburse all employees for all initiation fees and dues paid by them to Industrial, Technical, and Professional Employees, a Division of the National Maritime Union, through dues checkoff since on or about June 17, 1979.

WE WILL recognize United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, Local 26, AFL-CIO-CLC, as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of employees at our Scott Street plant in the unit described below, and institute the terms and conditions of employment set forth in the collective-bargaining agreement we had with such Union until November 22, 1979, excepting such provisions which might be of a nonmandatory bargaining type, unless and until the parties have agreed upon a new collective-bargaining agreement or impasse has been reached. The appropriate bargaining unit is:

All employees who are engaged in janitorial, receiving, boning, breaking, cutting, grinding, slicing, curing, preparing, processing, sealing, wrapping, bagging, prefabricating, of all meat products, sausage, poultry, fish and sea food products, whether such products are fresh, frozen, chilled, cooked, cured, smoked or barbecued, including those employees operating equipment used in wrapping, cubing, tenderizing such meat products and who perform those duties where such products are prepared employed by us at our facilities or facility located at 1545 Alfred Street, or at 1825 Scott Street, Detroit, Michigan, but excluding office clerical employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

WE WILL, upon request, bargain in good faith with United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, Local 26, AFL–CIO–CLC, as exclusive bargaining representative of the employees in the unit of employees described above, for a new collective-bargaining agreement covering wages, rates of pay, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment, and as to the effects of the relocating of our plant.

All our employees are free to become or remain, or refrain from becoming or remaining, members of any labor organization, except to the extent provided by Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

EASTERN MARKET BEEF PROCESSING CORPORATION, ALFRED AND SCOTT STREET DIVISIONS

Millwright-Technical Engineers Local 2158 of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America and FMC Corporation, MHS Division and International Association of Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Iron Workers Local Union No. 111, affiliated with AFL-CIO. Case 33-CD-242

October 30, 1981

DECISION AND DETERMINATION OF DISPUTE

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

This is a proceeding under Section 10(k) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, following a charge filed by FMC Corporation, MHS Division, alleging that Millwright-Technical Engineers Local 2158 of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America violated Section 8(b)(4)(D) of the Act by engaging in certain proscribed activity with an object of forcing or requiring the Employer to assign certain work to its members rather than to employees represented by International Association of Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Iron Workers Local Union No. 111, affiliated with AFL-CIO.

Pursuant to notice a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Donald M. Glynn on March 12, 1981. All parties appeared and were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to adduce evidence bearing on the issues. Thereafter, all parties filed briefs.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has reviewed the Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing and finds that they are free from prejudicial error. They are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in this proceeding, the Board makes the following findings:

I. THE BUSINESS OF THE EMPLOYER

The parties stipulated, and we find, that the Employer, a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in Colmar, Pennsylvania, is engaged in the engineering, manufacture, and installation of material-handling equipment. The parties additionally stipulated that during the past year the Employer has purchased and received materials valued in excess of $50,000 which were shipped directly to its various jobsites throughout the United States, including its Silvis, Illinois, jobsite and has performed services for customers throughout the continental United States, which services are valued in excess of $50,000. Accordingly, we find that the Employer is engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act and that it will effectuate the Act to assert jurisdiction herein.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATIONS INVOLVED

The parties stipulated and we find that the Millwrights and the Iron Workers are labor organizations within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE DISPUTE

A. Background and Facts of the Dispute

On or about December 1, 1980, the Employer began preparatory work for the installation of an overhead power and free conveyor system at the John Deere Foundry in Silvis, Illinois. The employees represented by the Iron Workers performed the preparatory work. Sometime after the commencement of the preparatory work, Duane Booi, construction manager for the Employer, received a telephone call from the business manager for the Millwrights, Doug Banes. Banes indicated that he felt that the employees represented by the Millwrights were entitled to some of the work on the installation of the conveyor system and suggested that a meeting be held to discuss the matter. An on-site meeting was held among representatives of the Millwrights, the Iron Workers, and the Employer on January 27, 1981. Various proposals for assigning the work were offered during that meeting but no decision was made on the work assignment issue. Subsequently, the Employer again assigned the work in dispute to the employees represented by the Iron Workers.

On the morning following the assignment of the work to the employees represented by the Iron Workers, Booi was contacted again by Banes who indicated that Booi would probably be sorry that he made the assignment to the ironworkers because Banes was planning to call his union "Brothers" around the country and would make life "miserable" for the Employer wherever it worked from then on. Thereafter, Booi received a series of telephone calls from Millwrights business managers in various parts of the country. In essence, these business managers informed Booi that they had been contacted by Millwright Locals 2158 about the problem at the John Deere Foundry in Silvis and that they had been asked by Local 2158 to "hurt" or to make "trouble" for the Employer the next time it did work in their respective jurisdictions by, for example, refusing to make estimates for the Employer's jobs.

By mailgram dated January 31, 1981, Banes informed Booi that the Millwrights' dispute with the Employer concerning the John Deere Foundry was being referred to a Joint Industry Board consisting of representatives from a local contractors association, a millwright contractors association, and the Millwrights.[1] Although the Employer employed no millwrights at the jobsite at that time, the mailgram stated that the dispute concerned the Employer's failure to pay proper wages and fringe benefits to millwrights employed at the John Deere Foundry. Booi attended the subsequent hearing before the Joint Industry Board but did not participate because the Employer claimed the issue was jurisdictional and not contractual. The decision of the Joint Industry Board, as stated in its February 13, 1981, letter to the Employer, was that the Employer had violated its collective-bargaining agreement with the Millwrights by failing to pay proper wages and fringe benefits to millwrights "employed by it at John Deere Foundry" and by failing to procure a surety bond in the principal sum of $20,000. The Joint Industry Board ordered the Employer to post the bond, pay the proper wage rates, and make delinquent benefit payments.

By letter to the Employer dated February 18, 1981, William C. Weaver, business manager for the Iron Workers, stated that he was aware of the decision of the Joint Industry Board, but that the Iron Workers did not participate in that board and did not recognize any of the actions of the Joint Industry Board as binding on the Iron Workers. Additionally, Weaver advised the Employer that the Iron Workers intended to take all necessary action, including a strike, to prevent the Employer from reassigning the disputed work to the employees represented by the Millwrights.

B. The Work in Dispute

The work in dispute involved the installation of an overhead power and free conveyor system at the John Deere Foundry in Silvis, Illinois.

C. Contentions of the Parties

The Employer contends that the employees represented by the Iron Workers should continue to perform the work. In this regard, the Employer notes that the ironworkers have performed the identical work in the past and that that arrangement has proven to be both efficient and economical, and prevents the duplication of men and machines that would be required if the work was divided between the ironworkers and the millwrights. The Employer additionally argues that the ironworkers are more skillful at making the critical welds at the high elevations involved in the installation of the conveyor system and accordingly there is less risk to men and machinery if the employees represented by the Iron Workers perform the disputed work. With regard to collective-bargaining agreements, the Employer argues that its agreements with both the Millwrights and the Iron Workers cover the disputed work and that the 1953 "Conveyor Agreement" between the Iron Workers and the Millwrights is too ambiguous to rely on in any event in assigning the disputed work.[2] Finally, the Employer contends that there is no uniformity in either area or industry practice and so these factors cannot be determinative in making an award of the disputed work.

The Iron Workers essentially agrees with the Employer. It adds that the Employer's preference should be given some weight in determining who should receive the work.

The Millwrights takes the position that the employees represented by the Iron Workers are entitled to perform the work on the superstructure, but that the employees represented by the Millwrights should install the conveyor system below the superstructure. In this regard, the Millwrights argues that the millwrights have welding skills in addition to their ability to align and level the conveyor system and to execute other tasks in its basic assembly. The Millwrights also contends that the industry and area practice is to use composite crews of iron workers and millwrights, and that both the Millwrights collective-bargaining agreement with the Employer and the "Conveyor Agreement" entitle the employees represented by the Millwrights to perform the work below the superstructure. The Millwrights concedes that there might be a minimal loss of efficiency in using a composite crew, but argue that this loss is offset by the advantage of gaining the job skills which the millwrights possess. Finally, the Millwrights argues that the Employer's preference should not be given controlling weight in making an award of the work.

D. Applicability of the Statute

Before the Board may proceed with a determination of the dispute pursuant to Section 10(k) of the Act, it must be satisfied that there is reasonable cause to believe that Section 8(b)(4)(D) has been violated and that the parties have not agreed upon a method for the voluntary adjustment of the dispute.

[1] The Joint Industry Board is provided for in art. IX of the Millwrights collective-bargaining agreement with the Employer. If the Joint Industry Board decision fails to settle a contract dispute, under the contract the Millwrights may take the dispute to arbitration. A refusal to submit a dispute to the Joint Industry Board or to arbitration or to abide by a determination of either the Joint Industry Board or an arbitrator vitiates the agreement's no-strike clause. A separate procedure is provided in the agreement for the resolution of jurisdictional disputes.

[2] The Employer is not a party to the "Conveyor Agreement."

It is uncontested that Booi, construction manager for the Employer, received numerous telephone calls from business agents of the Millwrights in various parts of the country threatening to make "trouble" for the Employer if it commenced working in their respective jurisdictions. These statements reasonably conveyed to Booi that the Employer would suffer adverse economic consequences if it failed to reassign the work to the employees represented by the Millwrights.[3] Additionally, the Millwrights presentation of the matter to the Joint Industry Board on the ground that the Employer had violated the collective-bargaining agreement with regard to wages and fringe benefits, despite the fact that the Employer, at that time, employed no millwrights at the John Deere Foundry, was clearly a pretense adopted to mask the coercive tactics employed in an effort to force the Employer to reassign the work to the employees represented by the Millwrights.[4] Furthermore, we find no evidence of any method agreed upon by all parties for adjustment of the dispute.[5]

On the basis of the entire record, we conclude that there is reasonable cause to believe that a violation of Section 8(b)(4)(D) has occurred and that there exists no agreed-upon method for the voluntary adjustment of the dispute within the meaning of Section 10(k) of the Act. Accordingly, we find that this dispute is properly before the Board for determination.

E. Merits of the Dispute

Section 10(k) of the Act requires the Board to make an affirmative award of disputed work after giving due consideration to various factors.[6] The Board has held that its determination in a jurisdictional dispute is an act of judgment based on commonsense and experience reached by balancing those factors involved in a particular case.[7]

The following factors are relevant in making the determination of the dispute before us:

1. Collective-bargaining agreements

As the Employer contends, both operative collective-bargaining agreements arguably assign the disputed work to the respective contracting Unions. Thus, article I, "Craft Jurisdiction, Jurisdictional Disputes," sections 2-4, of the Iron Worker collective-bargaining agreement with the Employer "claims for its members . . . conveyors." Similarly, the Millwrights collective-bargaining agreement with the Employer at article I, "Recognition and Scope," section 3, "Occupational Scope," states that this "agreement covers all millwright work, including . . . conveyors." Other conceivably relevant functions claimed are similarly overlapping in scope.

The Employer is not a signatory to nor bound by the 1953 "Conveyor Agreement" between the Iron Workers and the Millwrights. By its terms, its purpose is to "settle jurisdictional disputes directly between the two trades." It is sometimes used by employers who hire composite crews to divide conveyor installation work between the employees represented by the Millwrights and employees represented by the Iron Workers. Those employers who testified that they used the "Conveyor Agreement" in assigning work conceded that the agreement is ambiguous and subject to various interpretations.

Accordingly, this factor does not support an assignment of the work to either group of employees.

2. Company and industry practice

The testimony revealed that although composite crews of ironworkers and millwrights are frequently used in the installation of conveyor systems, crews composed of ironworkers or millwrights alone have also successfully installed conveyor systems. The Employer installed another power and free conveyor system at John Deere in 1977 using only ironworkers. Accordingly, this factor does not favor assignment of the work to either group of employees.

3. Relative skills

It appears that both the employees represented by the Millwrights and the employees represented by the Iron Workers possess the requisite skills for installation of power and free conveyor systems. There is some testimony in the record that the ironworkers are more skilled at doing the welding, particularly that done high in the air. There is also testimony that the millwrights are more skilled with certain facets of the installation such as alignment, but Construction Manager Booi testified that the Employer had received no complaints from John Deere with respect to those aspects of the installation on the job it had done for John Deere in 1977 using only ironworkers. John Deere was apparently sufficiently satisfied with the workmanship on the previous job to reemploy the Employer for the installation job over which the instant dispute has arisen. Accordingly, this factor does not support an award of the work to either group of employees.

[4] Brotherhood of Teamsters & Auto Truck Drivers Local No. 85, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America (Pacific Maritime Association), 224 NLRB 801, 807 (1976). We note in addition that Weaver, the business manager of the Iron Workers, contacted the Employer and threatened to take all necessary action, including a strike, if the Employer reassigned the work.

[5] The Iron Workers did not participate in the above-mentioned proceeding before the Joint Industry Board and was not bound by its determination.

4. Economy and efficiency of operation

The record reflects that the use of composite crews of millwrights and ironworkers generally requires some duplication of personnel and equipment. Construction Manager Booi testified that if the employees represented by the Millwrights performed the work on the conveyor system under the superstructure additional supports would be required and it would be necessary to redesign the installation apparatus. The Millwrights concedes that composite crews may result in some loss of efficiency. This factor favors assignment of the disputed work to the group of employees represented by the Iron Workers.

5. Employer past practice and preference

Consistent with its own past practice, the Employer initially assigned the disputed work herein to the employees represented by the Iron Workers exclusively, and continues to maintain that assignment. Accordingly, the Employer's past practice and current assignment favor an award of the work to the group of employees represented by the Iron Workers.

6. Joint Board determinations

As noted, the Iron Workers did not participate in the Joint Industry Board determination assertedly made under the collective-bargaining agreement between the Millwrights and the Employer. Accordingly, this factor does not favor an award of the work to either group of employees.

Conclusion

Upon the record as a whole, and after full consideration of all relevant factors involved, we conclude that employees who are represented by the Iron Workers are entitled to perform the work in dispute. We reach this conclusion relying on the factors of economy and efficiency of operation and the Employer's past practice and current assignment. In making this determination, we are awarding the work in question to employees who are represented by the Iron Workers, but not to that Union or its members. The present determination is limited to the particular controversy which gave rise to this proceeding.

DETERMINATION OF DISPUTE

Pursuant to Section 10(k) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, and upon the basis of the foregoing findings and the entire record in this proceeding, the National Labor Relations Board makes the following Determination of Dispute:

1. Employees of the FMC Corporation, MHS Division, who are represented by the International Association of Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Iron Workers Local Union No. 111, affiliated with AFL-CIO, are entitled to perform the installation of the overhead power and free conveyor system at the John Deere Foundry in Silvis, Illinois.

2. Millwright-Technical Engineers Local 2158 of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America is not entitled by means proscribed by Section 8(b)(4)(D) of the Act to force or require FMC Corporation, MHS Division, to assign the disputed work to employees represented by that labor organization.

3. Within 10 days from the date of this Decision and Determination of Dispute, Millwright-Technical Engineers Local 2158 of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America shall notify the Regional Director for Region 33, in writing, whether or not it will refrain from forcing or requiring the Employer, by means proscribed by Section 8(b)(4)(D) of the Act, to assign the disputed work in a manner inconsistent with the above determination.

Roth's IGA Foodliner, Inc. and United Food & Commercial Workers Union Local No. 143-A, AFL-CIO. Case 36-CA-3768

October 30, 1981

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

Upon a charge filed on December 3, 1980, an amended charge filed on January 15, 1981, a second amended charge filed on January 26, 1981, and a third amended charge filed on January 30, 1981, by United Food & Commercial Workers Union Local No. 143-A, AFL-CIO, herein called the Union, and duly served on Roth's IGA Foodliner, Inc., herein called Respondent, the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, by the Acting Regional Director for Region 19, issued an order consolidating cases, a consolidated complaint, and a notice of hearing on January 30, 1981, against Respondent, alleging that Respondent had engaged in and was engaging in unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Sections 8(a)(1) and 2(6) and (7) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended. Copies of the charges, the order consolidating cases, the consolidated complaint, and the notice of hearing before an administrative law judge were duly served on the parties to the proceeding.

The complaint alleges that certain employees of Respondent constitute a unit appropriate for the purpose of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act. It further alleges that on or about May 21, 1980, a majority of the employees of Respondent in that unit designated and selected the Union as their representative for the purpose of collective bargaining. The complaint further alleges that Respondent engaged in various forms of unlawful conduct, including interrogation, promises of increased benefits, grants of pay raises, threats of discharge, and bribery, all in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

Respondent filed an answer, admitting in part and denying in part the allegations of the complaint, and requesting that the complaint be dismissed. Subsequently, on August 4, 1981, Respondent by stipulation withdrew its answer, with the exception that Respondent continued to deny the allegation that the unit found appropriate constituted a unit appropriate for the purpose of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(c) of the Act. The parties further stipulated that, if the Board found the undenied allegations of the consolidated complaint to be true, that as a matter of law a bargaining order is the appropriate remedy. The stipulation agreement was executed by Respondent, the Charging Party, and counsel for the General Counsel.

On August 10, 1981, counsel for the General Counsel filed directly with the Board a Motion for Summary Judgment, seeking a Board finding that Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act as alleged in the complaint and a Decision and Order against Respondent in conformity with the allegations of the complaint, including a bargaining order.

On August 14, 1981, the Board issued an order transferring the proceeding to the Board and a Notice To Show Cause why the General Counsel's Motion for Summary Judgment should not be granted. No response was filed.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

Upon the entire record in this proceeding, the Board makes the following:

Ruling on the Motion for Summary Judgment

With respect to the unfair labor practices, the complaint alleges the following:

(1) The following employees of Respondent constitute a unit appropriate for the purpose of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act:

> All meatcutters, meat department sanitation employees, meat wrappers, and the head meatcutter/meat department manager employed by the Respondent at its Canby, Oregon, facility, but excluding all other employees, office clerical employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

(2) On or about May 21, 1980, a majority of employees of Respondent in the unit described above designated and selected the Union as their exclusive representative for the purpose of collective bargaining.

(3) At all times since May 21, 1980, the Union, by virtue of Section 9(a) of the Act, has been, and is, the exclusive representative of the employees in the unit described above, for he purpose of collective bargaining.

(4) On November 21, 1980, an NLRB election was held for the employees in the unit described above in Case 36-RC-4348. On November 26, 1980, the Union filed timely objections to the election.

(5) On or about November 5, 1980, in and about the vicinity of its Woodburn facility, Respondent, through its manager and agent, Darrel Rybloom, instructed an employee not to join the Union after his prospective transfer to Respondent's Canby facility.

(6) On or about November 18 and 20, 1980, in and about the vicinity of its Canby facility, Respondent, through Darrel Rybloom, interrogated its employees concerning how they intended to vote in the impending NLRB election.

(7) On or about November 18, 20, and 24, 1980, in and about the vicinity of its Canby facility, Respondent, through Darrel Rybloom, promised its employees increased benefits if they voted against the Union.

(8) On or about November 18, 1980, in and about the vicinity of its Canby facility, Respondent, through Darrel Rybloom, threatened its employees with discharge by saying that, if the Union won the NLRB election, its employees might be "down the street."

(9) On or about November 20, 1980, in and about the vicinity of its Canby facility, Respondent, through Darrell Rybloom, bribed its employee to vote against the Union by giving its employee a promissory note, the conditions of which Respondent fulfilled on or about December 18, 1980.

(10) On or about December 18, 1980, Respondent gave pay raises to its employees employed in the bargaining unit described above, for the purpose of persuading its employees to abandon their support of the Union.

(11) On or about January 6, 1981, in and about the vicinity of its Woodburn facility, Respondent, through its manager and agent, Richard Thurman, threatened to discharge its employee because it believed its employee gave a statement to the NLRB.

(12) By the above-described acts and conduct Respondent has engaged in and is engaging in a course of conduct precluding the holding of a fair rerun election among the employees.

(13) The unfair labor practices described are so serious and substantial in character and nature as to warrant the entry of a remedial order requiring Respondent, as of November 18, 1980, to recognize and bargain with the Union as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of its employees in the unit described above.

(14) By the acts and conduct described above, Respondent has interfered with, restrained, and coerced, and is interfering with, restraining, and coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act, and Respondent thereby has been engaging in unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) and Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

As stated above, Respondent by stipulation withdrew its answer to the complaint, with the exception that it continued to deny the appropriateness of the unit. Having thereby, in effect, failed to deny the allegations, and as no good cause to the contrary has been shown, the allegations in the complaint concerning the unfair labor practices are deemed to be true and are so found to be true.[1]

Respondent's only contention concerns the appropriateness of the bargaining unit. On June 17, 1980, the Union filed a petition under Section 9(c) of the Act, in Case 36-RC-4348, seeking to represent all meatcutters, wrappers, and meat department sanitation employees employed by the Employer at its Canby, Oregon, facility. On October 17, 1980, the Regional Director for Region 19 issued a Supplemental Decision and Direction of Election providing for an election among the following employees of the Respondent:

> All meatcutters, meat department sanitation employees, meat wrappers, and the head meatcutter/meat department manager employed by the Respondent at its Canby, Oregon, facility, but excluding all other employees, office clerical employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

Thereafter, Respondent timely filed a request for review of the Supplemental Decision and Direction of Election. Respondent argued that the Canby meat department employees were an accretion to the already existing unit of meat department employees at Respondent's other eight stores. Respondent contended that the Canby store manager's lack of day-to-day supervision over its meat department employees, the significant employee interchange among Respondent's stores, and the interest of the union representative for the eight-store unit in representing the Canby employees rebutted the presumption of single-store unit appropriateness. By telegram dated November 13, 1980, the Board denied Respondent's request for review.[2] Respondent has presented no further evidence that would warrant reconsideration of that decision. The unit is appropriate as found by the Regional Director.

[1] Rules and Regulations of the Board, Sec. 102.20, Series 8, as amended; Jerry C. Wilson, et al., d/b/a Wilson & Sons, 193 NLRB 350 (1971), and cases cited therein. In view of its stipulation, Respondent admits that at all times since May 21, 1980, the Union has been designated and selected by the majority of employees in the unit as their exclusive representative. Respondent also does not deny the allegation that, by its conduct, it has precluded the holding of a fair rerun election among the employees in that unit.

[2] An election was conducted on November 21, 1980, among the employees of the described unit. The Union failed to obtain a majority of votes cast. The tally showed one for, and one against, the Petitioner, with no challenged ballots.

It is well settled that in the absence of newly discovered or previously unavailable evidence or special circumstances a respondent in a proceeding alleging a violation of Section 8(a)(1) is not entitled to relitigate issues which were or could have been litigated in a prior representation proceeding.[3]

All issues, including the unit determination, raised by Respondent in this proceeding were or could have been litigated in the prior representation proceeding, and Respondent does not offer to adduce at a hearing any newly discovered or previously unavailable evidence, nor does it allege that any special circumstances exist herein which would require the Board to reexamine the decision made in the representation proceeding. We therefore find that Respondent has not raised any issue which is properly litigable in this unfair labor practice proceeding. Accordingly, we grant the Motion for Summary Judgment.

On the basis of the entire record, the Board makes the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. THE BUSINESS OF RESPONDENT

Respondent is an Oregon corporation engaged in the operation of nine retail stores in northwestern Oregon. The facilities in Canby and Woodburn are the only locations involved in this proceeding. During the past 12 months, a representative period, Respondent, in the course of its business operations, had gross sales of goods and services valued in excess of $500,000. In that time Respondent also purchased and caused to be transferred and delivered to its facilities within the State of Oregon goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly from sources outside the State, or from suppliers within the State which in turn obtained such goods and materials directly from sources outside the State.

We find, on the basis of the foregoing, that Respondent is, and has been at all times material herein, an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act, and that it will effectuate the policies of the Act to assert jurisdiction herein.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

United Food & Commercial Workers Union Local No. 143-A, AFL-CIO, is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

The 8(a)(1) Violations

Respondent has admitted, and we have found as true, the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint. Accordingly, we find Respondent has engaged in, and is engaging in, unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

IV. THE EFFECT OF THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES UPON COMMERCE

The activities of Respondent, set forth in section III, above, occurring in connection with its operations described in section I, above, have a close, intimate, and substantial relationship to trade, traffic, and commerce among the several States and tend to lead to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow of commerce.

V. THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in and is engaging in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, we shall order that it cease and desist therefrom.

The parties have stipulated that as a matter of law a bargaining order is the appropriate remedy. We agree.

First, the unit involved here is small. The tally of ballots shows approximately three eligible voters. Experience has shown that an employer's unlawful conduct is magnified when it is directed at a small number of employees. Second, the unlawful acts of interrogation, bribery, threat of discharge, promise of increased benefits, and the instruction not to join the Union, detailed above, were committed by General Manager Darrel Rybloom, who was clothed with at least the apparent authority to carry out his threats. Third, the traditional remedy of a cease-and-desist order, notice posting, and a rerun election would not erase the effects of Respondent's unlawful post-election pay raises. These unit employees would not be likely to miss the inference that the source of benefits so conferred is also the source from which all future benefits must flow. N.L.R.B. v. Exchange Parts Company, 375 U.S. 405, 409 (1964). For these reasons we find that the possibility of ensuring a fair election through traditional remedies is slight, and that employee sentiment, as expressed on May 21, 1980, is better protected by a bargaining order. See N.L.R.B. v. Gissel Packing Co., Inc., 395 U.S. 575 (1969).

We therefore shall order that Respondent, upon request, bargain with the Union as the exclusive representative of all employees in the appropriate unit, and, if an understanding is reached, embody such understanding in a signed agreement.

The Board, upon the basis of the foregoing facts and the entire record, makes the following:

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Roth's IGA Foodliner, Inc., is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. United Food & Commercial Workers Union Local No. 143-A, AFL-CIO, is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. All meatcutters, meat department sanitation employees, meat wrappers, and the head meatcutter/meat department manager employed by the Employer at its Canby, Oregon, facility but excluding all other employees, office clerical employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act, constitute a unit appropriate for the purpose of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(a) of the Act.

5. By the acts and conduct described in the ruling above, Respondent has interfered with, restrained, and coerced, and is interfering with, restraining, and coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act, and thereby has engaged in and is engaging in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

6. The aforesaid unfair labor practices are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board hereby orders that the Respondent, Roth's IGA Foodliner, Inc., Silverton, Oregon, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Instructing its employees not to join the Union upon transfer to its Canby facility.

(b) Interrogating its employees concerning how they would vote in any Board election.

(c) Promising its employees increases in benefits if they would vote against the Union in any Board election.

(d) Threatening its employees with discharge based on a union victory in any Board election.

(e) Bribing its employees to influence their votes in any Board election.

(f) Granting any further pay raises or increases in benefits without bargaining with the Union.[4]

(g) Threatening to discharge its employees for offering statements to the Board.

(h) In any other manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action which the Board finds will effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Upon request, bargain with the above-named labor organization as the exclusive representative of all employees in the aforesaid appropriate unit with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment and, if an understanding is reached, embody such understanding in a signed agreement.

(b) Post at its Canby and Woodburn, Oregon, facilities copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[5] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 19, after being duly signed by Respondent's representative, shall be posted by Respondent immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to ensure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

The National Labor Relations Act gives employees the following rights:

To engage in self-organization

To form, join, or assist any union

To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice

To engage in activities together for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection

To refrain from the exercise of any or all such activities.

[4] This Order is not to be construed as requiring a rescission of the benefits granted subsequent to the election.

[5] In the event that this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

WE WILL NOT instruct employees not to join the Union upon transfer to our Canby facility.

WE WILL NOT interrogate employees concerning how they would vote in any Board election.

WE WILL NOT threaten employees with discharge in the event the Union wins any NLRB election.

WE WILL NOT promise increased benefits to employees in return for votes against the Union in any NLRB election.

WE WILL NOT bribe or attempt to bribe any employees to vote against the Union in any NLRB election.

WE WILL NOT grant pay raises to employees to persuade them to abandon support of the Union.

WE WILL NOT threaten to discharge employees for giving statements to the NLRB.

WE WILL NOT in any other manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce you in the exercise of your rights set forth above which are guaranteed by the National Labor Relations Act.

WE WILL, upon request, bargain with United Food & Commercial Workers Union Local No. 143-A, AFL-CIO, as the exclusive representative of all employees in the bargaining unit described below, with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment and, if an understanding is reached, embody such understanding in a signed agreement. The bargaining unit is:

> All meatcutters, meat department sanitation employees, meat wrappers, and the head meatcutter/meat department manager employed by the Employer at its Canby, Oregon, facility, but excluding all other employees, office clerical employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

ROTH'S IGA FOODLINER, INC.

Laborers International Union of North America, AFL-CIO, Local 282 and Hannin Roofing and Sheet Metal Company, Inc. and United Slate, Tile and Composition Roofers, Damp and Waterproof Workers' Association, Local 208. Case 14-CD-632

September 30, 1981

DECISION AND DETERMINATION OF DISPUTE

By Members Fanning, Jenkins, and Zimmerman

This is a proceeding under Section 10(k) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, following a charge filed by Hannin Roofing and Sheet Metal Company, Inc., herein called the Employer, alleging that Laborers International Union of North America, AFL-CIO, Local 282, herein called the Laborers, had violated Section 8(b)(4)(D) of the Act by engaging in certain proscribed activity with an object of forcing or requiring the Employer to assign certain work to its members rather than to employees represented by United Slate, Tile and Composition Roofers, Damp and Waterproof Workers' Association, Local 208, herein called the Roofers.

Pursuant to notice, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Michael Jamison on July 9, 1981.[1] All parties appeared[2] and were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to adduce evidence bearing on the issues.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has reviewed the Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing and finds that they are free from prejudicial error. They are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in this proceeding, the Board makes the following findings:

I. THE BUSINESS OF THE EMPLOYER

The parties stipulated, and we find, that the Employer, a Kentucky corporation with its principal place of business in Paducah, Kentucky, is engaged in the construction business. During the past year, the Employer purchased goods from outside the State having a value in excess of $50,000. The parties also stipulated, and we find, that the Employer is engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act, as amended, and it will effectuate the purposes of the Act to assert jurisdiction herein.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATIONS INVOLVED

The parties stipulated, and we find, that the Laborers and the Roofers are labor organizations within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

A. Background and Facts of the Dispute

The Employer has a contract to construct a built-up roof on part of the Sikeston power plant in Sikeston, Missouri. The Employer is a subcontractor to Triangle Insulation of Paducah, Kentucky. Triangle Insulation is a subcontractor to Babcock & Wilcox, the general contractor. On June 3, eight roofers employed by the Employer unloaded materials at the worksite. Ernie Brown, the Laborers chief steward for this worksite, advised the Employer's job superintendent, Doug Graham, that shoveling the roofing gravel and cleaning up the roof debris should be done by employees represented by the Laborers. Brown asked Graham to speak with the Laborers business agent and principal officer, Jim Bollinger. Although he tried to reach him by phone, Graham never spoke with Bollinger. Graham did, however, consult with the Employer's president and with the business agent for Roofers Local 144 concerning the use of laborers to do the work in question and, after such consultation, on Thursday, June 4, he advised Brown that the Employer would assign the work to its employees represented by the Roofers. According to Graham, Brown then reiterated that the work belonged to employees represented by the Laborers, and also stated that "if you do not sign a laborers contract and employ 2 laborers by Friday [Bollinger] was going to put a picket on this job." Brown denied doing anything other than, on June 3, asking Graham to speak with Bollinger. In any event, beginning on June 8 and continuing through June 10, the Laborers picketed the Employer's worksite with a sign that read: "Notice to the Public. Hannin Roofing has no contract with Laborers Local 282." Pursuant to the general contractor's request, the Employer ceased its operations at the jobsite pending resolution of this dispute. At the time of the hearing the work remained unfinished.

B. The Work in Dispute

The work in dispute involves moving (i.e., shoveling) roofing gravel at ground level and the daily cleanup of debris resulting from the application of roofing materials at the Sikeston power plant in Sikeston, Missouri. It involves about 1 to 2 hours' work daily.

[1] All dates are in 1981.

[2] United Union of Roofers, Waterproofers and Allied Workers, Local 144, appeared at the hearing as a Party in Interest.

C. The Contentions of the Parties

The Employer contends that there is reasonable cause to believe that Section 8(b)(4)(D) of the Act has been violated. The Employer urges that the existing collective-bargaining agreement, employer and area practice, economy and efficiency of operation, and its assignment and preference require a finding that the work was properly assigned to employees represented by the Roofers.

The Roofers agrees with the Employer.

The Laborers takes the position that there is no jurisdictional dispute within the meaning of the Act as there exists no reasonable cause to believe that Section 8(b)(4)(D) of the Act has been violated. It urges that Brown's statement could not be a threat because only Bollinger had the authority to take men off a jobsite or establish a picket line. Further, it argues that the picket line was only informational; however, it contends that, if the Board finds there is reasonable cause to believe there is such a dispute, the work in question should be assigned to laborers because the work is traditionally done by such employees, the Employer has no International or other pertinent collective-bargaining agreement with the Roofers, and area practice is to assign the work to employees represented by the Laborers. It further contends that the work in question does not require any of a roofer's specialized skills, and that economy would not dictate using roofers since there is substantial cleanup required at the worksite.

D. Applicability of the Statute

Before the Board may proceed with a determination of the dispute pursuant to Section 10(k) of the Act, it must be satisfied that there is reasonable cause to believe that Section 8(b)(4)(D) has been violated and that the parties have not agreed upon a method for the voluntary adjustment of the dispute.

There is evidence that on June 3 Brown, the Laborers chief steward at the site, told Graham, the job superintendent of the Employer, that the Employer would have to hire employees represented by the Laborers; that, subsequently, after Brown was informed that roofers would get the work, he warned Graham that if the Employer "did not sign a laborers contract and employ 2 laborers by Friday [the Laborers business agent] was going to put a picket on this job"[3] and that on the first workday after the Laborers deadline passed unheeded, the Laborers set up a picket at the worksite with a sign directed at the Employer. In these circumstances, we find reasonable cause to believe that the Laborers sought and demanded the disputed work, and in furtherance thereof threatened to picket and picketed the Employer to force a change in the assignment of the work, in violation of Section 8(b)(4)(i) and (ii)(D), as charged.

There is no evidence of an agreed-upon method for the voluntary adjustment of the dispute within the meaning of Section 10(k) of the Act. Accordingly, we find that this dispute is properly before the Board for determination.

E. Merits of the Dispute

Section 10(k) of the Act requires the Board to make an affirmative award of disputed work after giving due consideration to various factors.[4] The Board has held that its determination in a jurisdictional dispute is an act of judgment based on commonsense and experience reached by balancing those factors involved in a particular case.[5]

The following factors are relevant in making the determination of the dispute before us:

1. Collective-bargaining agreement

The Employer had a collective-bargaining agreement with the Roofers[6] on the Sikeston power plant job. Article II of that agreement setting forth the unit work provides, in pertinent part:

> (b) above deck roof vapor barriers of all kinds; roof insulation of all kinds, including foil and urethane composition and built-up roofing of all kinds including hot and cold applied; prepared, plastic, fluid applied, sheet applied and mastic roofing; all associated roof surfacing including aggregates, coating, traffic planks and decks and decorative finishes; and the necessary metal flashing to make watertight;

[3] We need not conclusively resolve the conflict in testimony between Brown and Graham on this point, since the Board only is required to find there is reasonable cause to believe that Sec. 8(b)(4)(D) had been violated before making a determination of the dispute out of which the alleged unfair labor practice has arisen. United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, AFL-CIO, et al. (Wendnagel & Company), 116 NLRB 1063, 1066 (1956).

[5] International Association of Machinists, Lodge No. 1743, AFL-CIO (J. A. Jones Construction Company), 135 NLRB 1402 (1962).

[6] The literal language of the collective-bargaining agreement would not cover the jobsite in question. Thus the geographic jurisdiction of the collective-bargaining agreement does not include any of Missouri. This limitation results from the fact that Local 208's jurisdiction does not extend to this area. Rather this project falls within the jurisdiction of neighboring Local 144, the party in interest in this case. However, Local 144 had given the Employer permission to use Local 208-represented employees on this jobsite. Since Local 208-represented employees were being used, it was their contract with the Employer, despite the limiting language as to jurisdiction, which was being applied to this jobsite.

(e) all unloading, handling and hoisting of all tools and materials to be used in connection with the work described in Paragraphs II, a, b, c and d above . . . .

(f) all other work in connection with or incidental thereto.

We find that section (e) of the above agreement encompasses the movement of roofing gravel at ground level and that section (f) is broad enough to cover cleanup duties. Thus, the Employer's collective-bargaining agreement with the Roofers covers the work in dispute.

The Employer has no contract with the Laborers. We conclude, therefore, that the relevant collective-bargaining agreement favors an assignment of the disputed work to employees represented by the Roofers.

2. Employer preference, assignment, and past practice

The Employer assigned the work here to roofers and prefers an assignment to that group of employees. It presented evidence that on a prior job in the same general geographical area it used employees represented by the Roofers to handle gravel and to clean up roofing debris. We find the factors of employer preference, assignment, and past practice favor an award to employees represented by the Roofers.

3. Industry practice

The Employer presented testimony from three of its competitors working within a 100-mile radius of this project. One of them uses employees represented by the Roofers, exclusively, for the disputed work while the other two competitors regularly use employees represented by the Roofers for the transport of gravel, though they both mentioned isolated examples when employees represented by the Laborers did cleanup work. The Laborers presented evidence that its employees had shoveled gravel and done cleanup on other projects. We find that the industry practice is mixed and favors neither group of employees.

4. Economy and efficiency of operation

The Employer's president testified that it would take about 1 hour daily to shovel gravel and another hour daily to do cleanup. He further testified that, because both tasks are normally done at the end of each workday, if the Employer were to hire employees represented by the Laborers it would have to hire two people and pay each of them for a full 8-hour day even though it only had 1 hour's worth of work for each one. However, if roofers did the disputed work, the employees doing the disputed work could do other roofers' chores the remainder of the workday. Although the Laborers argued that, if the Employer hired laborers to do the disputed work, those hired could also do other chores, there is nothing here to indicate that any such work was available. Thus, the factor of economy and efficiency favors assignment of the disputed work to employees represented by the Roofers.

5. Skills

The work does not require any special skill. Therefore both groups of employees are equally capable of performing the work. This factor favors neither group of employees.

Conclusion

Upon the record as a whole, and after full consideration of all relevant factors involved, we conclude that employees who are represented by the Roofers are entitled to perform the work in dispute. We reach this conclusion relying on the collective-bargaining agreement, the Employer's preference, assignment, and past practice, and efficiency and economy of operation, all of which favor an award of the disputed work to the employees represented by the Roofers. In making this determination, we are awarding the work in question to employees who are represented by the Roofers, but not to that Union or its members. The present determination is limited to the particular controversy which gave rise to this proceeding.

DETERMINATION OF DISPUTE

Pursuant to Section 10(k) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, and upon the basis of the foregoing findings and the entire record in this proceeding, the National Labor Relations Board makes the following Determination of Dispute:

1. Employees of Hannin Roofing and Sheet Metal Company, Inc., who are represented by United Slate, Tile and Composition Roofers, Damp and Waterproof Workers' Association Local 208, are entitled to move (i.e., shovel) roofing gravel at ground level and to the daily cleanup of debris resulting from the application of roofing materials at the Sikeston power plant in Sikeston, Missouri.

2. Laborers International Union of North America, AFL–CIO, Local 282, is not entitled by means proscribed by Section 8(b)(4)(D) of the Act to force or require Hannin Roofing and Sheet Metal Company, Inc., to assign the disputed work to employees represented by that labor organization.

3. Within 10 days from the date of this Decision and Determination of Dispute, Laborers International Union of North America, AFL–CIO, Local 282, shall notify the Regional Director for Region

14, in writing, whether or not it will refrain from forcing or requiring the Employer, by means proscribed by Section 8(b)(4)(D) of the Act, to assign the disputed work in a manner inconistent with the above determination.

DECISION AND ORDER

By Members Fanning, Jenkins, and Zimmerman

On March 31, 1981, Administrative Law Judge Richard L. Denison issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions[2] of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order.[3]

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge and hereby orders that the Respondent, L & M Radiator, Inc., Hibbing, Minnesota, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the said recommended Order,[4] except that the attached notice is substituted for that of the Administrative Law Judge.

Member Jenkins, concurring in part:

I would not rely on Wright Line, a Division of Wright Line, Inc., 251 NLRB 1083 (1980). The Administrative Law Judge correctly found that Respondent's alleged lawful reasons for the discharges were "false" and "pretext." Thus, there was no genuine lawful motive in existence here; only the unlawful one was genuine. Wright Line was directed only at resolving the causation issue when a genuine lawful cause or purpose exists along with a genuine unlawful cause. To use Wright Line where only the unlawful cause is genuine is to engage in a sham analysis which can have only one outcome; and such sham application eventually stultifies the analysis and its effectiveness in treating the real problem to which it was directed.

APPENDIX

Notice To Employees
Posted by Order of the
National Labor Relations Board
An Agency of the United States Government

After a hearing at which all sides had an opportunity to present evidence and state their positions, the National Labor Relations Board found that we have violated the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, and has ordered us to post this notice.

> We will not lay off, punish, or otherwise discriminate against Jackie Johnson, Ruby Carter, Sandra Roberts, or any other employee, because they have engaged in protected concerted activities for their mutual aid or protection.
> We will not threaten our employees that they will not be recalled to employment from layoff because they engaged in protected concerted activities with other employees for their mutual aid or protection.
> We will not in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of their rights to self-organization, to form, join, or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of

[1] Respondent has excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Administrative Law Judge. It is the Board's established policy not to overrule an administrative law judge's resolutions with respect to credibility unless the clear preponderance of all of the relevant evidence convinces us that the resolutions are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, Inc., 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing his findings.

In accordance with his dissent in Olympic Medical Corporation, 250 NLRB 146 (1980), Member Jenkins would award interest on the backpay due based on the formula set forth therein.

[2] Respondent has also excepted to the Administrative law Judge's remedy and Order directing that the employees in question be offered immediate and full reinstatement with backpay, computed in accordance with traditional Board formulas. Any contentions that Respondent may raise concerning the interim earnings of the affected employees or whether reinstatement to their former jobs has indeed been offered to them are properly matters for the compliance stage of these proceedings.

In concluding that Respondent discharged employee Sandra Roberts unlawfully, we find it unnecessary to rely on the fact that her attendance record was placed in evidence.

[3] Respondent has requested oral argument. This request is hereby denied as the record, the exceptions, and the briefs adequately present the issues and the positions of the parties.

We deny Respondent's motion to remand this proceeding to the Administrative Law Judge and to reopen the record to receive allegedly suppressed evidence. The additional evidence was neither newly discovered nor unavailable at the time of the hearing. Additionally, we find that the proffered evidence, even if accepted, would not affect the result reached herein. Nor does the fact that Respondent, who was not represented by an attorney at the hearing, engaged the services of an attorney subsequent to the issuance of the Administrative Law Judge's Decision merit granting Respondent's request. See James Innaco, d/b/a Skyline Transport, 228 NLRB 352 (1977).

[4] Contrary to our concurring colleague, we do not agree that reference to Wright Line, a Division of Wright Line, Inc., 251 NLRB 1083 (1980), in the present situation results in a "sham analysis." We adhere to our holding in Castle Instant Maintenance/Maid, Inc., 256 NLRB 130, fn. 1 (1981). There we stated that we saw no need to comment on an administrative law judge's resort to a Wright Line-type analysis if the correct result was reached. Our statement in Castle Instant Maintenance is equally applicable to the present situation.

their own choosing, and to engage in other protected concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection, or to refrain from any and all such activities, except to the extent that such right may be affected by an agreement requiring membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment, as authorized in Section 8(a)(3) of the Act, as amended.

WE WILL offer Jackie Johnson, Ruby Carter, and Sandra Roberts immediate and full reinstatement to their former positions or, if such positions no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or other rights and privileges, and make them whole for any loss of earnings, plus interest, they may have suffered as a result of our discrimination against them.

L & M RADIATOR, INC.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

RICHARD L. DENISON, Administrative Law Judge: This case was heard at Hibbing, Minnesota, on November 20 and 21, 1980, arising from charges in Cases 18–CA–6621–1 and 18–CA–6621–2 filed on March 27, 1980, and later amended, respectively, by Ruby Carter and Jackie Johnson, individuals. The complaint issued May 28, 1980, as amended, alleges that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by laying off Jackie Johnson on October 23, 1979, and employees Ruby Carter and Sandra Roberts on October 24, 1979, and thereafter failed and refused to recall these employees, because they engaged in protected concerted activities by protesting employees' working conditions.[1] It is also alleged that Respondent further violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act on or about January 31, 1980, when Respondent's president told two of the laid-off employees that they would not be recalled to work because they engaged in protected concerted activities. Respondent's answer denies the allegations of unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint.

Upon the entire record in the case, including my observation of the witnesses and consideration of the briefs, I make the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

The complaint alleges, and the amended answer admits that, at all times material herein, Respondent is a Minnesota corporation with an office and place of business in Hibbing, Minnesota, where it is engaged in the manufacture and nonretail sale and distribution of radiators and related products. Only Respondent's Hibbing, Minnesota, facility is involved in this proceeding. During the 12-month period ending December 31, Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business operations, sold and shipped from its Hibbing, Minnesota, facility products, goods, and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly to points outside the State of Minnesota. During the same period of time Respondent purchased and received at its Hibbing, Minnesota, facility products, goods, and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly from points outside the State of Minnesota. The answer admits, and I find, that Respondent is now, and has been at all times material herein, an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Background

At its Hibbing, Minnesota, plant Respondent manufactures radiators for earth moving equipment, primarily for the mining industry, and also performs repair services for that industry in the area of the Mesabi Iron Range, utilizing an hourly paid work force of approximately 50 to 60 shop employees.

Respondent's work force is not represented by any union. Newly hired employees are provided with a copy of Respondent's publication entitled "A Handbook For Our Employees," signed by Company President Alex Chisholm, which sets forth Respondent's policies, work rules, and benefits. Page 23 of the handbook is entitled "Suggestion Box" and states:

> L & M Radiator, Inc. has a Suggestion Box for suggestions by employees.
> Each suggestion will be answered and the answer posted.
> If you have a gripe, don't complain to your fellow worker. Come where you can get action!
> The doors of the supervisor's office are always open, along with management.

Page 24 of the handbook is entitled "Employee Problems." This section sets forth a two-step procedure, which the employee is encouraged to utilize in order to get "a cause of dissatisfaction . . . off your chest." Briefly, the employee is invited to orally discuss the problem with his immediate supervisor. Upon receiving an answer 3 days later, if the employee is still dissatisfied, he may take the matter up with his supervisor's superior, and obtain a decision within 3 days.

Page 25 of the handbook contains a section entitled "Grievance Committee," which states:

> L & M Radiator, Inc. has a Grievance Committee, selected by the employees, which constitutes a Union.
> The meetings are held on the first Thursday of each month between the hours of 3:00 and 4:00 P.M. in the employees' lunchroom.
> These meetings give you, the employee, the opportunity to voice grievances or make suggestions regarding working conditions. A committee, elected by the employees, will submit these problems to management within a few days of the Grievance Meeting.

Jacqueline Johnson was hired by Respondent on May 6, 1975. For the first 1-1/2 years of her employment she worked in the tubemaking area as a tube machine operator. Thereafter, she moved to the platemaking area where she worked on header sheets until permanently laid off on October 23. During slow periods at the Company, she also performed work in the assembly area. At the time of her termination Johnson had worked in the plate department longer than any other employee except Sandra Roberts. Roberts was hired on May 3, 1974, and also worked on the tube machine for 9 months before moving to the plate department where she remained until her permanent layoff on October 24. Ruby Carter became employed by the Company on May 8, 1975, and worked on the tube machine during the entire period of her employment with Respondent, except briefly from December 1975 to June 1976, when she worked in the office. Thus, Carter was the Company's most experienced tube machine operator.

B. The Events Surrounding the March 8 Meeting

Undisputed and credited testimony by the three above-named employees reveals that on an unspecified date about the first of March, Ruby Carter placed a suggestion in the Company's suggestion box, recommending that management hold a special meeting with the employees to resolve difficulties which had arisen between the employees and Foremen Tom Turin and Fred Odegaard. Pursuant to this request, Company President Alex Chisholm met with both shifts in the plant lunchroom at 3 p.m. on March 8. Immediately prior to this meeting Johnson, Carter, and Roberts met briefly with Production Manager James Hocking in Johnson's work area, and told Hocking about the problems with the foremen which they intended to raise during the lunchroom meeting. Hocking encouraged the three workers not to be afraid to speak out, assuring them that Chisholm would listen to them as he had in the past.[2]

The meeting in the lunchroom began with Johnson, who was a member of the official employee grievance committee, asking Chisholm what had happened to the Company's open door policy. When Chisholm asked what she meant, Johnson answered that apparently there had been some communication breakdown, and that some of the employees felt they could no longer go over a foreman's head. Then Carter related a specific example, describing how Foreman Tom Turin became angry and grabbed her arm after Carter had contacted Hocking about her malfunctioning machine when her complaints to Turin had been ignored. Then Sandra Roberts described how, in her opinion, Fred Odegaard had lied to her about her scheduled workdays, and an incident in which Turin lost his temper, shouted at her, and swore at her husband when he protested Turin's conduct.

Employee Gary Fairchild then spoke up in confirmation of the three women's accusations of verbal abuse by Odegaard, while John Martin defended Turin, stating that he thought Turin was a good foreman. Then Chisholm asked if they thought all of the foremen should be fired, and, after a period of silence, Johnson said that the purpose of the meeting was not to have anyone fired, but to make Chisholm aware of what was happening in the shop, in order to resolve their problems and get along better with the foremen. Johnson, Roberts, and Carter were the only employees who raised specific complaints. Then the subject was changed to other problems of the shop engineering, and questions about the equipment, after which the meeting ended.

C. Jacqueline Johnson

On Monday, March 12, Johnson reported to work about 4 p.m. following a medical checkup at an outside clinic. Sometime previously Johnson had been away from work for 7 months after having a hysterectomy, returning only when released by the doctor. On this particular day the medical appointment lasted an hour longer than expected, and Johnson was 1 hour later than her estimate. Upon her arrival she was informed by employee Gary Fairchild that Alex Chisholm wanted to see her about her attendance. Remembering the March 8 meeting, Johnson became afraid and nervous, obtained permission to take the remainder of the day off as a vacation day, and went home. However, later that evening, having composed herself, she telephoned Chisholm at his home. Chisholm stated that he had paged both Ruby Carter and Johnson, and found neither of them there. He said he had pulled Johnson's attendance record, which he stated was terrible. Johnson answered that she would come in the next morning and discuss this matter with him, and Chisholm agreed. Next, Johnson called Hocking, told him what had happened, and solicited his support. After promising to defend her, Hocking stated he was sorry, and had not expected the meeting to go that way.

The following morning Chisholm and Johnson met alone in Chisholm's office. Chisholm had Johnson's attendance record brought in, and Johnson asked how it had been scored. Chisholm stated that it had been brought on the surface by the March 8 meeting, following which one of the foremen told Chisholm that Carter and Johnson would not know what was going on about something they should do, because they had never done anything. Johnson then defended her attendance record, insisting that the absences had been excused. She said she had been out 7 straight months for surgery, under the care of a doctor, and that two other times she had been in the hospital, once for an on-the-job injury, and another time for bronchitis following a physical by the Company's doctor. On other occasions, Johnson stated, she had always obtained permission from her foreman to leave the plant. At this point Chisholm exploded, stating that he was not running a "goddamned nursing home," and if he were he would fire everybody and hire all part-time help, which would be cheaper because he would not have to pay the benefits. Johnson tried to explain that apathy was developing in the shop because the employees did not know to whom they could talk. She said that if enough apathy developed, the people "weren't going to bust their—for them . . . ." Johnson also pointed out that some of the time she had missed, she had made up by either staying later or working on Saturdays. Then Chisholm asked if Johnson, Roberts, and Carter were the only ones that had any "b—" to speak about their grievances, and Johnson answered that they were the only ones with "b—" in the Company. Then the discussion turned to some of the Company's equipment. Johnson asked if it were going to be possible to get an NC punch for the plate area. Chisholm said that the Company could not afford it at that time. Johnson insisted that it was needed, and the discussion ended with an angry Chisholm stating it was his "goddamned company" and he would run it the way he wanted. He said that Johnson's attendance was being monitored, and she would be terminated if there were any more bad attendance. Shortly thereafter that same day, Johnson received a written warning stating that her attendance was "very poor," and "that in the future you will be very closely monitored, and if you continue to miss work you will be discharged regardless of the excuse."[3]

[2] Hocking corroborated Johnson's account of the premeeting discussion.

Thereafter, between March 13 and her layoff on October 23, Johnson missed only 3 days of work. Each was for medical reasons, and each was excused. On one occasion during the summer, while working at a drill press in the shop, Chisholm approached Johnson and complimented her on her attendance.

On October 23 Fred Odegaard called Johnson to his office and told her she was going to be laid off. He said work was slow, and the Company had seven more employees than the year before. Therefore, he said, four people were going to be laid off. The other employees he named were Ruby Carter, Sandra Roberts, and Bob Olsen. Johnson asked why they were not going by seniority, and Odegaard responded Respondent was doing it by departments. She asked how the decision was made, and Odegaard stated he did not know since the front office did not tell him. He said the layoff was going to be temporary until things picked up, but he did not know what the duration of the layoff would be. Johnson asked why she was chosen, and why Respondent was laying off the older ones. Odegaard simply answered that Respondent was going by departments, not the overall shop. Johnson's attendance or production was not mentioned during the interview.

Later in the day, about 5 p.m., Johnson decided to confront Chisholm about her layoff. She went to Chisholm's office, where she spoke to him alone. She said that she wanted to know how he arrived at the decisions to lay off the selected employees. Chisholm stated that he, Dick Braun, Jim Hocking, and Fred Odegaard had made the decisions, and "felt these were the people that the Company could do without the best." Johnson asked if her attendance had been bad, and Chisholm responded that it had been good since the March 8 meeting. She then asked if her production or work had failed. Chisholm said no, it had been good. Then Johnson said, "Well, what it comes down to, then, is a personal vendetta." Chisholm responded, "If you wish." Johnson then asked if the layoff were going to be permanent or temporary, and Chisholm stated that she could consider it permanent, but that the Company had a policy not to hire anyone for 90 days. Johnson asked for a layoff slip, and Chisholm promised to provide her with one. Then she left.

Although Johnson had subsequent contacts with the Company, she never received the layoff slip. On January 31, 1980, Johnson went to the plant to seek reemployment because the 90-day period mentioned by Chisholm in her exit interview had just passed. She was accompanied by Ruby Carter, who had also been laid off, as described elsewhere in this Decision. They met with Chisholm alone in his office. After reminding him that 90 days had passed, Johnson asked if they were going to be rehired. Chisholm said the Company had no intention of rehiring them. Carter asked why, and Chisholm answered that they were not happy working there and were always complaining. Carter commented that most of her complaints had to do with safety issues, citing an incident involving spray painting about 2 days before her layoff. Chisholm retorted, "You didn't see any bodies lying at that point, did you?" Then Johnson pressed Chisholm once again for the real reason for their layoffs, and Chisholm stated that they had viciously attacked the foreman. He also said Carter had attacked him, "Johnson and Carter were the two biggest bitchers in the Company," and he would get rid of anybody who was a pain in the "a—." Then Carter said that she thought Chisholm would want to be aware of the problems in the shop, but Chisholm concluded the interview by reiterating that they were not happy there and should go to the mines where maybe they would be treated better.

Carter corroborated Johnson's version of this conversation, recalling specifically that Chisholm became angry and threw his pencil on the desk when Carter attempted to explain that there were things in the plant he should know about, in response to Chisholm's statement that the two women were not happy there. She also specifically remembered Chisholm stating that "they were the two biggest bitchers in the Company," and that he had to get rid of people who were a pain in the "a—." Chisholm did not deny making these remarks, which I find violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act as alleged in paragraph 4 of the complaint.

D. Ruby Carter and Sandra Roberts

Prior to the March 8 meeting Carter had never received a written warning. She had received one verbal warning from Foreman Fred Odegaard in 1977. Like Johnson, Carter received a written warning on March 13, following an interview in Chisholm's office. During their brief discussion Carter noted she had been sick and under the care of a doctor, but would try to improve. Chisholm stated he was sympathetic about her family and health problems, but her attendance would be monitored very carefully thereafter, and, if it continued to falter, she would have to be terminated. The written warning described her attendance record as "horrendous," and stated she would "be monitored extremely closely in the future and will be let go if you continue to miss work, regardless of the excuse."

[3] Johnson had received one prior written warning, a "pink slip," given to a group of employees for horseplay when they "threw the foreman in the tank." There is no contention that this incident was in any way considered with respect to Johnson's subsequent termination.

Thereafter, Carter's attendance improved. In July, Chisholm approached Carter at her job in the platemaking department, and congratulated her on that improvement. Nothing else of significance transpired until a few days before Carter was laid off. On that occasion Carter stopped working and went to Chisholm to protest spray paint fumes, which were making Carter and other employees sick. Carter put her arm around Chisholm's waist and asked if there were something he could do. Chisholm sharply retorted, "If you don't like it, find yourself another job," and walked away. Two days later, on October 24, Carter was laid off. At that time she was called to Jim Hocking's office by Fred Odegaard. Sandra Roberts also attended the same exit interview and was laid off at the same time. Roberts had received no prior warnings of any kind. Carter and Roberts asked why they had been selected for layoff. Hocking responded that the decision had come from the "front office," and that he, Odegaard, and Turin had nothing to do with the choices. He said there was a lack of work, Respondent had to get rid of four people, and he could not tell them why or when they would be called back.[4]

E. Respondent's Defense, Discussion, and Concluding Findings

Respondent contends that the October layoff originated with Chisholm's sudden decision that the Company had too many employees. Chisholm testified that he personally decided upon the selection of Johnson and Carter based on a review of their "horrendous attendance records." Although Chisholm claimed his examination of the two employees' records was part of an overall review of a number of employees' files, of which Johnson and Carter were the worst offenders, Chisholm was unable to remember the names of any other employees reviewed or warned. Chisholm also testified that Roberts was not selected for layoff on the basis of her attendance record, but because of her production, although he admitted that she had never been warned about her alleged deficiencies, and that he did not know what the problem was concerning her production. Chisholm stated that apparently Johnson's and Carter's attendance records had been bad throughout their employment at the Company, but that over the last 5 to 7 years Production Manager Hocking had not put anything in their files in writing reflecting this. Chisholm also conceded that Johnson's and Carter's attendance records improved after their written warnings were issued on March 13, and that he "could have" commended Johnson about her improvement. Finally, Chisholm conceded that it was Johnson's and Carter's complaints about the foremen and his discussion with the foremen about those complaints that prompted him to examine their attendance records.

In Wright Line, a Division of Wright Line, Inc., 251 NLRB 1083 (1980), the Board stated:

> [W]e shall henceforth employ the following causation test in all cases alleging violation of Section 8(a)(3) or violations of Section 8(a)(1) turning on employer motivation. First, we shall require that the General Counsel make a prima facie showing sufficient to support the inference that protected conduct was a "motivating factor" in the employer's decision. Once this is established, the burden will shift to the employer to demonstrate that the same action would have taken place even in the absence of the protected conduct.

Counsel for the General Counsel's prima facie case has, in my view, been clearly established. Indeed, Respondent not only failed to contradict the General Counsel's evidence, but, moreover, corroborated it in many instances through the testimony of Respondent's president, Alex Chisholm. Thus, it is established that Johnson, Roberts, and Carter, who had never before been warned about either poor attendance or low production, provoked Company President Chisholm by voicing their grievances against their foremen in a meeting called for that purpose pursuant to Respondent's established suggestion system. It is conceded that immediately thereafter this activity prompted Chisholm to review Johnson's and Carter's personnel files resulting in the issuance of written warnings for attendance. Thereafter their attendance improved, but nonetheless they were selected for layoff. In a postdischarge conversation Chisholm told them that they were the two worst "bitchers" in the plant. Roberts, the third employee to complain at the March 8 meeting, received no warnings at all before her layoff for insufficient production, a condition which Chisholm was unable to describe in detail, and for which she never provided any statistical support. Under all these circumstances there can be little question but that the General Counsel has established a prima facie case of discrimination against employees for engaging in protected concerted activities by protesting about their working conditions to their employer. Under the test enunciated by the Board in Wright Line, the burden shifts to Respondent to prove that Johnson and Carter would have been laid off in any event because of their absentee records, and that Roberts would have been released because of her production. I find that Respondent has failed to meet its burden. Aside from Alex Chisholm's testimony, when called as a witness by counsel for the General Counsel pursuant to Rule 611(c) of the Federal Rules, Respondent's entire defense consisted of documentary evidence in the form of Johnson's, Carter's, and Roberts' attendance records, the names and classifications of employees from January 1978 to January 1980 showing employees laid off and new employees hired, and financial and sales data during this period. Not only does this material fail to carry the day for Respondent, in the face of the strong uncontradicted evidence of discrimination presented by the General Counsel, but also certain aspects of this material tend to support rather than refute the General Counsel's case. Thus, for example, Sandra Roberts' attendance record is included as an exhibit, despite the fact that Chisholm testified that attendance had nothing to do with Roberts' selection for layoff. These documents also reveal that over the period outlined the only layoffs which occurred were those of Johnson, Carter, Roberts, and Olsen in October. Not one scintilla of evidence was offered by Respondent to show that Johnson, Carter, and Roberts, respectively, would have been laid off for poor attendance or poor production irrespective of their protected activities. Furthermore, Respondent did not even succeed in proving that, absent the events surrounding the March 8 meeting, there would even have been a layoff. Undisputed testimony by Carter, Johnson, Roberts, and other employee witnesses clearly demonstrated that in times past, when slow periods had occurred, Respondent normally kept its employees working at whatever odd jobs could be found around the plant. Some of the other long service employees who testified could not remember when there had been a previous layoff in the plant. Finally, employees Ronald Hendrickson and Rick Norenberg remembered Chisholm telling them that Ruby Carter had attacked him.

[4] Nothing in Hocking's testimony disputed the employees' account of their exit interview. Hocking testified that the foremen normally administered the Employer's policies concerning absenteeism and discipline, and that Chisholm's participation in this area of plant administration was not customary. He testified he first learned there was going to be a layoff on the day the initial layoff occurred, when Odegaard called him to Dick Braun's office where Chisholm announced that Respondent was going to lay off Jacqueline Johnson, Sandra and Dennis Roberts, and Ruby Carter. Chisholm instructed Odegaard and Hocking to select a fifth employee for layoff, and Respondent picked Bob Olsen. Later, Hocking and Odegaard persuaded Chisholm not to include Dennis Roberts. At this point in his testimony Hocking's memory failed quite suddenly, and he could remember nothing further, in response to counsel for the General Counsel's questions, about Chisholm's reasons for selecting the four laid-off employees. From carefully listening to his testimony and observing his demeanor, I can only conclude that for some reason Hocking was very uncomfortable at being called as a witness for the General Counsel and was afraid of displeasing his former Employer. In my view, however, this factor is an insufficient basis on which to discredit his earlier testimony supporting that of the alleged discriminatees, and. therefore, since contradictory testimony is absent, he is credited.

Since there is a total absence of evidence that Roberts' selection for layoff was motivated by deficient production, I find this reason, advanced by Respondent, to be false. Since no other reason has been advanced or proven by Respondent with respect to Roberts, the General Counsel's evidence stands unrefuted. With respect to Johnson and Carter, Respondent has failed to come forward with evidence to prove, under the circumstances presented, that Johnson and Carter would have been discharged for excessive absenteeism. Instead, the evidence considered as a whole clearly shows that Company President Alex Chisholm seized upon Johnson's and Carter's absentee records as a pretext for eliminating employee activists from Respondent's plant. I find and conclude that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act when it laid off Jacqueline Johnson, Sandra Roberts, and Ruby Carter.

Conclusions of Law

1. Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. By laying off Jackie Johnson on October 23, and Ruby Carter and Sandra Roberts on October 24, and by telling employees that they would not be recalled because they engaged in protected concerted activities, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

The Remedy

Having found that Respondent has engaged in and is engaging in certain unfair labor practices, I find it necessary to order that Respondent cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

Having discriminatorily laid off Jackie Johnson, Ruby Carter, and Sandra Roberts, I find it necessary to order that Respondent offer them immediate and full reinstatement with backpay computed on a quarterly basis, plus interest as prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Company, 90 NLRB 289 (1950), and Florida Steel Corporation, 231 NLRB 651 (1977).[5]

I shall also order Respondent to post an appropriate notice encompassing all violations found to have occurred.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact, conclusions of law, and the entire record, and pursuant to Section 10(c) of the Act, I hereby issue the following recommended:

ORDER[6]

The Respondent, L & M Radiator, Inc., Hibbing, Minnesota, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Laying off or otherwise discriminating against Jackie Johnson, Ruby Carter, Sandra Roberts, or any other employee for the purpose of discouraging employees from engaging in protected concerted activities for their mutual aid or protection.

(b) Threatening employees that they will not be recalled to employment from layoff because they engaged in protected concerted activities with other employees for their mutual aid or protection.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights to self-organization, to form, join, or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in other protected concerted activities for the purposes of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection, or to refrain from any and all such activities, except to the extent that such right may be affected by an agreement requiring membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment, as authorized in Section 8(a)(3) of the Act, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Offer Jackie Johnson, Ruby Carter, and Sandra Roberts immediate and full reinstatement to their former positions or, if such positions no longer exist, to a substantially equivalent position, without prejudice to their seniority or other rights and privileges, and make them whole for any loss of earnings, in the manner set forth in the section of this Decision entitled "The Remedy."

[5] See, generally, Isis Plumbing & Heating Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

[6] In the event no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Rules and Regulations of the National Labor Relations Board, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order herein shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules and Regulations, be adopted by the Board and become its findings, conclusions, and Order, and all objections thereto shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

(b) Preserve and, upon request, make available to the Board or its agents, for examination and copying, all payroll records and reports, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(c) Post at its facility at Hibbing, Minnesota, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[7] Copies of the notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 18, after being signed by an authorized representative of Respondent, shall be posted by Respondent immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(d) Notify the Regional Director for Region 18, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps Respondent has taken to comply herewith.

[7] In the event that this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

Browning-Ferris Industries of Pennsylvania, Inc. and Edward J. McDeavitt. Case 6-CA-13801

November 2, 1981

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On August 12, 1981, Administrative Law Judge William A. Gershuny issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, the Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the General Counsel filed an answering brief in opposition to Respondent's exceptions to the Administrative Law Judge's Decision.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions[2] of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge and hereby orders that the Respondent, Browning-Ferris Industries of Pennsylvania, Inc., Carnegie, Pennsylvania, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the said recommended Order, except that the attached notice is substituted for that of the Administrative Law Judge.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

After a hearing at which all sides had an opportunity to present evidence and state their positions, the National Labor Relations Board found that we have violated the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, and has ordered us to post this notice.

WE WILL NOT interfere with, restrain, and coerce employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them under the Act, by discharging them or barring them from our premises or causing their discharge or debarment.

WE WILL make whole Edward McDeavitt, Charles Tully, and Edward Pontius for any loss of earnings they may have suffered as a result of our unlawful conduct of August 24, 1980, with interest.

WE WILL offer Edward McDeavitt, Charles Tully, and Edward Pontius reinstatement to their former or substantially equivalent positions either independently or jointly with one of our brokers or contractors, that employer willing. In the event jobs are not available, we will place these employees on a preferential hiring list at our refuse operations where we employ drivers.

WE WILL give written notice to our trucking brokers and contractors that we have no objection to the employment of these employees or their presence on our premises.

BROWNING-FERRIS INDUSTRIES OF PENNSYLVANIA, INC.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

WILLIAM A. GERSHUNY, Administrative Law Judge: A hearing was held on June 1-2, 1981, in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, on complaint issued October 28, 1980, alleging a violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. At issue is (1) whether Respondent, a refuse contractor with the City of Pittsburgh, is a joint employer of drivers employed by independent brokers to operate broker-owned tractors used to haul Respondent's refuse trailers; and (2) whether Respondent discharged or caused to be discharged such drivers in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

Upon the entire record, including my observation of witness demeanor, I hereby make the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

I. JURISDICTION

The complaint alleges, Respondent admits, and I find that Respondent, engaged in the hauling of refuse with annual interstate shipments in excess of $50,000, is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of the Act.

II. UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICE

Except as specifically discussed below, the relevant facts are not in dispute.

[1] The Respondent has excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Administrative Law Judge. It is the Board's established policy not to overrule an administrative law judge's resolutions with respect to credibility unless the clear preponderance of all of the relevant evidence convinces us that the resolutions are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, Inc., 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing his findings.

[2] In accordance with his dissent in Olympic Medical Corporation, 250 NLRB 146 (1980), Member Jenkins would award interest on the backpay due based on the formula set forth therein.

A. Relationship Between Respondent and Drivers

Respondent contracts with the city of Pittsburgh to operate a refuse transfer site to which city trucks haul collected refuse, after which it compacts the refuse and hauls it to a landfill area. By law, refuse must be transported to the landfill area within 24 hours. Respondent's failure to comply subjects it to fine and cancellation of the contract. The transfer site is owned by the city, but compaction equipment is owned by Respondent and operated by its employees, who are members of a Teamsters local.

Respondent contracts with independent truckers, commonly referred to in the trade as "brokers" to furnish all tractors and all drivers to haul Respondent's trailers between the transfer station and the landfill area. Pursuant to oral agreements, brokers are compensated on a per load basis, with Respondent additionally providing coveralls for the drivers and coverage under its group medical plan for one driver per tractor. The decision as to which driver receives the coverage is made by the broker. Brokers are required to carry liability insurance and are liable for safety violations related to their tractors. The agreements are terminable at will by either party.

None of the tractors bears any broker identification. The trailers, and many of the coveralls provided by Respondent both to the drivers and to some of its own employees, bear Respondent's logo. The brokers repair their own trucks and purchase them with no financial assistance from Respondent.

Respondent, by posted notice at the transfer station, establishes the starting times, i.e., two shifts beginning at 6 a.m. and 6 p.m., 6 days a week. Generally, Respondent is concerned only that tractors and drivers are available at the transfer station when there is refuse to be handled. The actual scheduling of drivers is done by the brokers, who frequently drive the tractors themselves without regard to shift.

Because brokers are compensated on a per load basis, load logs are maintained both by Respondent's bin loader and the drivers, on forms provided by Respondent. The logs are turned in to Respondent's office, where they are reconciled and copies provided to the brokers. Respondent issues bimonthly checks to the brokers for their services and the latter, in turn, pay the drivers. Neither Respondent nor the brokers withhold for taxes.

Respondent establishes vehicle speed limits at both the transfer station and landfill area and, because the landfill area can be reached only by two narrow public roads, often specifies which of the two roads is to be used by drivers approaching and leaving the area.

At the transfer station, Respondent directs the trucks to specified loading areas and, at the landfill area, directs the trucks to the specific dumping area.

Because Respondent's equipment is costly, it has a requirement for approval of the drivers furnished by the brokers. That approval consists of on-the-job observation by Respondent. If a driver is incompetent, the broker is notified and the driver not permitted on the premises. Similarly, because of its contractual obligation to haul refuse promptly, Respondent "criticizes" drivers who arrive late at the transfer station or leave early.

Additionally, credible testimony of drivers and brokers, unrefuted by Respondent who did not offer testimony in this regard, indicates that Respondent's transfer plant manager, Moersch, on occasion effectively discharged and rehired drivers:

> (a) In July 1980, when driver Tully went home early with the tractor, Moersch said to him, "you can go home permanently . . . yes, I am firing you" and told the broker he wanted another driver and that Tully "no longer was allowed on the property." Several days later, when Tully asked Respondent's Vice-President Curtis for his job back, Curtis stated there was no reason why he could not get his job back. When Moersch was informed, he told Tully to return to work the following day.
> (c) On another occasion, when broker Anderson, driving his own tractor, left early, Moersch ordered him to report to his office the next day and there told him that neither the owner-operators nor the drivers were boss at the transfer station, but that he, Moersch, was.
> (d) In February 1978, when driver Pontius improperly used a piece of Respondent's equipment to push his tractor and was accused of damaging the equipment, Moersch told broker Dietrich that Pontius was not allowed on the property. Moersch, when asked by Pontius for his job back, told him that he had gotten rid of one of the four bad apples; when told that Respondent's landfill manager Fazio had no objection to Pontius' return as a driver so long as he did not use Respondent's equipment, Moersch told Pontius that it was okay for him to return to work the following Monday.
> (e) And, finally, on Sunday evening, August 24, 1980, Moersch telephoned driver Tully at home, telling him that his truck was "fired" and that he should not report in the following morning with the truck; he telephoned broker Anderson's wife at home, telling her that Respondent did not want the Anderson truck anymore and that "Tully's fired;" and he telephoned broker Buzy at home, telling him that driver McDeavitt was no longer allowed on Company property.

Two other incidents further reflect the relations between Respondent and the drivers. In late August 1980, Vice President Curtis asked a driver to erase obscenities from the side of Respondent's trailer, despite the fact that Respondent had responsibility to clean the trailers. And, also in 1980, Respondent's controller, Bright, under emergency conditions where garbage was strewn from an overloaded trailer at a state police station, asked a driver to assist him and other Respondent employees in the cleanup operation. The driver refused, stating that it was not a part of his job.

I conclude, for reasons set forth below, that, at all relevant times herein, Respondent and the independent trucking brokers were joint employers of those drivers employed by the brokers.[1]

Of course, the fact that the brokers concededly are independent contractors vis-a-vis Respondent is not determinative of the issue as to the relationship between Respondent and the brokers' drivers.

Where, as here, there is no contention that the drivers themselves were independent contractors, Boire v. Greyhound Corp., 376 U.S. 473, 481 (1964), teaches that the real issue, a factual one, is whether a respondent "possessed sufficient control over the work of the employees to qualify as a joint employer with [the actual employer]." Accord: N.L.R.B. v. Jewel Smokeless Coal Corp., 435 F.2d 1270 (4th Cir. 1970).

An examination of the facts in Greyhound, Jewel Smokeless, and other cases is instructive in the application of the joint employer test. In Greyhound, it was subsequently held that respondent was a joint employer with its cleaning contractor, where Greyhound established work schedules, assigned and supervised cleaners and prompted the discharge of one of the cleaners. 368 F.2d 778 (5th Cir. 1966). In Jewel Smokeless, Respondent, a lessor of coal lands, was determined to be a joint employer of miners employed by independent mining contractors, where respondent gave financial assistance in the purchase of equipment, provided engineering and inspection services, furnished workmen's compensation coverage, and terminated union activity by cutting off electric power to the mine to discourage union activity. Similarly in Hamburg Industries, Fidelity Services, Inc. & Industrial Technical Services, Inc., 193 NLRB 67 (1971), the Board found Respondent to be a joint employer of maintenance repair employees provided by a contractor whose sole business was to provide manpower, where Respondent controlled the scope and quality of the work, scheduled the work, and indirectly controlled wages. And in Mansion House Management Corporation, and Central Parking System of St. Louis, Inc., 195 NLRB 250 (1972), respondent was found liable, as a joint employer, for the discharge of security guards employed by a contractor, where it exercised control and direction over the day-to-day activities of the guards and both its employees and guards wore substantially identical uniforms.

On the other hand, where a respondent's control is a consequence of Federal law and regulation, such as is the case with regulated common carriers, a joint employer determination may not be warranted. N.L.R.B. v. Tri-State Transport Corp., 649 F.2d 993 (4th Cir. 1981). In the present case, however, the brokers were not certified and there is no evidence or contention that Respondent's control over the drivers was mandated by law.

The evidence, as reviewed above, demonstrates beyond doubt that not only did Respondent effectively discharge and rehire the drivers in a number of instances, it also treated the drivers as its own employees in a number of other respects. In July 1980, Moersch "fired" driver Tully and then rehired him; in 1977, he barred Pontius from the property and later allowed him to return to work; on August 24, 1980, he "fired" McDeavitt and Tully; and on another occasion he told a broker that he, Moersch, and not the brokers or drivers, was the "boss" at the transfer station. Moreover, it is significant that at no time did Respondent attempt to insure safe and dependable driver performance by calling upon the brokers to take corrective action. Moersch in fact considered himself as the drivers' supervisor and, on a day-to-day basis, exercised that authority without regard to (and without objection from) the brokers.

Respondent also held out the drivers as its own employees by providing them with coveralls bearing the company logo and by providing medical insurance to certain of the drivers under its own group plan. And, finally, it established the hours of employment for the drivers, as opposed to simply requiring, under the contract, 24-hour service from the brokers.

B. The Drivers' Concerted Activities

In early August 1980, drivers Tully, McDeavitt, and Pontius talked among themselves and with other drivers about increased wages and benefits. Over the years, numerous conversations with other drivers concerning working conditions had been held. The drivers are not represented by a union. These conversations were informal and occurred while the drivers were waiting around the transfer station and landfill area. While there was no effort to conceal either the fact or the subject matter of the conversations, rarely was there present an employee of Respondent in the vicinity. Even then, noisy machinery was in operation, making it most unlikely that the conversations were overheard.

On Sunday, August 24, 1980, most of the drivers met at Tully's home to discuss a course of action. Agreed upon was an approach to the brokers for increased wages and benefits and, if the brokers were unable to renegotiate their agreements with Respondent, then a direct approach to Respondent "to see if they could do anything for us" by way of increasing broker compensation under the contract. There was no agreement at that time as to whether the drivers would strike.

The brokers were aware of the scheduled meeting, having been informed by the drivers at least 1 week before. Respondent also had prior knowledge of the meeting. Moersch admitted to contoller Bright that he knew "weeks before" that the drivers were talking of meeting and Vice President Curtis told Bright he also knew of the meeting, because the drivers had come to him for "more money" and he had informed them to "see your brokers."

I find that the drivers did engage in protected concerted activity on and prior to August 24, 1980, and that Respondent had actual knowledge of such activities.

C. The Alleged Wrongful Terminations

Within several hours of the drivers' meeting on the afternoon of Sunday, August 24, 1980, Respondent terminated broker Anderson's contract for one truck and reduced broker Buzy's contract from four to three trucks.

[1] At the conclusion of the hearing, counsel for the General Counsel moved to amend the complaint to allege an alternate theory of liability based on Respondent's status as a nonemployer. The motion is granted, but the issue is not addressed in view of the conclusion herein that Respondent is a joint employer.

More specifically, Anderson's two drivers, Tully and Pontius, and Mrs. Anderson were telephoned by Moersch and told that the Anderson truck was "fired" and was not to be brought in the next day because there was no trailer for it to haul. No other reason was given to them for the action. Also that night, Moersch telephoned McDeavitt, one of Buzy's eight drivers, and told him that he was fired and would no longer be permitted on Respondent's property. No reason for the discharge ever was given by Moersch to McDeavitt or broker Buzy.

No other trucks or drivers were affected by Moersch's actions of August 24.

Respondent's controller Bright, the only management witness to testify, stated that, following a demand by the brokers in early August for substantial increases under their agreements, Respondent began negotiating with a new broker for five trucks at the then current per load rate. Other brokers, he said, who were dissatisfied with those rates, could terminate their agreement with Respondent. The new broker, Horse Trucking, contracted with Respondent during the second week of August and, by the end of the month, began operations with three trucks.

Bright testified that Respondent's decisions on August 24, 1980, were made by Operations Manager Pittman and Vice President Curtis and communicated to the affected drivers and brokers by Moersch. The fact that the drivers' meeting occurred only hours before, he stated, was "purely coincidental." Of the four brokers, it was decided to terminate Anderson's contract for one truck, driven by Tully and Pontius, because Respondent was not satisfied with its performance. It was not there when refuse had to be transported and there were outstanding and unsatisfied damage claims against Anderson. Buzy was reduced from four to three trucks because "we had to cut back" in light of a new contract with Horse Trucking. Bright testified that, as a part of the Buzy decision, McDeavitt, one of the "least desirable" of Buzy's "was to go . . . we didn't want him . . . and we asked that when Buzy's truck went down, McDeavitt go with it."

Several days later, when Tully and Anderson asked why the Anderson's truck was fired, Curtis replied "because of obscenities on the side of the trailer" which Tully and Pontius hauled, adding that, in another 4 to 5 months, none of the brokers would be there.

The obscenities referred to consisted of a drawing of Vice President Curtis performing an unnatural sexual act with the brokers and the words, "kill Curtis." While trailers often contained obscenities written by finger in the dust and grime, this obscenity was unique. On Friday, August 22, Curtis had asked Tully and Pontius if they were responsible. Each denied responsibility and Pontius, at Curtis' request, erased the obscenity.

The outstanding damage claims against Anderson consisted of a $560 claim for damage to an out-house and a $500 claim for damage to a gate.

On the basis of the overwhelming record evidence in this case, I find that reasons assigned by Respondent for its August 24 actions are wholly pretextual and that the true reason, and indeed the sole reason, for its termination of one contract and modification of another and its firing of Tully and McDeavitt and its barring of Pontius from company property was to interfere with, thwart, and restrain the exercise by the drivers of their Section 7 right to seek increased wages and benefits. Wright Line, a Division of Wright Line, Inc., 251 NLRB 1083 (1980).

The only drivers affected by Respondent's August 24 actions were the very three who were spearheading the drive for increased wages. Its actions occurred only hours after the drivers' first meeting and only hours before the start of the Monday 6 a.m. starting time. Respondent, despite its purported negotiations with a new contractor, never disclosed either to the other brokers or the drivers that certain cutbacks would be made to make way for the new broker. Bright's testimony as to the new contract was evasive and elusive as to when negotiations had been concluded, the number of trucks to be provided by the new broker and when the broker commenced operations. Accordingly, his testimony cannot be credited. Given the fact that Respondent's contract with the city was subject to cancellation if garbage were permitted to accumulate, it is unlikely that Respondent would have precipitously terminated its existing contracts before the new broker was in operation. In addition, Respondent refused to give any reason on Sunday for its actions; its subsequently advanced reason having to do with the unreliability of the Anderson truck (and its drivers, Tully and Pontius) had not been raised prior to the hearing; its unsatisfied property damage claims against broker Anderson were not of recent vintage and Anderson had not been pressed to satisfy them; the reason stated by Curtis the following day, i.e., obscenities on the trailer, had not been expressed by Moersch and, in any event, Respondent had not indicated it would be a cause for discharge and cancellation of contract; and its decision to bar McDeavitt as the "least desirable" of Buzy's eight drivers is unsupported by any credible evidence that McDeavitt was less reliable and less safe than the other seven drivers.

I conclude that Respondent, in discharging Tully, Pontius, and McDeavitt and/or barring them from the premises on August 24, 1980, violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

III. REMEDY

Counsel for the General Counsel seeks an order requiring Respondent to cease and desist from engaging in the unlawful conduct, to post an appropriate notice and to notify its current brokers that it has no objection to the employment of Tully, Pontius, and McDeavitt. He seeks also an order requiring backpay and interest to run until (a) a broker offers a driver the same or substantially equivalent position, (b) Respondent offers such to the driver, or (c) a driver obtains substantially equivalent employment elsewhere. And, finally, he seeks an order requiring Respondent to offer broker Anderson a new contract, similar to the one terminated on August 24, 1980, for one truck.

Where, as here, a joint employer unlawfully discharges or causes the discharge of an employee it is appropriate to direct reinstatement by Respondent independently or jointly with an existing broker, Jewell Smokeless Coal Corporation, 175 NLRB 57 (1969), or, in the event jobs are not available, to place the employee on a preferential hiring list at its operations where it is an employer of drivers. It is also appropriate to direct that Respondent notify brokers that it has no objection to their employment of the drivers[2] and to direct backpay and interest in accordance with F. W. Woolworth Company, 90 NLRB 289 (1950), Florida Steel Corporation, 231 NLRB 651 (1977), and Isis Plumbing & Heating Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

It is inappropriate, however, to compel restoration of the Anderson contract for a number of reasons. First, Anderson admittedly was at all relevant times an independent contractor. Second, Anderson was not alleged in the complaint to be a discriminatee and was not joined as a party to this proceeding. Third, neither the Act nor its legislative history suggests the existence of Board jurisdiction over the contractual relationship of employers subject to the Act and their independent contractors or the terms of such contracts. Fourth, the original agreements with Anderson and the other brokers were oral and terminable by either party at will. And fifth, restoration of the contract is unnecessary to effectuate the purposes of the Act under the circumstances of this case.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact, conclusions of law and the entire record and, pursuant to Section 10(c) of the Act, I hereby issue the following recommended:

ORDER[3]

The Respondent, Browning-Ferris Industries of Pennsylvania, Inc., Carnegie, Pennsylvania, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from interfering with, restraining, and coercing employees in the exercise of their rights under Section 7 of the Act, by discharging them or barring them from the premises or causing their discharge or debarment.

2. Take the following affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Make whole Edward McDeavitt, Charles Tully, and Edward Pontius for any loss of earnings they may have suffered by reason of Respondent's unlawful activities, to be determined and computed in the manner set forth in the Decision and Order and to run until (a) the same or substantially equivalent position is offered them by Respondent or one of its brokers or contractors or (b) a driver obtains substantially equivalent employment elsewhere.

(b) Offer the above-named employees reinstatement to their former or substantially equivalent positions either independently or jointly with one of its brokers or contractors, that employer willing. In the event jobs are not available, Respondent shall place those employees on a preferential hiring list at its refuse operations where it is an employer of drivers.

(c) Give written notice to its trucking brokers and contractors that it has no objection to the employment of the above-named employees or their presence on Respondent's promises.

(d) Post at its principal office and at its offices at the refuse transfer station and the landfill area involved in this case copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[4] Copies of said notice on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 6, shall, after having been signed by Respondent's representative, be posted by Respondent immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered with other material.

(e) Notify the Regional Director for Region 6, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps the Respondent has taken to comply herewith.

[2] Indeed, Pontius already has been employed by another of Respondent's brokers. For this reason, Respondent's contention that Tully and Pontius, as drivers of the trailer with the obscenities written on its side, are not entitled to reinstatement is without merit. Respondent, by its actions, has announced that their reinstatement would not be inconsistent with a current employer-employee relationship.

[3] In the event no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Rules and Regulations of the National Labor Relations Board the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order herein shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules and Regulations, be adopted by the Board and become its findings, conclusions, and Order, and all objections thereto shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[4] In the event that this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing and Order of the National Labor Relations Board.

November 3, 1981

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On April 28, 1978, the National Labor Relations Board issued its Decision on Review in the underlying representation case in this proceeding[1] in which it found that a contract between Respondent and Bob's Employees' Association (the Association) was not a bar to the petition filed by the Charging Party (the Union) because it contained a "members only" provision, and because the petition was filed in a timely fashion according to the contract's effective date appearing on the cover page of the contract distributed to employees.

On May 9, 1978, the impounded ballots from an election conducted on January 17, 1978, were opened and the tally of ballots revealed that a majority of employees voting in the election had voted for the Union. Accordingly, on May 17, 1978, the Union was certified as the exclusive bargaining representative of the employees in the appropriate unit.

Commencing on or about June 7, 1978, and at all times thereafter, Respondent has refused to bargain collectively with the Union as the exclusive bargaining representative, although the Union has requested and is requesting it to do so. After this refusal to bargain, on September 29, 1978, the Board, on the basis of an 8(a)(5) complaint and the General Counsel's Motion for Summary Judgment, issued an Order compelling Respondent to recognize and bargain with the Union.[2]

Thereafter, Respondent petitioned the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit to set aside the Board's Order. The General Counsel cross-applied for enforcement of the same Order. On July 28, 1980, the court denied enforcement of the bargaining order and remanded the case to the Board for further consideration.[3] The court found that it was unable properly to review the Board's finding that Respondent was "estopped" to deny the election petition was timely filed because the Board had not specifically indicated whether its estoppel rationale was based on the theory of equitable estoppel or instead was "a new exception" to the contract-bar rules "based upon some other principle." The court also concluded that the Board had departed from its own precedent by considering extrinsic evidence in construing the meaning of the alleged "members only" provision of the contract under consideration here. In addition, the court found it difficult to distinguish the instant case from H. L. Klion, Inc., 148 NLRB 656 (1964), where the Board held that an ambiguous wage increase provision was not an unlawful members-only provision when read in the context of the contract's union-security clause. The court also remanded this portion of the case so that the Board could exclude extrinsic evidence, and consider its precedent, e.g., H. L. Klion, and explain why that precedent should be disregarded if the Board wished to reach a contrary result on this issue.

Thereafter, the Board accepted the court's remand and notified the parties that they could file statements of position with regard to the issues raised by the remand. The Union filed a statement of position.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has reviewed the entire case in light of the court's decision, which we accept as the law of the case, and the statement of position on remand, and we now enter the following findings.

1. In its original Decision the Board found the contract between Respondent and the Association was not a bar to the Union's petition. The contract between Respondent and the Association was apparently effective from December 11, 1974, to December 31, 1977. However, the contract distributed to employees by the Association, with Respondent's knowledge, contained on its cover the dates "January 1, 1975 to December 31, 1977." Thus, the petition filed by the Union on October 13, 1977, was untimely as to the dates in the text of the contract, but timely as to the cover dates. The Board reasoned that these conflicting dates created a situation from which the correct time for filing a petition could not be determined, and stated that Respondent was "estopped" from asserting the contract as a bar to the Union's petition. For the following reasons, we reaffirm that conclusion on remand.

The Board's contract-bar rules are designed to balance the twin goals of employee freedom of choice and industrial stability. For example, contracts may bar a representation petition for up to 3 years.[4] This contract-bar rule provides employee or union petitioners the opportunity to file petitions at reasonable, identifiable times to change or eliminate the employees' bargaining representative if they so desire, and at the same time affords a reasonable period of stability for the contracting parties and employees. The Board has also provided for a "window period" during which petitions may be filed to be timely with respect to an existing contract.[5] And when an employee, or other petitioner, seeks to determine the proper time to file a representation petition, it is axiomatic that one would look first to the existing contract between the employer and the union to determine the appropriate dates for filing such a petition.

Here, Respondent and the Association signed a collective-bargaining agreement, an original of which Respondent locked in its vault. The Association distributed copies of the contract to employees, and Respondent knew of this distribution. However, the cover page of this contract indicated dates which differed from the effective and expiration dates contained in the 29th provision at the end of the contract originally signed.[6] As noted, the Petitioner's representation petition was filed within the appropriate "window period"[7] according to the dates stated on the front of the contract distributed by the Association, but was 2 days late under the same rule according to the effective date on the inside of the contract.

In these circumstances, we believe the contract urged by Respondent as a bar to the petition should not operate to deny its employees the opportunity to vote on union representation. In answer to the court, we note that, in stating in its original Decision that Respondent "should be estopped from asserting contract bar," the Board did not intend to use the formal legal doctrine of "equitable estoppel" in denying Respondent's claim contract bar. Rather, the Board analyzed the factual situation presented by the conflicting dates of the contract which was given to the employees, and concluded that barring the petition in these circumstances would not effectuate the purposes of the Act.

Also in response to the court, we note that the Board in its Decision did not attempt to apply a "new exception" to its contract-bar rules. Rather, it sought to effectuate its rule that, where parties to a contract create a situation in which a petitioner cannot clearly determine the proper time for filing a petition, the ambiguity does not inure to the benefit of the parties but instead means that the petition will not be barred.[8] Thus, as was indicated in Cabrillo Lanes supra, where an employer and a union have created a situation which precludes a clear determination by a potential petitioner of the proper time for filing a new petition, such a situation does not stabilize labor relations. This is the situation that obtains here. Based on this finding the Board in the earlier proceeding concluded that the contract should not operate as a bar. We reaffirm that finding and conclusion here.[9]

2. As to the alleged "members only" provision, we accept as the law of the case the court's finding that extrinsic evidence must be excluded from our consideration of this issue. In light of this holding, and the court's opinion that our previous Decision was inconsistent with Board precedent,[10] we must conclude that the collective-bargaining agreement involved here does not contain an illegal members-only provision. However, we still find the contract is not a bar to the petition, for the reasons stated above.

Accordingly, we affirm our earlier Order requiring Respondent to bargain with the Union[11] and restate it herein.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board hereby orders that the Respondent, Bob's Big Boy Family Restaurants, a Division of Marriott Corporation, Glendale, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Refusing to bargain collectively concerning rates of pay, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment with Local No. 37,

[9] Although we do not rely on the doctrine of equitable estoppel in reaching our result here, we note that the four elements necessary for invoking the doctrine—knowledge, intent, mistaken belief, and reliance—are present here. Thus, as more fully stated above, Respondent knew of the Association's circulation of the misleading document, and had a duty, with the Association, not to create an ambiguous situation or at the very least to attempt to clear up the ambiguity. The affected Union could rely only on the facts presented, which it did, believing that the petition was timely filed.

Finally, in addressing the issue raised by the reviewing court "whether it was the attorney who detrimentally relied upon the printed contract's cover dates in determining when to file the election petition and whether that reliance was reasonable," 625 F.2d at 854, we note that there is nothing in the record to indicate that the attorney saw any contract prior to his filing the petition, or that the attorney did other than ministerially file the petition on instructions of the Union as appears from the face of the petition. In any event, it is not the Union's right per se to file a petition that is at issue. The paramount concern is with employee rights.

[10] H. L. Klion, supra. In that case, the Board found that an ambiguous wage provision of a contract, when read in the context of the union-security provision, was not an unlawful provision.

Bakery & Confectionery Workers International Union of America, AFL–CIO, as the exclusive bargaining representative of its employees in the following appropriate unit:

> All production and maintenance employees employed by Respondent at its facilities located at 830 Sonora Avenue, Glendale, California, and 611 Sonora Avenue, Glendale, California, excluding all other employees, truckdrivers, office clerical employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action which the Board finds will effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Upon request, bargain with the above-named labor organization as the exclusive representative of all employees in the aforesaid appropriate unit with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment, and, if an understanding is reached, embody such understanding in a signed agreement.

(b) Post at its facilities at 830 Sonora Avenue, Glendale, California, and 611 Sonora Avenue, Glendale, California, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[12] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 31, after being duly signed by Respondent's representative, shall be posted by Respondent immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Notify the Regional Director for Region 31, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

MEMBER JENKINS, dissenting:

I concurred in the Board's original Decision on Review in the representation case in this proceeding solely on the basis that the contract between Respondent and the Association included a members-only provision which invalidated it for contract-bar purposes.[13] Like my colleagues I accept as the law of the case the reviewing court's finding that the health benefits provision at issue here is not on its face an invalid members-only clause. However, as before, I cannot agree with the majority's conclusion that, in any event, the dates on the cover of the contract circulated to employees created such confusion that the contract could not operate as a bar to the Union's petition under our contract-bar rules.

It has long been Board law that, when contracts of more than 3 years' duration are involved, the date to measure the appropriate time for filing a petition is from the third anniversary of the start of the contract.[14] The effective date of the contract here—December 11, 1974—can be readily ascertained from the body of the contract. Thus, in clear language embodied in a substantive provision the agreement sets forth the date on which it was signed and its duration. This provision and the date of signing are not buried away in the middle of the contract; rather they appear at the end of the contract near the signature page. It stretches the imagination to believe that anyone receiving a copy of such a contract could not peruse its contents and quickly locate the operative dates.[15] The contract does not create confusion; it is precise in its terms. Accordingly, I would find it to bar the Union's petition, and would dismiss the complaint.[16]

[15] I cannot understand how the majority's explanation about the Union's attorney's involvement in this case justifies a different result. If the attorney read the contract, he should have seen the controlling provision. If information were conveyed to him over the phone or by other method, he should have asked what the date of signing was.

[16] Cabrillo Lanes, supra, extensively relied on by the majority, is factually dissimilar. In Cabrillo Lanes, two contracts, each purportedly agreed to by the employer and the union, were in evidence, but each contained a different termination provision. In such circumstances, the Board properly held that such a difference "created a situation which precludes a clear determination by a potential petitioner of the proper time for filing a new petition." 202 NLRB at 923. Here, we do not have to determine which of two contracts is controlling. Rather, the agreement containing the alleged confusing cover dates contains the same contractual provisions as the one signed by Respondent and the Association. A clear determination as to when to file a petition could be made simply by reading the contract.

BOB'S BIG BOY FAMILY RESTAURANTS, A DIVISION OF MARRIOTT CORPORATION

Marriott In-Flite Services, a Division of Marriott Corporation and International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, AFL-CIO. Case 29-CA-7913

November 3, 1981

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

Upon a charge duly filed by International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, AFL-CIO, hereinafter referred to as the IAM, the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, by the Regional Director for Region 29, issued a complaint and notice of hearing, dated May 16, 1980, against Marriott In-Flite Services, a Division of Marriott Corporation, hereinafter referred to as Respondent. The complaint alleges that Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Sections 8(a)(5) and (1) and 2(6) and (7) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended. Copies of the charge and complaint and notice of hearing were duly served on the parties. Respondent filed an answer to the complaint, denying that it committed any unfair labor practices and setting forth certain affirmative defenses.

Thereafter, the parties entered into a stipulation of facts and jointly petitioned the Board to transfer this proceeding directly to the Board for findings of fact, conclusions of law, and an order. The parties stipulated that the charge, the complaint, and the answer, as well as the transcripts and exhibits in Marriott In-Flite Services, a Division of Marriott Corporation, 258 NLRB No. 99 (1981),[1] constitute the entire record in this case and that no oral testimony is necessary or desired by any of the parties. The parties also waived a hearing before, and the making of findings of fact and conclusions of law by, an administrative law judge, and the issuance of an administrative law judge's decision.

On January 27, 1981, the Board issued its order approving the stipulation and transferring the proceeding to the Board. Thereafter, counsel for the General Counsel filed a brief in support of his position.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the stipulation, including the exhibits, the brief, and the entire record in this proceeding, and hereby makes the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. THE BUSINESS OF RESPONDENT

Respondent has at all times material herein been a Delaware corporation, with its principal office and place of business in Washington, D.C., and with various other places of business in the States of Maryland, New York, Florida, California, and other States. Respondent is, and has been at all times material herein, engaged in the airline catering, hotel, and restaurant service businesses. During the past year, a representative period, in the course and conduct of its business operations, Respondent purchased and caused to be shipped directly from firms located outside the State of New York to its facilities at John F. Kennedy International Airport and LaGuardia Airport, New York City, New York, food products, supplies, and other goods and products valued in excess of $50,000.

The parties have stipulated, and we find, that Respondent is, and has been at all times material herein, an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, AFL-CIO, is, and has been at all times material herein, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

Air Transport Lodge 1894, herein called Lodge 1894, is, and has been at all times material herein, a chartered local of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, AFL-CIO, and is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Facts

On September 27, 1978, the Board certified Lodge 1894 as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of the employees in the following appropriate unit:

> All employees of Respondent, employed at its Commissary, Kitchens and Terminal Facilities, including Shops 344, 370, 371, 374, 375, 376, 377, and 686, servicing airlines operating at John F. Kennedy International Airport and LaGuardia Airport in the Borough of Queens, New York City, New York, excluding all office clerical employees, professional employ> ees, guards and all supervisors as defined in Section 2(11) of the Act.

[1] In that case the Board found, inter alia, that Respondent engaged in bad-faith bargaining, unlawfully implemented certain unilateral changes, and engaged in an unlawful withdrawal of recognition. The Board also found that Respondent did not have a reasonably based good-faith doubt as to Lodge 1894's continued majority status.

At all times since September 27, 1978, Lodge 1894 has been, and is presently, the exclusive collective-bargaining representative for the employees in the above-described unit.[2]

On March 29, 1980, Respondent raised by 11 percent the existing wages of, and granted an additional holiday to, all the employees in the above-described unit, without prior notice to the IAM and Lodge 1894, and without having afforded them an opportunity to negotiate and bargain with Respondent concerning such changes.

B. Contentions of the Parties

The General Counsel contends that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) by unilaterally granting the wage increase and additional holiday discussed above. Respondent contends that it engaged in the above conduct pursuant to its established practice of improving the wage-benefit package of its nonrepresented employees on a yearly basis at each of its facilities in the United States in order to keep its employment standards on a par with area standards. Respondent further contends that it engaged in the alleged unlawful conduct pursuant to its past practice of effectuating a nationwide policy to increase benefits on a yearly basis. Respondent also contends that on October 12, 1979, it withdrew recognition from Lodge 1894 as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of the unit employees, based on Respondent's alleged good-faith doubt that Lodge 1894 represented a majority of the unit employees. Respondent further submits that it continued to withhold recognition from Lodge 1894 based on that good-faith doubt. Respondent did not file a brief in support of its contentions, and neither the IAM nor Lodge 1894 filed briefs.

C. Conclusions

In accordance with our decision in Marriott In-Flite Services, a Division of Marriott Corporation, supra, we find initially that Lodge 1894 has been at all times material herein the exclusive collective-bargaining representative for the employees in the above-described unit. We also find, consistent with that decision, that Respondent did not have a good-faith doubt when it withdrew recognition of Lodge 1894.

Further, we reject Respondent's contention that the wage increase and the additional holiday were granted pursuant to a policy of making annual improvements in wages and benefits in order to keep Respondent's employment standards on a par with area standards. The record discloses no evidence of such a policy.[3] We note further that the alleged policy as set forth in the stipulation applies only to Respondent's "non-represented" employees, and, as we have found, Lodge 1894 has been at all times material herein the collective-bargaining representative of the unit employees.

In view of the foregoing, we find that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) by granting unit employees an 11-percent wage increase and an additional holiday without prior notice to Lodge 1894 and without having afforded Lodge 1894 an opportunity to negotiate and bargain with Respondent concerning such changes.

IV. THE EFFECT OF THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES UPON COMMERCE

The activities of Respondent set forth in section III, above, occurring in connection with its operations described in section I, above, have a close, intimate, and substantial relationship to trade, traffic, and commerce among the several States and tend to lead to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow of commerce.

Upon the basis of the foregoing findings of fact, conclusions, and the entire record, we making the following:

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Marriott In-Flite Services, a Division of Marriott Corporation, is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, AFL-CIO, and Air Transport Lodge 1894, are, and at all times material herein have been, labor organizations within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. All employees of Respondent employed at its Commissary, Kitchens and Terminal Facilities, including Shops 344, 370, 371, 374, 375, 376, 377, and 686, servicing airlines operating at John F. Kennedy International Airport and LaGuardia Airport in the Borough of Queens, New York City, New York, excluding all office clerical employees, professional employees, guards and all supervisors as defined in Section 2(11) of the Act, constitute a unit appropriate for collective bargaining pursuant to Section 9(b) of the Act.

[2] See Marriott In-Flite Services, a Division of Marriott Corporation, supra, where the Board made the same finding.

[3] As noted previously, Respondent did not file a brief in support of its contentions.

4. At all times since September 27, 1978, Air Transport Lodge 1894 has been the exclusive representative of the employees in the above-described unit for the purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(a) of the Act.

5. By granting unit employees an 11-percent wage increase and an additional holiday without prior notice to Lodge 1894 and without having afforded Lodge 1894 an opportunity to negotiate and bargain concerning such changes, Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

6. The aforesaid unfair labor practices are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in and is engaging in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) and (1), we shall order that Respondent cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act. We shall order Respondent to bargain upon request with Lodge 1894 with respect to the unilateral changes concerning the employees' wages and the additional holiday, and embody in a signed agreement any understanding which may be reached.

We shall also order Respondent to cease and desist from in any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board hereby orders that the Respondent, Marriott In-Flite Services, a Division of Marriott Corporation, New York City, New York, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Implementing changes with respect to the wages and holidays of employees without notifying Air Transport Lodge 1894 and without affording Air Transport Lodge 1894 an opportunity to bargain over such changes; provided, however, that nothing in this Order shall be construed to require Respondent to withdraw any increased benefits found herein to have been granted unlawfully.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Upon request, bargain with Air Transport Lodge 1894 as the exclusive representative of the employees in the above-described unit with respect to changes in wages, rates of pay, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment, and embody in a signed agreement any understanding which may be reached.

(b) Post at its New York City, New York, place of business copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[4] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 29, after being duly signed by Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by Respondent immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Notify the Regional Director for Region 29, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps Respondent has taken to comply herewith.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

WE WILL NOT implement changes with respect to the wages and holidays of employees without notifying Air Transport Lodge 1894 and without affording Air Transport Lodge 1894 an opportunity to bargain over such changes. Air Transport Lodge 1894 is the exclusive bargaining representative of the employees in the following appropriate bargaining unit:

> All of our employees employed at our Commissary, Kitchens and Terminal Facilities, including Shops 344, 370, 371, 374, 375, 376, 377, and 686, servicing airlines operating at John F. Kennedy International Airport and LaGuardia Airport in the Borough of Queens, New York City, New York, excluding all office clerical employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL, upon request, bargain collectively in good faith with Air Transport Lodge 1894 as the exclusive representative of the employees in the above-described unit with respect to wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment and, upon request, embody in a signed agreement any final understanding reached by the parties.

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On September 16, 1980, Administrative Law Judge Howard Edelman issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, the General Counsel filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the Respondent filed an answering brief in opposition to exceptions.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and briefs, and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order.

In doing so, we adopt the Administrative Law Judge's finding that employee Van Nostrand was lawfully discharged for her use of profane language on March 16 and 21,[2] and that absent her use of profanity there was no reason for Plant Manager Minton to single her out from the other nine employees who also walked out on March 16 and whose employment Minton continued. As more fully described by the Administrative Law Judge, Van Nostrand directed profanity against the plant manager at the meeting preceding the March 16 walkout and again at the March 21 interview to discuss her continued employment, when after being specifically informed by Minton that he found her earlier use of abusive language objectionable, she replied by repeating the prior profanity.[3] We find this repeated and blatant use of profanity in reply to a supervisor's statement of its objectionability amounted to insubordination. Consequently, the Respondent's response was a lawful exercise of its rights to maintain order and respect. See N.L.R.B. v. Thor Power Tool Company, 351 F.2d 584 (7th Cir. 1965), enfg. 148 NLRB 1379 (1964). Thus, even taking into full consideration the context in which these remarks were made, we find that this intentional insubordination is sufficiently egregious to remove Van Nostrand's activities from any protection they might have otherwise enjoyed.[4] See New Process Gear, Division of Chrysler Corporation, 249 NLRB 1102, 1108-09 (1980); Calmos Combining Co., 184 NLRB 914, 914-915 (1970).[5] Therefore, unlike our dissenting colleague, we agree with the Administrative Law Judge that the Respondent's discharge of Van Nostrand did not violate the Act.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge and hereby orders that the Respondent, Fibracan Corp., Walden, New York, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the said recommended Order, except that the attached notice is substituted for that of the Administrative Law Judge.

MEMBER JENKINS, concurring in part and dissenting in part:

Contrary to my colleagues, I cannot agree with the Administrative Law Judge's findings and conclusions pertaining to the discharge of Lisa Van Nostrand. In all other respects, I am in agreement with my colleagues.

With regard to Van Nostrand, the evidence indicates that on Friday, March 16, 1979, Van Nostrand, along with nine other employees, engaged in

[1] The General Counsel has excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Administrative Law Judge. It is the Board's established policy not to overrule an administrative law judge's resolutions with respect to credibility unless the clear preponderance of all of the relevant evidence convinces us that the resolutions are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, Inc., 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing his findings.

In the absence of exceptions thereto, we adopt, pro forma, the Administrative Law Judge's findings that the March 16 walkout, in protest of the discharge of Shift Supervisor Johnson, was protected concerted activity and his related findings that the 10 suspensions following that walkout and the subsequent discharge of employee La Bar were unlawful because they were based on the employees' participation in the walkout. We note that the conversation between Plant Manager Minton and employee Day in which Minton compared the Respondent's benefits with the benefits of other employers in the area occurred on the workday following Hulzenga's discharge, apparently April 2, and not March 21, as stated by the Administrative Law Judge.

[2] No evidence was presented that profanity is commonly directed at supervisors at Respondent's plant, although the record shows its use is not rare among the employees.

[3] According to Minton's testimony, which the Administrative Law Judge credited, Minton started this interview with Van Nostrand by stating:

> Lisa, we have only two things to discuss. One, if you want your job back, and number two, whether I want to take you back because you embarrassed me in front of the other employees when you used the abusive language that you did.

Van Nostrand, at this point replied, "I still think that you're a rotten son of a bitch." (At the March 16 meeting, she had called Minton an s.o.b. m—f—.)

[4] The cases cited by our colleague are distinguishable in that in none of those cases did the Board find, as we do here, the misconduct sufficiently egregious to deny an employee the protection of the Act.

[5] See, generally, Atlantic Steel Company, 245 NLRB 814, 816 (1979).

protected concerted activities by walking off their jobs to protest the discharge of a supervisor. Thereafter, on Monday, March 19, Plant Manager Minton sent the following mailgram to all employees who walked off the job, including Van Nostrand:

> Due to your refusal to work Friday, March 16, you are hereby suspended for 2 days. If you desire to continue your employment, come in to see me Wednesday [March 21] between 8:00 a.m. and 4:00 p.m. to discuss your employment . . . . If you do not contact me by Wednesday, I will consider you terminated.

It is undisputed that the 2-day suspension of these employees, including Van Nostrand, was attributable solely to their protected walkout and that the Employer's imposition of discipline based on such conduct violated the Act. The evidence further reveals that on March 21, in response to Minton's mailgram, the aforementioned employees assembled at the Employer's premises and were interviewed separately by Minton in his office. Minton commenced his interview with Van Nostrand by stating to her that there were only two things to discuss: one, whether she wanted her job back, and two, whether he wanted to take her back. Minton then told Van Nostrand that he had been embarrassed by her profanity directed toward him at a meeting which Minton had attended with Van Nostrand and other employees on March 16, immediately preceding the walkout. At this point in the interview, Van Nostrand replied, "I still think you're a rotten son of a bitch." Minton then asked Van Nostrand to wait in the breakroom and following his interviews with the remaining employees, who were reinstated, Minton called Van Nostrand back into his office and informed her that he had decided to terminate her because of her use of abusive language.

Based on the foregoing, my colleagues conclude that the Employer's discharge of Van Nostrand was lawful because it was attributable solely to Van Nostrand's use of profanity, including her comments to Minton at the March 21 interview. However, such a finding entirely overlooks the fact that the basis for Van Nostrand's discharge stems from a situation which the Employer itself created by virtue of its commission of unfair labor practices. Thus, the evidence clearly establishes that Van Nostrand was unlawfully suspended for 2 days because of her participation in a protected walkout. Contemporaneous with the implementation of the unlawful suspension, the Employer's March 16 mailgram, again unlawfully, placed Van Nostrand's employment tenure in serious jeopardy and required Van Nostrand affirmatively to contact the Employer in order to avoid being discharged for her protected activity. Thereafter, Van Nostrand appeared at the interview with Minton and was immediately told a relevant matter to be discussed was whether the Employer wanted to take her back. Minton then made reference to Van Nostrand's use of profanity at the March 16 meeting, which immediately preceded the protected walkout, thereby evoking at the interview a profane comment from Van Nostrand.

In these circumstances, in agreement with the General Counsel's exceptions, I find that Minton's March 21 interview with Van Nostrand was integrally related both to Van Nostrand's protected activities pertaining to the walkout and to the Employer's commission of unfair labor practices in connection therewith, and that her use of profanity on March 21 must be viewed in this context and not in isolation. Further, I note particularly that the Employer not only implemented the unlawful 2-day suspension because of Van Nostrand's protected activities, but also, both before and at the outset of the March 21 interview, virtually placed the burden on Van Nostrand to convince the Employer not to discharge her because of those activities. In view of the Employer's repeated violations of Van Nostrand's statutory rights, I find that the Employer is not privileged to base its discharge on Van Nostrand's March 21 outburst. Louisiana Council No. 17, AFSCME, AFL-CIO, 250 NLRB 880, 889 (1980); Max Factor & Co., 239 NLRB 804, 818-819 (1978). Rather, in my view, such a basis for discharge is causally related to Van Nostrand's protected activities in walking off the job, and to the unlawful conduct of Minton, both at the time of Van Nostrand's suspension and at the later interview. Accordingly, I would find that the Employer's discharge of Van Nostrand was attributable to her exercise of protected concerted activities, and would further find that, inasmuch as Van Nostrand's March 21 outburst occurred in the context of the Employer's own unfair labor practices, her comments to Minton, while not to be condoned, are not so serious as to remove her activities from the protection of the Act. United States Postal Service, 250 NLRB 4 (1980). Therefore, I would find that Van Nostrand's discharge violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. J. P. Hamer Lumber Company, 241 NLRB 613 (1979).

WE WILL NOT suspend or terminate employees or in any other manner discriminate against them with regard to their hire or tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment because they engage in activities protected under Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL NOT create the impression of surveillance of the union activities of our employees.

WE WILL NOT threaten our employees with discharge if they join Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union, AFL–CIO, CLC, Hudson Valley Area Joint Board, herein called the Union, or any other labor organization or if they engage in other union activities.

WE WILL NOT interrogate our employees concerning their activities on behalf of the Union, or any other labor organization.

WE WILL NOT threaten our employees to reduce employee benefits and withhold wage increases because of their membership in or activities on behalf of the Union or any other labor organization.

WE WILL NOT threaten our employees to close our plant if they select the Union or any other labor organization to represent them.

WE WILL NOT in any other manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them under Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL make whole Lisa Van Nostrand, Alice Hulzenga, Carol Thompson, Marie La Bar, Alice Lubitz, Lori Day, Roberta Lubitz, Cynthia Ciatto, Patty Williams, and Ann Hornbeck for their lost earnings, plus interest.

WE WILL offer Marie La Bar immediate and full reinstatement to her former job or, if her job no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position without prejudice to her seniority or other rights and privileges previously enjoyed, and WE WILL make her whole for her lost earnings, plus interest.

FIBRACAN CORP.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

HOWARD EDELMAN, Administrative Law Judge: This case was heard before me on December 10 through 13, 20, and 21, 1979, and on January 9 through 11, and 22, 1980, in Newburgh, New York. The consolidated complaint in the above-captioned cases issued on May 25, 1979, on charges filed on April 9 and 13, 1979, by Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union, AFL–CIO, Hudson Valley Area Joint Board, herein called the Union.

The complaint alleges, inter alia, that Fibracan Corporation, herein called Respondent or the Company, violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the National Labor Relations Act, herein called the Act, by suspending and discharging employees for engaging in protected concerted activities, and interrogating and threatening employees, in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, and discharging employees because of their membership in or activities on behalf of the Union in violation of Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

Briefs were filed by counsel for the General Counsel and counsel for Respondent. Upon consideration of the entire record, the briefs, and my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, I make the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. THE BUSINESS OF RESPONDENT

Respondent is a New York corporation with its principal office and place of business located in Walden, New York, where it is engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of paper cups and related products. During the past year, Respondent sold and shipped from its Walden, New York, facility products valued in excess of $50,000 directly to points located outside the State of New York.

The complaint alleges, Respondent's answer admits, and I find that Respondent is, and has been at all times material, an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

The complaint alleges, Respondent's answer admits, and I find that Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union, AFL–CIO, Hudson Valley Area Joint Board is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.[1]

III. CONCLUDING FINDINGS

Background

Respondent employs approximately 50 employees at its Walden, New York, location of which approximately 40 employees are classified as production employees. None of the employees employed by Respondent are represented by the Union or any other labor organization.

Respondent operates three production shifts from Monday through Friday. The shift hours are 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., 4 p.m. to 12 midnight, and 12 midnight to 8 a.m. Each shift is supervised by a shift supervisor, who is admittedly a supervisor within the meaning of the Act. The shifts, with the supervisors, are rotated every 2 weeks. The shift supervisors report directly to the plant manager who is in overall charge of the plant. The plant manager reports directly to Edgar DeLusa, president at Respondent's Canadian facility (the parent company).

The production employees are generally classified as packers and machine operators.

Respondent commenced operation sometime during the summer of 1978. Lawrence Minton, Respondent's plant manager since March 5, 1979, concedes that upon his assumption of the position of plant manager he observed a number of safety problems that existed and required correction. Among the problems he observed were the stacking of large rolls of bottom stock on end which tended to increase the risk of falling and causing injury, smoking was permitted in production areas, there was an inadequate number of fire extinguishers in the plant, there were no protective guards on the head rimming area of the cup machines, there were no see through plexiglass shields over the metering gears of the cup machines, the waxers were operating at an unnecessarily high temperature which resulted in waxfires, the 6-foot stiller machine was not provided with a protective guard, there was no spring loaded shield to enclose the cup oven opening of the patio waxer, there was no light signals to indicate whether the machines were running, there was a shortage of first aid kits, there was oil and excessive wax buildup on the production floor, and many other safety problems. As a result of these safety problems, a number of employees suffered a variety of injuries, some of them serious.

Minton, as set forth above, became plant manager on March 5, 1979, succeeding Sam Faulls who stayed on in a transitionary consulting capacity. At the time Minton became the plant manager, the shift supervisors were Michael Johnson, Gerald Shafer, and James Bruyn.

Michael Johnson was extremely popular with the employees on his shift. He was an excellent mechanic who had been employed by Paper Machine Company (PMC), the company who had manufactured Respondent's cup machines, immediately prior to his employment with Respondent. He would maintain and repair the machinery for his shift. He would move heavy paper rolls for the employees and take them to the employees' machines.[2] Johnson would train new employees, instruct the employees as to first aid, and run and clean the machines when the shift was short handed. In addition, his shift consistently maintained the highest production. However, he was rather loose in his supervision of employees and permitted them to smoke and take snacks on the production floor by their machines, a questionable safety practice. On March 9, 1979, Johnson wrote a letter to Minton that he showed to the employees on his shift wherein he expressed concern for the safety conditions that existed in the plant and implored Minton to correct these unsafe conditions. As a result of Johnson's ability to repair and maintain the plant machines, his high production records, his loose supervision, and his apparent concern for the employees' safety, the employees under his supervision were devoted to him.

Minton testified that when he replaced Faulls as plant manager, on March 5, 1979, he felt resistance to his supervision from Faulls and Johnson. For example, both Johnson and Faulls opposed different operating techniques established by Minton concerning waxing cups, conveying cups, and removing the cups from the chutes. In addition, Johnson stressed production. Minton felt Johnson sacrificed quality in order to achieve production. Minton wanted to clean up and reorganize the plant which would require Saturday work. Johnson refused to work on Saturdays. According to Minton when he assumed the job of plant manager, he ordered an end to smoking and taking snacks by the machines. He marked off an area on the production floor to be used as the smoking area. Yet, according to Minton, despite his rule concerning smoking, Johnson continued to permit employees under his supervision to smoke by their machines. On March 15, Minton observed Johnson smoking a cigarette while lying under a machine. He called him into his office and spoke to him about it. Johnson said it was his business what he did on his shift. On March 16 Minton decided to discharge Johnson and Faulls because of his feelings that both individuals were resistant to his ideas and because of the problems he was having with Johnson set forth above. Minton notified Faulls and Johnson of his decision on March 16 around 8 a.m.

The March 16 Walkout

When Johnson left Minton's office following notification of his discharge, he met with Lisa Van Nostrand, an employee on his shift. He told Van Nostrand of his discharge. Van Nostrand then called a number of employees on Johnson's shift to tell them that Johnson was discharged. Among the employees called by Van Nostrand was Alice Hulzenga, who also proceeded to call a number of employees on Johnson's shift and inform them of his discharge. During these phone calls, the employees decided they would meet with Minton prior to the start of their shift at midnight to protest Johnson's discharge. There is some question as to whether they intended to walk out in protest of Johnson's discharge, whatever the result of their proposed meeting with Minton, or whether they would meet with Minton, listen to what he had to say, and then decide what if any action to take. In either event, I do not find it material to the decision of this case.

At 11:45 p.m., all the employees on the Johnson shift, except for Clara Miller and Brenda McGinnes met in the break room. Also present from another shift were Linda Sanservire, Alice Hulzenga's sister, Debbie Wieczurak, and Eileen Loertsher, an employee on Johnson's shift who was out on disability at the time. The employees on the Johnson shift punched their timecards in at 11:45 p.m. but met in the break room rather than proceeding to work.

Minton testified that around 11:30–11:45 he arrived at the break room with Greg Jenks, Johnson's replacement. As he and Jenks entered the room, Van Nostrand screamed at him, "Why did you fire Mike you son of a bitch mother fucker?" According to Minton, Van Nostrand was very upset throughout the meeting. It was obvious to him she had been crying. She kept repeating over and over, "What am I going to do, I can't find Mike [Johnson]."[3] Minton informed the employees that he had discharged Johnson and Faulls and that Greg Jenks would be their new supervisor. Hulzenga then protested that Jenks was not qualified. Minton disputed this and proceeded to set forth Jenks' experience.

[2] Most of the production employees were female employees. Johnson's shift was an all female shift.

The General Counsel's witnesses, Van Nostrand, Hulzenga, Sanservire, and La Bar, testified in substance that the employees, particularly Van Nostrand and Hulzenga, pointed out to Minton that, with Johnson gone, their working conditions would be less safe since Johnson was an excellent mechanic who was able to maintain the machinery in a safe condition and was additionally sincerely concerned with safety conditions in the plant. The employees also pointed out that Johnson's shift had the top shift production in the plant and implied that production would drop as a result of Johnson's termination. Minton's testimony essentially corroborates that of the General Counsel's witnesses. In this connection, Minton testified that a number of employees asked him, "How are we going to work safely with Greg [Jenks]," and "we had top production; what are we going to do without Mike?" Other employees pointed out that Johnson was an excellent mechanic and, without him to maintain the machines, their productivity would go down. In this connection Minton testified as follows:

> JUDGE EDELMAN: Was the subject of safety conditions discussed at all during this meeting?
> MINTON: Safety conditions were only discussed in respect that its going to be less safe with Mike (Johnson) not out there.
> JUDGE EDELMAN: Who said that?
> MINTON: Generally all of them . . . .

In view of the testimony of the General Counsel's witnesses and the candid admissions of Minton, I find that the purpose and thrust of this meeting was to protest the discharge of Johnson because the employees believed his discharge would have an adverse affect on their safety conditions and on their production.

The meeting was by all accounts a volatile meeting; tensions were high and voices raised. The meeting lasted about a half hour. It ended when the employees walked out. According to Minton, the employees stated they were leaving because Johnson was fired. All shift employees scheduled to work that night except for Anna Munderville refused to report to work and left the plant.[4]

The only significant issue in dispute in connection with what took place during this meeting is the abusive and profane language attributed to Van Nostrand by Minton set forth and described above.

Supervisor Greg Jenks, Respondent's witness, generally corroborated Minton's testimony concerning Van Nostrand's profane statements directed to Minton. Van Nostrand denied using such language and asserted that at all times during this meeting she treated Minton "with respect."

For reasons set forth below in the section of this Decision relating to the discharge of Van Nostrand, I credit Minton and Jenks and find that Van Nostrand directed to Minton the obscene and profane language attributed to her by Minton and Jenks.

March 16 was a Friday. On Monday, March 19, Minton sent the following mailgram to all those employees, including Van Nostrand, who had walked out on March 16:

> Due to your refusal to work Friday, March 16, you are hereby suspended for 2 days. If you desire to continue your employment, come in to see me Wednesday [March 21], between 8:00 a.m. and 4:00 p.m. to discuss your employment. Requirements, Greg Jenks will be the new supervisor. If you do not contact me by Wednesday, I will consider you terminated.

The mailgram was signed by Minton.

The evidence, including the admissions of Minton, establishes the employees met with Minton on March 16 for the purpose of protesting the discharge of Supervisor Johnson, because they believed that his discharge would adversely affect their safety conditions and their productivity, which was a factor in their job evaluation. When such meeting failed to achieve Johnson's reinstatement, the employees walked out to further protest his discharge.

The Board has held that a walkout by employees to protest the discharge of a supervisor who they believe has a direct impact on their job interests and on their job performance is protected under Section 7 and that if an employer discharges or suspends these employees for engaging in such walkout he violates Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. Puerto Rico Food Products Corp., Trade Winds Foods Inc. and Island Can Corp., 242 NLRB 899 (1979); Holiday Inn of Henryetta, 198 NLRB 410 (1972); Howard Manufacturing Company, Inc., 227 NLRB 1858 (1977); *F. [3] Throughout the hearing there was considerable testimony that Van Nostrand was pregnant by Johnson and that they were to be married. Van Nostrand denied she was pregnant by Johnson. On the basis of overwhelming testimony by numerous of the General Counsel's and Respondent's witnesses, I conclude that Johnson and Van Nostrand had a close personal relationship. I find it unnecessary to determine whether Van Nostrand was pregnant by Johnson or whether they were to be married.

[4] The following employees scheduled to report to work on the March 16 shift participated in the walkout: Lisa Van Nostrand, Alice Hulzenga, Carol Thompson, Marie La Bar, Alice Lubitz, Lori Day, Roberta Lubitz, Cynthia Ciatto, Patty Williams, and Ann Hornbeck.

Moreover, the evidence set forth above clearly establishes that the employees had reason to believe that Johnson's continued employment would have advanced and improved safety conditions and continued top production. That Respondent had good and sufficient reason to discharge Johnson is immaterial as to whether the employees' walkout to protest his discharge is protected. Puerto Rico Food Products Corp., supra.

There is no question that the employees were suspended because of their walkout. The mailgrams notifying the employees of their suspension for the March 16 walkout conclusively establish the reason for the suspension.

Accordingly, I find that the employees walked out on March 16 to protest the discharge of Supervisor Johnson who they believed improved their safety conditions on the job and achieved top quantity shift production, and that their suspension by Respondent because of such walkout violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

The Discharge of Lisa Van Nostrand

On March 21, around 10 a.m., the employees who had received the mailgrams described above, assembled in the break room. Minton interviewed each employee separately in his office. Van Nostrand was the first employee to be interviewed.

Minton testified he began his interview with Van Nostrand by stating to her that there were only two things to discuss. One, whether she wanted her job back and, two, whether he wanted to take her back. Minton then pointed out that he had been embarrassed by her profanity directed toward him during the March 16 meeting. According to Minton, Van Nostrand replied, "I still think you're a rotten son of a bitch." At this point, Minton told Van Nostrand to wait in the break room because he was going to have to decide whether he wanted to take her back. Van Nostrand then left and waited in the break room with the other employees.

Van Nostrand testified that Minton stated he had two things to discuss with her: whether he wanted her back and whether she wanted to come back. Van Nostrand replied she needed her job and was here for her job. Minton then asked her if she were still seeing Johnson, and she replied she was here about her job and not about Johnson. Minton then told her that he did not feel Respondent could use her any longer. Van Nostrand asked whether she was fired and Minton replied, "No, you're quitting, you quit when you walked out." Van Nostrand then left and returned to the break room. Van Nostrand denies the use of profane language attributed to her by Minton during the March 21 interview. For reasons set forth below, I credit Minton's version of this interview and find that Van Nostrand used the profanity during the March 21 interview attributed to her by Minton.

Minton then interviewed all other employees who had received similar mailgrams. All of these employees with the exception of Van Nostrand were informed by Minton that they could return to work that night.[5]

Following Minton's initial interview with Van Nostrand, he next interviewed Hulzenga. Hulzenga testified that Minton asked her if she wanted her job back and she said she did. Minton then asked her what her problems were and Hulzenga mentioned various problems she believed related to the safety of the plant operation. Minton agreed that there were indeed numerous safety problems in existence but that they would be corrected. He informed Hulzenga that from now on the female employees would no longer be required to lift heavy paper rolls. La Bar testified to a similar conversation about safety problems in the plant with Minton during her interview.

Van Nostrand testified that following her initial interview with Minton, she remained in the break room although not specifically instructed to do so by Minton. According to Van Nostrand, following Hulzenga's interview, Hulzenga told her that Minton wanted to speak to her following his interviews with the other employees.

Sandra Simzak, an employee, called by Respondent, testified that she happened to be present in the break room after Van Nostrand completed her initial interview with Minton and that, during a brief conversation with her, Van Nostrand told her that she had called Minton a "stupid fuck."[6]

Minton testified that following his interviews with the remaining employees he called Van Nostrand into his office. At this time, he told her he had decided to terminate her because of her abusive language. Minton testified in this connection as follows:

> Judge Edelman: Do you recall whether you made up your mind that you were going to discharge her at the time she reported to your office on the 21st?
> Minton: No, I hadn't.
> Judge Edelman: Could you pinpoint what she said during the interview which became the deciding factor in your decision to fire her?
> Minton: It was when she called me a rotten son of a bitch (On March 21).

Van Nostrand testified that after Minton had interviewed the remaining employees, Minton summoned her to his office and informed her that he had considered the matter and he did not wish to continue her employ. Van Nostrand asked if she were fired and Minton replied that she had quit.

The discharge of Van Nostrand presents a clear credibility issue. Minton asserts that he was both angered and embarrassed by the profanity directed to him by Van Nostrand during the March 16 meeting. He further asserts that her discharge was triggered by her utterance of similar profanity directed to him during the March 21 interview.

Van Nostrand, on the other hand, denies the profanity attributed to her by Minton and asserts that, at all times during the March 16 meeting and March 21 interview, she treated Minton "with respect." As set forth above, I credit Minton.

[5] The employees who were reinstated on March 21 with the exception of Van Nostrand are set forth above in fn. 4.

[6] Van Nostrand was not called to rebut this testimony.

Minton's testimony in connection with Van Nostrand's use of profanity directed toward him during the March 16 meeting is essentially corroborated by Jenks.

I was very impressed with the demeanor of both Minton and Jenks. Both individuals were consistently responsive to questions put to them on both direct and cross-examination. Minton was particularly candid in his response to questions put to him on cross-examination and frequently made admissions against Respondent's interest. In contrast, I was not impressed with Van Nostrand's demeanor, particularly during cross-examination during which she was extremely hostile and at times argumentative. Additionally, she was often vague and unresponsive.

Further, the testimony of employees called as witnesses by both the General Counsel and Respondent tends to establish that Van Nostrand did utter the profanity attributed to her by Minton and Jenks at the March 16 meeting and by MInton at the March 21 interview. In this regard, the General Counsel's witness, Anne Hornbeck, testified that during the March 16 meeting, Van Nostrand repeatedly used the words "fuck," "shit," and "cocksucker," although Hornbeck was unable to testify whether such profanity was directed at Minton.

Even Hulzenga, the General Counsel's witness and close friend of Van Nostrand, was rather equivocal on this issue. When asked whether Van Nostrand called Minton "a son of a bitch," she testified, "The word was used many times." However, I do not recall whether it came from "Lisa's (Van Nostrand's) mouth."[7]

Respondent's witness, Sandra Simzak, testified that, following Van Nostrand's initial interview with Minton on March 21, she admitted calling Minton a "stupid fuck." This testimony was not rebutted by Van Nostrand.

Additionally, there is evidence that Van Nostrand had directed similar profanity to Sam Faulls, the plant manager prior to Minton. In this regard, Supervisor Jim Bruyn testified that sometime in December 1978, when Van Nostrand was demoted from lead operator to operator by Sam Faulls, the plant manager at the time, he heard Van Nostrand call Faulls a "no good bastard," a "miserable fuck," and a string of similar obscenities. This testimony also was not rebutted by Van Nostrand.

Accordingly, based on the above considerations, I find that Van Nostrand directed the profane language to Minton during the March 16 meeting and during the March 21 interview attributed to her by Minton.

The evidence established that, with the exception of Van Nostrand, Minton reinstated every emoloyee who participated in the walkout on March 16. Minton denies he discharged Van Nostrand because she took part in the walkout on March 16. He contends that he refused to reinstate Van Nostrand on March 21 solely because of the profanity she directed to him during the March 16 meeting and during the March 21 interview.

The evidence establishes that the most outspoken employee during the March 16 meeting that preceded the walkout was Hulzenga. Other outspoken employees included La Bar. Van Nostrand, who was emotionally upset concerning the whereabouts of Johnson with whom she had a strong personal relationship, contributed very little to the discussion centering on the reasons for Johnson's discharge and its affect on the employees, except for vile and profane language she directed to Minton in the presence of other employees. Therefore, absent her use of such profanity, there would be no reason for Minton to single her out and refuse to reinstate her while at the same time reinstating every other employee who took part in the walkout.

Further, Minton's mailgram to all employees, including Van Nostrand, participating in the walkout would appear to have contemplated reinstatement. Had he wished to discharge her for her role in the March 16 walkout he could have sent her an appropriate mailgram or none at all. That Van Nostrand was the only employee not reinstated following the interviews on March 21 suggests that it was something that took place during her interview on March 21, which resulted in her termination rather than her participation in the walkout. In this connection during Hulzenga's and La Bar's interviews, the most outspoken employees during the March 16 meeting, Minton engaged in sincere discussion with them concerning the reasons for the walkout and during these interviews conceded there were safety problems and assured the employees that they would be corrected. These discussions, with the most active participants of the March 16 meeting which led to the walkout coupled with the reinstatement of all employees who participated in the walkout, except for Van Nostrand, lead me to believe that Minton recognized the problems precipitating the walkout and was willing to let bygones be bygones. Accordingly, I do not believe Minton refused to reinstate Van Nostrand because she participated in the walkout. Rather, I conclude that Van Nostrand was discharged solely because of the vile and profane language she directed to Minton on March 16 coupled with similar profanity directed to Minton on March 21. Accordingly, I conclude that Respondent did not violate the Act as alleged by his discharge of Van Nostrand.

Union Organization and Company Knowledge

On March 22, following her discharge, Van Nostrand spoke with her mother and informed her of the events surrounding her discharge. Van Nostrand's mother contacted a friend who in turn contacted the Union. Pursuant to this contact with the Union, Union Manager Robert Redlo telephoned Van Nostrand. Van Nostrand described the March 16 walkout and the unsafe conditions that existed throughout the plant. Redlo explained to Van Nostrand the advantages of union representation and how the Union might be able to help the employees concerning working conditions. Van Nostrand agreed to contact those employees who might be interested in the Union.

[7] On direct examination Hulzenga denied that Van Nostrand directed any profanity to Minton. The General Counsel's witnesses, La Bar, Day, and Sanservire, also generally denied that Van Nostrand directed any profanity to Minton. However, Sanservire testified that obscenities were freely used through the course of the meeting. Day testified that she was in the back of the room while Minton and Van Nostrand were in front and it was hard to hear what was going on because everyone was talking at once. Neither Hulzenga nor La Bar impressed me as a credible witness. Their credibility is discussed below in connection with Hulzenga's discharge.

On March 23, Van Nostrand contacted Hulzenga at home and asked her if she would be interested in trying to organize the employees.

In order to advertise a planned union meeting scheduled for April 1, Van Nostrand prepared a written notice entitled the "Pajama Game." The notice set forth that a union meeting would be held on April 1 at the nearby Unitarian Meeting House.

On March 26, Van Nostrand gave Hulzenga a packet of pajama game leaflets and asked her to distribute them among the employees.

On or about March 27, Hulzenga gave a number of pajama game leaflets to an employee on one of the other shifts and asked her to pass them out. Hulzenga also gave La Bar some of the leaflets to distribute. Hulzenga then distributed leaflets to employees in the break room prior to the start of their shift. La Bar additionally distributed some leaflets during her shift hours. There is no evidence that Minton or any supervisory employees observed Hulzenga or La Bar distributing these leaflets. Neither Minton nor any supervisor spoke to La Bar or Hulzenga about the Union.

On March 28, Neil Bolsten, an employee, asked his shift supervisor, Jim Bruyn, if he were going to Lisa's (Van Nostrand's) pajama party. Bruyn asked him what he meant and Bolsten handed him a copy of the pajama game leaflet. Bruyn told Bolsten if he wanted to go to the meeting he should go.

Later on the same shift, Sandra Simzak, another employee, came over to Bruyn, her supervisor, with a packet of leaflets and told him that Linda Sanservire had given them to her to give out. Bruyn told her not to give them out. Simzak gave them instead to Bruyn.

On March 29, Bruyn gave Minton a copy of the pajama game leaflet. This would appear to be Minton's first knowledge of union organization.

On March 29, Anne Hornbeck was present in Minton's office. Minton and Hornbeck were discussing local schools. Minton, who was new to the area, was trying to find a suitable school in which to enroll his children. During this discussion, Minton mentioned that he was aware that the Union was trying to organize the employees and had scheduled a union meeting for April 1. He then told Hornbeck that he could not stop the Union from trying to get in.

On March 21, Lori Day, an employee, was present in Minton's office. Jenks was also present. Minton had written the words Blue Cross-Blue Shield on a blackboard. Minton told Day that the Company had the best benefits in the area but that if a union wanted to come in she should listen to what they had to say and then make them put it in writing and, if they were willing to put it in writing, he would listen to them.

On April 1, the union meeting was held at the Unitarian Meeting House as scheduled. About 20 employees were present. Union Manager Robert Redlo was present for the Union. Redlo explained the benefits of Union representation and informed the employees present that if they wanted to join the Union they would have to sign union authorization cards. All employees present signed cards at this meeting and returned the signed cards to Redlo. Among the employees who were present and signed cards were Hulzenga, La Bar, and Day. La Bar and Day were given extra cards to distribute to other employees.

On April 4, at 10 a.m., Hulzenga, La Bar, and Van Nostrand met with Redlo outside the plant.

Redlo, accompanied by the three women, then went inside. Redlo asked the receptionist to see Minton. The four individuals waited for Minton to appear. In about 15 minutes Minton appeared with two policemen. Redlo introduced himself to Minton and told Minton his Union represented a majority of employees and requested recognition. Minton asked them to leave and they left. Minton states he summoned the police because of a rumor he had heard about possible union violence.

Interrogation and Threats

Linda Sanservire testified that, on March 29, Supervisor Gerald Shafer asked her to come to his office. When Shafer and Sanservire were alone in Shafer's office, Shafer told her he knew about the scheduled union meeting and that the Company knew who the representatives of the Union were, and that he had a list of those employees planning to attend. Shafer stated he knew Hulzenga and Lisa were behind it. Shafer then stated that any employee involved with the Union would be let go. He asked Sanservire whether she was going to the union meeting because of her sister (Hulzenga). Sanservire said she was going for herself and Shafer asked her not to go. Shafer told Sanservire he had lost a job once because of a union; that unions were no good; that if a union came in the employees could lose a few holidays and raises would not be forthcoming; and that, if necessary, the Company would close the doors.[8]

During his direct examination, Minton denied he authorized or was aware of Shafer's statements to Sanservire.

La Bar testified that, on March 28, she and Supervisor Jenks were discussing the plant generally. It was brought up by one of them that the Company's Canadian plant was unionized. La Bar asked Jenks why the employees could not have a union at this plant; Jenks replied that before a union came in to this plant Respondent would rather close the plant down.[9] Jenks did not deny this statement.

I find the following undenied statements by Supervisors Shafer and Jenks to be attributable to Respondent and violative of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

I find Shafer's statement to Sanservire that he knew about the scheduled union meeting, that he had a list of those employees planning to attend, and that he knew Hulzenga and Lisa (Van Nostrand) were behind it constitutes creating the impression of surveillance. Jarva Incorporated, 235 NLRB 1047 (1978).

I find Shafer's statement to Sanservire that any employees involved with the Union would be let go constitutes an unlawful threat of discharge. Didde-Glaser, Inc., 233 NLRB 765 (1977).

[8] Shafer was not called as a witness by Respondent. He left Respondent's employ in April 1979.

[9] The complaint was amended at the hearing to allege that the statement by Jenks concerning plant closure was a violation of Sec. 8(a)(1).

I find Shafer's questioning of Sanservire as to whether she was going to attend the union meeting constitutes unlawful interrogation. La-Z-Boy Tennessee, 233 NLRB 1255 (1977).

I find Shafer's statement to Sanservire that if the Union came in the employees could lose a few holidays and raises would not be forthcoming constitutes a threat to reduce benefits and withhold raises. Petco Inc., Interstate, 238 NLRB 1297 (1978); Jamaica Towing, Inc., 236 NLRB 1700 (1978).

I find Shafer's statement to Sanservire that if necessary (to keep the Union out) the Company would close its doors and Jenks' statement to La Bar that before a union came in Respondent would rather close the plant down constitutes an unlawful threat to close the plant. Bruce Duncan Co., Inc., 233 NLRB 1243 (1977).

Discharge of Alice Hulzenga

Alice Hulzenga was employed by the Company at the time of her discharge on March 30 as a lead operator. She held this position since December 1978.

On March 29, a broken seam clamp was discovered on the machine that Hulzenga was operating. Minton and Supervisor Jenks were examining the broken seam clamp which appeared to have resulted from a stress fracture. While they were examining the seam clamp Hulzenga stated, "I think someone's trying to sabotage us." Neither Jenks nor Minton suspected sabotage at the time.

On March 30, at 6:30 a.m., Supervisor Jerry Shafer told Minton that Linda Sanservire, Hulzenga's sister, told him (Shafer) the night before that Hulzenga had done something in the plant that would be found out and for which she might go to jail. Shafer told Minton that Sanservire would not divulge what it was Hulzenga had done. Minton told Shafer to submit to him a written memo concerning this conversation. Shafer did so. The memo is dated March 30.[10]

During this same conversation with Minton, Shafer told him that he had found alcohol in the glue barrel, which reduces the efficiency of the glue and Speedy Dry, a substance normally sprinkled on the floor to absorb oil, in the filter of the 16-ounce cup machine. This would cause the machine to stop running. In addition, he told Minton that someone had turned the heat dials on the 12-ounce machine up to maximum levels. This could cause the machine to malfunction. Minton took no action at this point.

On March 30 when Hulzenga reported to work at 8 a.m. she was assigned by Jenks to work the 7- and 9-ounce cup machine. In addition, she was assigned to train a new employee by having him observe her operate these machines.[11]

Sometime during the morning on March 30, the lower ink pan of the 7-ounce machine operated by Hulzenga overflowed. The cup machines have two ink pans, an upper and lower pan. Each pan contains a different color ink. A printer contacts each pan and prints a particular legend on the cup. Jenks corrected the overflow by unkinking the plastic hose connected to the bottom of the ink pan.

Around 1:30 p.m., the top ink pan on the 9-ounce machine being operated by Hulzenga overflowed. This is a more serious overflow than an overflow of the lower ink pan because the ink overflow mixes with the ink of a different color in the bottom pan. As a result the cause of the upper pan overflow has to be corrected and the ink in the lower pan, which is being recycled, has to be changed. In addition, the printing plate and hose attached to the lower ink pan must be cleaned, resulting in considerable downtime for the machine.

When Jenks observed this overflow he at first attempted to clear it by sticking a screwdriver into the hose at the bottom of the pan, thus removing the obstruction. However, this effort was unsuccessful. This hose leads to a container which recycles the ink back to the top of the pan.

At this point, Minton arrived, removed the hose, a 3- to 4-foot section, and took it to a nearby sink where he ran water through it. He discovered the cause of the obstruction to be a small wad of steel wool which he removed. There was no evidence elicited which would dispute Minton's claim that the steel wool in the recycle hose was the cause of the overflow.

According to the testimony of Minton, Jenks, and Supervisor Bruyn, the only possible way a wad of steel wool, sufficient in size to plug the recycle hose, could become lodged in the hose would be for it to be intentionally placed there. A physical examination of the pan and recycle hose supports this testimony. The pan is a flat pan about 1 inch high. Ink enters the pan through a tube over one end of the pan. The ink flows to the height of a bushing located in the center of the pan which protrudes about three-eighths of an inch above the bottom of the pan. The inside diameter of the bushing is about three-fourths of an inch and the inside diameter of the recycle hose below the bushing slightly more than three-fourths of an inch. Minton testified that normally steel wool would not be used for any purpose in the vicinity of the ink pan. Moreover, if a wad of steel wool sufficient in size to plug the hose were to accidently fall into the ink pan it would sink to the bottom of the pan rather than become lodged in the bushing. Hulzenga testified that, shortly before the overflow, she saw employee Bob Kubilius cleaning the printer which is located above the ink pan with steel wool. This testimony appears to be a speculation by Hulzenga that particles of steel wool may have fallen into the pan and clogged the hose accidentally. Kubilius denied that he ever used steel wool to clean the cup machines. However, it is obvious from the physical setup of the pan that, assuming Hulzenga's testimony to be true, particles falling from the printer into the pan would settle to the bottom. Moreover, any particles which might float on the top would flow freely through the bushing and hose. According to Minton, there have been no other instances, either prior to March 30 or subsequent thereto, where an ink pan overflow was caused by a steel wool blockage in the recycle hose.

[10] Shafer left the employ of the Company shortly after March 30. He was not called by the Company to testify. Sanservire denied making such statements to Shafer. I find it unnecessary to determine whether in fact Sanservire made the statements attributed to her by Shafer. I do find that Shafer informed Minton of the statements attributed by Shafer to Sanservire. I make this finding based on Minton's credibility as set forth and discussed above, and on Shafer's memo which was written in his own hand and dated March 30.

[11] Hulzenga denies she was assigned to work the 9-ounce machine. For reasons set forth below, I credit the testimony of Jenks who testified he assigned her to the 9-ounce machine and the testimony of Jenks and Minton who testified that they observed her working both the 7- and 9-ounce machine that day up to around 1:30–2 p.m.

Accordingly, I find that the ink overflow of the top pan was caused by a wad of steel wool forced into the recycle hose. I further find that this was an intentional act.

Around 2 p.m., a few minutes after Minton discovered the steel wool in the recycle hose, he asked Jenks to send Hulzenga into his office. Hulzenga reported to Minton's office several minutes later. Minton showed Hulzenga the wad of steel wool he had removed from the recycle hose of the 9-ounce machine and told her this was the cause of the overflow.

According to Hulzenga, she told Minton that Kubilius was cleaning the printer of the 9-ounce machine with steel wool. Minton replied that he had to let her go. Minton testified that he told Hulzenga that he believed she was responsible for plugging the recycle hose and that he had reason to believe she was responsible for some of the other things that have been going on in the plant over the last couple of days. He did not elaborate on what other things he was referring to.[12]

Minton then told Hulzenga that he had a conversation with Shafer concerning a conversation Shafer had with Sanservire. He did not relate the details of the conversation between Shafer and Sanservire described above. He then told Hulzenga that he was terminating her. Hulzenga stated, "Larry [Minton], I'm not going to argue with you." She then left Minton's office.

After Hulzenga left Minton's office, she went to the plant floor. She informed employees Loertsher and La Bar that she had been terminated. Both Loertsher and La Bar proceeded to shut off their machines and, without obtaining permission, left the plant with Hulzenga. Loertsher and La Bar carpool with Hulzenga. Hulzenga had driven them to work this day. There is no public transportation available and employees use carpools exclusively as a means of transportation to and from work.

Hulzenga denied that she put the wad of steel wool in the recycle hose causing the overflow on the 9-ounce machine. She also denied responsibility for the alcohol in the glue barrel, Speedy Dry in the filter, the changed settings on the heat dials, the broken seam clamp, and the overflow on the 7-ounce machine. I conclude that there is insufficient evidence to establish whether Hulzenga was actually responsible for any of these incidents.

Hulzenga also denied that she was assigned to operate the 9-ounce machine on March 30. She testified that she was assigned only the 7-ounce machine and that Loertsher was assigned to operate the 9-ounce machine. Loertsher and La Bar corroborate this testimony. Hulzenga conceded that she took over operation of the 9-ounce machine on March 30 during Loertsher's morning break and again during her lunch period of one half hour which took place about noon. Jenks, on the other hand, testified that he assigned Hulzenga to the 7- and 9-ounce machines and he and Minton testified that they observed Hulzenga operate the machine at various times throughout the day. For the reasons set forth immediately below, I credit Minton and Jenks.

For the reasons set forth above, I found Minton and Jenks to be credible witnesses. Additionally, Minton and Jenks' testimony is supported by company records. In this connection, Minton and Jenks testified that in a given week whichever employee was assigned to operate the 7-ounce machine would also be assigned to operate the 9-ounce machine. Jenks testified that Hulzenga was assigned to operate the 7- and 9-ounce machines the week of March 30 because they were the oldest machines in the plant and had maintenance problems which required the assignment of the most capable operator to insure that they would run effectively. Respondent's breakdown records support the testimony of Minton and Jenks. They establish that Hulzenga was assigned and operated both machines on March 27 and 29.[13]

The breakdown reports also establish that, on March 30, Hulzenga was assigned to operate the 7-ounce machine. No breakdown report was filled out for the breakdown of the 9-ounce machine.[14]

Hulzenga, on the other hand, was unable to recall who was assigned to work the 9-ounce machine on any other day that week other than March 30, when she alleges Loertsher was assigned to operate the 9-ounce machine, although the breakdown reports filled out by her establish that she operated the 9-ounce machine on March 27 and 29. Further, Hulzenga testified that it was she who made the machine assignments and that, during the week of March 30, only three operators were present including herself and that she assigned one operator to a machine in accordance with the standard procedure. This testimony however is in direct conflict with the breakdown reports for the week of March 30 which establish that she worked both the 7- and 9-ounce machines on March 27 and 29. Moreover, on her direct testimony, Hulzenga placed the crucial breakdown on the 9-ounce machine to have taken place at 10:30 a.m. On rebuttal, she correctly placed the time around 1:30 p.m.

Loertsher testified on rebuttal that she was assigned to and operated the 9-ounce machine on March 30. I found

[12] This is an apparent reference to the broken seam clamp, the alcohol in the glue, Speedy Dry in the filter, the heat dials being set to a maximum level on the 12-ounce machine, and the overflow on the 7-ounce machine.

[13] Breakdown reports are filled out by the employees operating the machine only if the machine breaks down. Apparently there were no breakdowns on either machine on March 28.

[14] I do not find it significant that no breakdown report was submitted for the 9-ounce machine on March 30 since the breakdown which occurred took place immediately prior to Hulzenga's discharge and Loertsher's exit from the plant with La Bar and Hulzenga. It would appear no breakdown report was submitted because whether Hulzenga or Loertsher was operating the 9-ounce machine, both individuals left the plant shortly after the breakdown and there was insufficient time for the operator to prepare such report.

Loertsher to be a totally incredible witness. Throughout her testimony, and especially on cross-examination and on questions that were put to her by me, she avoided eye contact and constantly cast her eyes downward toward her lap. She also answered questions in a very tentative manner. However, the most significant factor in my evaluation of her credibility was her inability to recall any of the details concerning the overflow which precipitated Hulzenga's discharge. When questioned on cross-examination whether she had any problems with the lower pan on the 9-ounce machine around 1:30 p.m., the approximate time of the overflow which immediately preceded Hulzenga's discharge, she could not recall. She did recall that a breakdown took place sometime during the day but could not recall whether the breakdown involved the upper or lower pan or whether the breakdown took place in the morning or shortly before Hulzenga's discharge. Nor did she recall Minton and Jenks coming over to investigate the problem and Minton removing the hose to clean it, nor his discovery of the wad of steel wool as the cause of the overflow. Her inability to recall such unusual events which immediately preceded and precipitated Hulzenga's discharge and occurred on her last day of work for Respondent convinces me most conclusively that her testimony was totally fabricated.[15] Moreover, except for March 30, Loertsher was unable to recall the machines to which she was assigned to operate that week.

In support of Minton's and Jenks' testimony, Loertsher admitted that Hulzenga generally operated both the 7- and 9-ounce machines at the same time.

I do not credit La Bar's testimony that she observed Loertsher operate the 9-ounce machine on March 30. My general impression of La Bar's demeanor was that she was frequently vague and unresponsive to questions put to her on cross-examination. Further her answers on cross-examination were often given in a defiant tone of voice, an indication to me of hostility. Moreover, La Bar gave contradictory testimony in connection with critical issues involved herein. In this regard La Bar initially testified that Loertsher operated the 9-ounce machine during the entire week of March 30. However, this was contradicted by the breakdown reports described above. When this was pointed out to La Bar she subsequently conceded she could not recall which machines were being operated by any employees during the week of March 30, except that she did recall that Hulzenga operated the 7-ounce machine and Loertsher operated the 9-ounce machine on March 30.

Following Hulzenga's discharge, Jenks filled out an employee warning record form. Upon the heading of "Company Remarks," Jenks wrote, "Employee walked off job March 16, 1979. Since returned job performance has been marginal. Day in question (March 30) the printing units on two machines which this operator was responsible for overflowed." This form further indicated that Hulzenga had received a prior warning on March 21 concerning the walkout on March 16. Under the heading "Action to be Taken," Minton filled out, "Employee terminated due to poor work performance." Minton testified that he listed poor work as the reason for Hulzenga's discharge rather than suspected sabotage which he asserts was the actual reason because he did not want the record to reflect such a serious offense explaining, "that's just my inner type thing." He testified that the notation concerning the March 16 walkout and March 21 warning merely reflected prior conduct the Company considered improper. Minton testified the sole reason for Hulzenga's discharge was suspected sabotage.

Upon consideration of all of the evidence, I conclude that Minton discharged Hulzenga because he believed that she had intentionally caused the overflow of the upper ink pan on the 9-ounce cup machine as described above, and may have been responsible for some recent malfunctions, breakdowns, and unusual occurrences described above, rather than because of her participation in the March 16 walkout or her activities on behalf of the Union.

I conclude that Hulzenga's participation in the March 16 walkout was not a factor contributing to her discharge on March 30. In this regard Minton reinstated all employees, including Hulzenga, who participated in the walkout except Van Nostrand who was discharged for cause as set forth and described above. In addition, during Hulzenga's reinstatement interview on March 21, Minton candidly acknowledged existing safety problems and sought Hulzenga's suggestions for correcting them. This interview, as described by Hulzenga's testimony, indicated that Minton wanted to put the walkout behind, let bygones be bygones, and work with the employees toward correcting the existing safety problems. In this spirit he told Hulzenga that from now on female employees would no longer be required to lift heavy paper rolls. I credit Minton's explanation as to why the Company's records contained the notations described above concerning the March 16 walkout and March 21 warning. I also credit Minton's explanation as to why he noted in the Company's records that Hulzenga was discharged for poor work rather than suspected sabotage.

I further conclude that Hulzenga's activities on behalf of the Union was not a factor contributing to her discharge. The evidence establishes that Hulzenga was one of the most active employee union supporters. She distributed "Pajama Game" leaflets to employees, attended the April 1 union meeting, signed a union authorization card, and distributed other cards to employees. Although there was no direct evidence to establish that Minton or other supervisory employees observed such activity, Shafer's statement to Sanservire that he knew that Van Nostrand and Hulzenga were behind the Union is evidence that Shafer at least was aware that Hulzenga was playing an important role in the union organization, although he may not have been aware of her specific activities. If Shafer were aware of Hulzenga's participation, so in all probability was Minton. However, knowledge of union activity standing alone is not sufficient to support an allegation of a discriminatory discharge. There must be sufficient evidence of union hostility or opposition to a union, strong enough so that a conclusion can be drawn that the employer was willing to violate the law by the discharge of an employee, to keep the union out. Manmouth College, 204 NLRB 554 (1973), enfd. sub nom. Weinberg v. Manmouth College, 491 F.2d 752 (3d Cir. 1974); Sahara-Tahoe Corporation, d/b/a Sahara-Tahoe Hotel, 229 NLRB 1094, 1107 (1977).

[15] Loertsher walked out with La Bar immediately following Hulzenga's discharge. She received a suspension for such unauthorized walkout. However, Loertsher never returned to work following her walkout on March 30. The complaint does not allege Loertsher's suspension as a violation of the Act.

The facts of this case fail to establish such hostility or opposition to the Union. Other than a single conversation between Shafer and Sanservire in which Shafer made a number of unlawful statements and a single unlawful statement by Jenks to La Bar, the record is devoid of other evidence of hostility or opposition to the Union. There is no evidence to establish that Respondent was waging an antiunion campaign. To the contrary, the evidence establishes that Minton, the plant manager, who had overall responsibility for the entire operation, displayed a neutral position toward the Union. Such attitude is evidenced by his statement to Hornbeck on March 29 that he could not stop the Union from coming in, and his statement to Day on March 31 that she should listen to the Union and he would listen to the Union. I do not attribute the hostility that may be evidenced by Shafer's and Jenks' unlawful statements to two employees to Minton. I therefore conclude that Minton's hostility or opposition to the Union was not so strong that he would discharge Hulzenga or any other employee in order to keep the Union out.

The evidence leads me to conclude that Minton discharged Hulzenga solely because he believed that she intentionally caused the overflow in the upper ink pan on the 9-ounce machine on March 30 and may have been responsible for other recent malfunctions, breakdowns, and strange occurrences. The evidence establishes that Minton had ample cause for such belief. In this connection, on March 29, a day prior to Hulzenga's discharge Hulzenga told Minton and Jenks who were at the time examining a broken seam clamp on her machine which had apparently resulted from a stress fracture, "I think someone's trying to sabotage us." The following day, at 6:30 a.m., Supervisor Shafer told Minton that Hulzenga's sister, Linda Sanservire, had told him that Hulzenga confided in Sanservire that she had done something in the plant for which she might go to jail. Such statement would reasonably imply sabotage. In addition, Minton was informed at the time about the presence of alcohol in the glue barrel, Speedy Dry in the air filter, and the heat dials being turned up, all of which would appear to be caused by an intentional act. Therefore when the upper ink pan on Hulzenga's machine overflowed several hours following Minton's conversation with Shafer and the cause of such overflow was discovered to be an intentional act, and apparently sabotage, it was certainly not unreasonable for Minton to believe that Hulzenga was responsible for such occurrance as well as the others described above. Under such circumstances, immediate discharge would be expected. Leon Ferenbach, Inc., 213 NLRB 373, 387 (1974).

Accordingly, I conclude that Hulzenga was discharged because Minton believed and had good reason to believe that Hulzenga was guilty of sabotaging the Company's equipment and not because of her participation in the March 16 walkout or because of her membership in, or activities on behalf of, the Union.

Discharge of Marie La Bar

Marie La Bar was first employed by the Company in November 1978. In February 1979, she was promoted to the position of quality control supervisor.[16]

On March 30, at or about 2-2:30 p.m., Hulzenga informed La Bar and Loertsher that she had just been discharged and was going home.

La Bar testified that at or about the same time she saw Minton who told her that he had fired Hulzenga. According to La Bar, she told Minton that she would be leaving because she carpooled with Hulzenga.[17] According to La Bar, Minton told her he understood, but he wanted her to report to work the next (work) day.[18]

Minton denied that he gave La Bar or Loertsher permission to leave. He testified that he came out of his office shortly after he had discharged Hulzenga and observed La Bar and Loertsher leaving. When he asked where they were going, La Bar replied she was leaving.

Jenks, the shift supervisor, testified that, at 2:30 p.m., he observed La Bar and Loertsher leaving the plant. He heard La Bar state, "That's my ride" and observed La Bar and Loertsher get into Hulzenga's car. The shift ended at 4 p.m.

La Bar testified she left work with Hulzenga because she was upset about Hulzenga's discharge and additionally because she had no other way to get home.

On Monday, April 2, neither La Bar nor Loertsher reported to work. La Bar testified that she did not report to work because of Hulzenga's discharge.

On April 2, at 2:14 p.m., Minton sent the following mailgram to Loertsher:

> Due to your refusal to work Friday, March 30, you are hereby suspended for two days. If you desire to continue your employment, come in to see me Wednesday, April 4, between 8:00 a.m. and 4:00 p.m., to discuss your employment requirements. If you do not contact me by Wednesday, I will consider you terminated.

Loertsher never returned to the Company.[19]

On April 2, at 2:22 p.m., Minton sent the following mailgram to La Bar:

> Due to the fact that you walked off the job twice in the last two weeks, once on March 16, and on March 30, you are hereby terminated.

The mailgrams were written out by Jenks pursuant to Minton's instructions on March 30, after La Bar and Loertsher had left. However, Jenks reminded Minton that La Bar and Loertsher depended on Hulzenga for a ride home and Minton agreed to wait until the afternoon of April 2 to see if the employees returned to work before sending the mailgrams.

[16] It was stipulated that La Bar is not a supervisor within the meaning of the Act.

[17] As set forth above, employees traveled to and from work by car because there was no public transportation available. During the week of March 30, Hulzenga, La Bar, and Loertsher drove to work in Hulzenga's car.

[18] March 30 was a Friday; the next workday was Monday, April 2.

[19] As set forth above Loertsher's suspension was not alleged in the complaint, or by counsel for the General Counsel as a violation.

Minton testified that his main reason for discharging La Bar was the fact that she was a leadgirl and was expected to set a proper example for other employees. He testified, "She had walked out and had not even bothered to call Monday morning (April 2), and being an employee of that nature, she was not expendable." However, this testimony contradicted Minton's affidavit which was consistent with his mailgram to La Bar.

The evidence above establishes that, although La Bar and Loertsher left work without permission immediately following Hulzenga's discharge, Minton took no action based on Jenks' advice to Minton that both La Bar and Loertsher depended on Hulzenga for transportation to and from the job, there being no public transportation available. It was only after both individuals failed to report to work on April 2 that mailgrams were sent to the respective invididuals notifying La Bar of her discharge and Loertsher of her suspension. The mailgram to Loertsher notified her she was suspended because of her walkout on March 30. Loertsher, as set forth above, had not participated in the walkout of March 16. The mailgram to La Bar notified her that she was discharged because she had walked out on March 16 and again on March 30. Based on the disparate treatment between Loertsher and La Bar in that Loertsher, unlike La Bar, was merely suspended, rather than being discharged, I conclude that La Bar's discharge resulted at least in part from her participation in the March 16 walkout. In view of this evidence, and his affidavit which contradicts his testimony, I do not credit Minton's explanation that La Bar was discharged rather than being suspended because she was a leadgirl who was not expendable. Moreover, when Minton was asked what the difference was between a lead operator and operator, he replied, "Not a whole lot, primarily as the lead operator she (La Bar) has more experience." In this connection both La Bar and Loertsher earned the same rate of pay.

Counsel for the General Counsel additionally contends that La Bar ceased work and walked out on March 30 in order to protest the unlawful discharge of Hulzenga and that such walkout was protected concerted activity. The Board has held that a walkout to protest the discharge of a fellow employee whether such discharge was lawful or unlawful is protected concerted activity. Auto-Truck Federal Credit Union, 232 NLRB 1024, 1028 (1977). As set forth by the Administrative Law Judge in Auto-Truck Federal Credit Union, supra, "[T]here is nothing of more moment or concern to employees than matters of discharge." However, the evidence does not establish that La Bar and Loertsher left work to protest Hulzenga's discharge. La Bar testified that when she encountered Minton immediately following Hulzenga's discharge, but after Hulzenga informed La Bar of her discharge, she told him she would be leaving with Hulzenga because she carpooled with her. Similarly Jenks testified that following Hulzenga's discharge he observed La Bar and Loertsher leaving the plant and heard La Bar state, "that's my ride" and get into Hulzenga's car. Since there was no public transportation in the area, it was reasonable for Minton and Jenks to believe La Bar's stated reason for leaving. That they did in fact believe this is evidenced by Jenks reminding Minton on the morning of April 2, when he was about to send the mailgram discharging La Bar, that La Bar and Loertsher depended on Hulzenga for transportation. Although La Bar testified that she left March 30 and failed to report to work on April 2 because of Hulzenga's discharge, I find there is no evidence that she communicated this to Minton or Jenks. Assuming that in La Bar's mind she was leaving work to protest Hulzenga's discharge, her statements to Minton and Jenks contradict such state of mind and it is unreasonable to assume that Minton was aware or should have been aware of such asserted reason for her leaving work on March 30 and failing to report for work on April 2. Therefore, I reject the General Counsel's contentions.

However, as I have concluded that La Bar's discharge resulted at least in part because of her participation in the March 16 walkout which I have concluded to be a protected concerted activity, I conclude that her discharge was therefore unlawful and a violation of Section 8(a)(1). Clarklift of Atlanta Inc., 237 NLRB 461, 471 (1978); McGraw Laboratories, a Division of American Hospital Supply Corporation, 206 NLRB 602 (1978).

It was also alleged that La Bar was discharged because of her activities on behalf of the Union. The evidence establishes that La Bar was less active on behalf of the Union than Hulzenga. Further, unlike Hulzenga, there is no evidence that the Company had direct or indirect knowledge of La Bar's union activity. Additionally, as set forth above in connection with Hulzenga's discharge, I am unable to find sufficient union animus to compel a finding that the Company would discharge an employee to keep the Union out. I therefore conclude that La Bar was not discharged because of her membership in or activities on behalf of the Union.

Discharge of Lori Day

Lori Day began work on January 17, 1979, as a packer. She was supervised by Mike Johnson before he was replaced by Jenks. On April 2, during her work shift, Day passed out two union authorization cards to employees who signed them and returned them to Day. There is no evidence that the Company's representatives saw this.

On April 6, at or about 10 a.m., Delora Miller, the quality control supervisor who had replaced La Bar, assigned Day and three other packers the job of scraping the floor.[20] Miller, concededly had the authority to assign such work. Moreover, Day concedes that the floor scraping duties assigned to her by Miller were among the job duties of the packers. Day and the three other packers at first refused to scrape floors. Subsequently, the three packers did scrape the floor but Day continued in her refusal to do so. Day testified she refused to scrape the floor because she felt that Miller's tone of voice when making the job assignment was rude. Miller then told Jenks about Day's refusal to perform the assignment and Jenks summoned Day to his office.

[20] As set forth above, it was stipulated that the quality control supervisor was not a supervisor within the meaning of the Act. The three packers referred to above were Kathy, Jean, and Cindy.

Jenks asked Day what the problem was. Day replied that scraping floors was hard work and employees on other shifts did not scrape floors. Day also complained that Miller had not asked her to scrape the floor in a nice way. Jenks told Day that what employees did on other shifts and how Miller spoke to her were not the issue. He informed Day that he considered scraping floors to be among the job duties of packers and asked Day if she would do the work. Day refused.

Jenks stated he would have to write this up and prepared an employee warning record in Day's presence. Under the heading of "company Remarks," Jenks wrote, "Employee refused an order to scrape wax on the floor around the heaters. When further questioned, she refused a second time. This is considered part of the routine cleaning procedure." Under the heading, "Action to be Taken," Jenks inserted "Referred to plant manager. Termination recommended." This record was signed by Day. Jenks then told Day that as of now she was suspended until he spoke with Minton. Day left the plant and went home.

When Minton returned to the plant later that day, Jenks explained to Minton the details surrounding Day's suspension and Minton told Jenks to do whatever he thought was necessary. Jenks told Minton that she had refused to work and there was no way to overlook it. Minton then authorized Jenks to send a mailgram notifying Day of her discharge.

Day had received a prior written warning for using abusive language to the then-quality control supervisor, La Bar, in March and a prior oral warning for an unauthorized shutdown of her machine.

On the evening of April 6, Day received the following mailgram from Jenks:

> You were suspended for two days on March 19 and 20, for walking off the job on March 16. This is your second offense regarding refusal to work. Therefore, you are terminated as of this date.

Jenks testified repeatedly and I conclude creditably in response to questions put to him by me and on cross-examination that the sole reason for Day's discharge was her continued refusal to perform a work order and that, absent any prior warnings, an employee's outright refusal to perform work assigned would result in termination under any circumstances. He denied that the March 16 walkout was in any way a contributing factor in the decision to discharge Day.

Jenks testified that the mailgram sent to Day merely documented her prior work record and notified her of her discharge.

The evidence described above establishes conclusively that Day flatly refused to perform a work assignment issued to her by Miller, a lead person with authority to issue such assignment. When Miller complained to Jenks about Day's refusal to perform the work assignment given to her, Jenks then spoke with Day concerning her refusal to perform her work assignment and asked her if she would perform the assignment at this time. Day, for the second time flatly refused. Such conduct represents the clearest form of insubordination imaginable. It is hard to conceive that any employer faced with such insubordination would not fire the insubordinate employee on the spot. The evidence establishes this is in effect exactly what Jenks did. In Day's presence he prepared an employee record and under the heading of "Company Remarks" briefly described the insubordination. Under action to be taken he recommended termination. Jenks credibly testified that he did not terminate her on the spot because he was a new supervisor and was not certain he had such authority. It is significant that during his conversation with Day he did not at any time bring up the subject of the March 16 walkout. His action in writing up the report recommending termination took place immediately following Day's second refusal to carry out the work assignment. The recommendation for termination was in short spontaneous, immediately following Day's insubordination. Jenks' subsequent conversation with Minton amounted to no more than MInton ratifying Jenks' recommendation. Significantly, there was no discussion in this conversation of the March 16 walkout. Minton's ratification of Jenks' recommendation to terminate Day was made solely on the basis of the facts surrounding Day's refusal to perform a work assignment as related to him by Jenks. Under these circumstances Jenks' contention that the mailgram notifying Day of her discharge merely set forth her prior work record and that the sole reason for the discharge was her insubordination is believable, and I credit Jenks in this regard.

Additionally, as set forth above, I find that following the walkout Minton was willing to let bygones be bygones. Further, Day was not among the most outspoken employees during the March 16 meeting which preceded the walkout.

For the same reasons set forth in my analysis above, I conclude that the Company's animus toward the Union was insufficient to conclude that it would discharge Day or any other employee in order to keep out the Union. Additionally, the evidence establishes that Day was even less active in connection with the Union than either La Bar or Hulzenga and that the Company had no direct or indirect knowledge of her activities.

Accordingly I conclude that Day was discharged solely because of her insubordination described above and not because of her participation in the March 16 walkout or because of her membership in or activities on behalf of the Union.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. The employees of Respondent who participated in a walkout on March 16, 1979, to protest the discharge of their shift supervisor, Michael Johnson, were engaged in protected concerted activities within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

4. By suspending employees Lisa Van Nostrand, Alice Hulzenga, Carol Thompson, Marie La Bar, Alice Lubitz, Lori Day, Roberta Lubitz, Cynthia Ciatto, Patty Williams, and Ann Hornbeck on March 19, because of their participation in the walkout described above in paragraph 3 of this section of the Decision, Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

5. By creating the impression of surveillance of the union activities of its employees, by threatening employees with discharge if they joined or engaged in union activities, by interrogating employees concerning their activities on behalf of the Union, by threatening to reduce employee benefits and withhold wage increases from employees because of their membership in or activities on behalf of the Union, and by threatening to close the plant if the Union came in, Respondent has violated Section 8(a) (1) of the Act.

6. By discharging its employee, Marie La Bar, on April 2, 1979, because of her participation in the walkout described above in paragraph 3 of this section, Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

7. The aforesaid unfair labor practices described in paragraphs 4, 5, and 6 of this section affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I shall recommend that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the purposes of the Act, including the posting of the notice [omitted from publication] attached to this Decision.

Since I have found that Respondent discriminatorily suspended Lisa Van Nostrand, Alice Hulzenga, Carol Thompson, Marie La Bar, Alice Lubitz. Lori Day, Roberta Lubitz, Cynthia Ciatto, Patty Williams, and Ann Hornbeck, I shall recommend that Respondent make whole all of the above employees, for any loss of earnings they may have suffered from the date of their suspension on March 19 until their reinstatement on March 21.[21]

Since I have found that Respondent discriminatorily discharged Marie La Bar on Arpil 2, 1979, I shall recommend that Respondent be ordered to offer her immediate and full reinstatement to her former job or, if it no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position of employment, without prejudice to her seniority or other rights and privileges, and make her whole for any loss of earnings she may have suffered from the date of her discharge until the date of Respondent's offer of reinstatement.

The backpay for said employees shall be computed in accordance with the formula approved in F. W. Woolworth Company, 90 NLRB 289 (1950), with interest computed in the manner and amount prescribed in Florida Steel Corporation, 231 NLRB 651 (1977).[22]

Upon the foregoing findings of fact and conclusions of law, and upon the entire record, and pursuant to Section 10(c) of the Act, I hereby issue the following recommended:

ORDER[23]

The Respondent, Fibracan Corporation, Walden, New York, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Suspending or terminating employees or in any other manner discriminating against them with regard to their hire or tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment because they engage in activities protected under Section 7 of the Act.

(b) Creating the impression of surveillance of the union activities of its employees.

(c) Threatening its employees with discharge if they join Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union, AFL-CIO, Hudson Valley Area Joint Board, herein called the Union, or any other labor organization or engage in other union activities.

(d) Interrogating its employees concerning their activities on behalf of the Union, or any other labor organization.

(e) Threatening its employees to reduce employee benefits and withhold wage increases because of their membership in or activities on behalf of the Union or any other labor organization.

(f) Threatening its employees to close its plant if they select the Union or any other labor organization to represent them.

(g) In any other manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them under Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Make whole Lisa Van Nostrand, Alice Hulzenga, Carol Thompson, Marie La Bar, Alice Lubitz, Lori Day, Roberta Lubitz, Cynthia Ciatto, Patty Williams, and Ann Hornbeck for their lost earnings in the manner set forth in the Remedy.

(b) Offer Marie La Bar immediate and full reinstatement to her former job or, if her job no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position, without prejudice to her seniority or other rights and privileges, and make her whole for her lost earnings in the manner set forth in the Remedy.

(c) Preserve and, upon request, make available to the Board or its agents, for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this recommended Order.

[21] As set forth above, I have concluded that Van Nostrand was discharged for cause on March 21, 1979.

[23] In the event no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Rules and Regulations of the National Labor Relations Board, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order herein shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules and Regulations, be adopted by the Board and become its findings, conclusions, and Order, and all objections thereto shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

(d) Post at its Walden, New York, plant copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[24] Copies of said notice on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 2, after being duly signed by Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by Respondent immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Notify the Regional Director for Region 2, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps Respondent has taken to comply herewith.

IT IS ALSO ORDERED that the complaint be dismissed insofar as it alleges violations of the Act not specifically found.

[24] In the event that this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On June 15, 1981, Administrative Law Judge Gordon J. Myatt issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions[2] of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order.[3]

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge and hereby orders that the Respondent, Ah Chu Company, San Francisco, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the said recommended Order, except that the attached notice is substituted for that of the Administrative Law Judge.

[1] Respondent has excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Administrative Law Judge. It is the Board's established policy not to overrule an administrative law judge's resolutions with respect to credibility unless the clear preponderance of all of the relevant evidence convinces us that the resolutions are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, Inc., 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing his findings.

[2] We agree with the Administrative Law Judge's finding that a unit limited to sundry department employees at the Mission Street store is appropriate. We do not agree, however, with his rationale, nor do we think that the cases he cited, such as Zim's Foodliner, Inc. d/b/a Zim's IGA Foodliner, et al. v. N.L.R.B., 495 F.2d 1131 (7th Cir.), cert. denied 419 U.S. 838 (1974), enfg. 201 NLRB 449 (1973), are apposite. In those cases, the Board found that a unit limited to a single facility was appropriate when that facility was sold or otherwise separated from a multifacility bargaining unit.

The 1978-81 collective-bargaining agreement between the Union and Volume Merchandise excludes pharmacy employees and sundry department employees from its coverage. The pharmacy employees historically have been represented by Local 648 of the same International Union, and this Local represented those employees when Respondent acquired the lease for the pharmacy department in April 1978. Local 648 initially requested that Respondent recognize it as the bargaining representative of the pharmacy employees, but soon dropped its demand for recognition.

Volume Merchandise purchased the Mission Street store from Don Kurtz, and leased the sundry department to Kurtz in late 1978 or early 1979. (The Administrative Law Judge erroneously stated this date as January 1980.) Volume Merchandise and the Union then entered into the collective-bargaining agreement that specifically excluded the sundry department employees from the bargaining unit, as mentioned above. Instead, these employees became part of the unit located at the Geary Boulevard store, which Kurtz still owned, and were covered by the collective-bargaining agreement between the Union and the Geary Boulevard store. In May 1980, Kurtz sold the lease for the sundry department to Respondent. Both pharmacy employees and sundry department employees at the Mission Street store then worked for Respondent.

In finding that the Mission Street store sundry department employees form an appropriate unit in and of themselves, we rely upon Stroehmann Brothers Company, 252 NLRB 988 (1980), enfd. in an unpublished opinion 108 LRRM 2280 (3d Cir. 1981). In that case, Ward Foods, Inc., the predecessor employer, operated a bakery and distribution facility in which there were two units of employees. One unit consisted of route salesmen, over-the-road drivers, and mechanics, and the other unit contained production, maintenance, and shipping employees. Shortly before it sold the facility, Ward ceased production, laid off its production employees, and operated only as a distribution center. We found that a unit of shipping employees was appropriate essentially because they had been represented separately and apart from the employees in the other bargaining unit, albeit the shipping employees had been part of a larger unit. Here, the sundry department employees too had been part of a larger bargaining unit. They have never been part of a unit that included pharmacy employees. Indeed, the pharmacy employees have always been a unit by themselves, represented by a different local, Local 648. In light of the separate representation of the pharmacy employees on one hand and the sundry department employees on the other, the unit of sundry department employees is appropriate because another union has represented those employees (though in a larger unit), and because "it may reasonably be assumed that, as a result of transitional changes, the employees' desires concerning unionization [have not] likely changed." Id. at 989, citing Mondovi Foods Corporation, 235 NLRB 1080, 1082 (1978).

[3] Member Jenkins would award interest on backpay in accordance with the formula set forth in his partial dissent in Olympic Medical Corporation, 250 NLRB 146 (1980).

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

After a hearing at which all sides had an opportunity to present evidence and state their positions, the National Labor Relations Board found that we have violated the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, and has ordered us to post this notice.

The Act gives employees the following rights:

To engage in self-organization
To form, join, or assist any union
To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice
To engage in activities together for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection
To refrain from the exercise of any or all such activities.

WE WILL NOT discourage membership in Department Store Employees Union, Local 1100, affiliated with United Food and Commercial Workers Union, AFL-CIO, or any other labor organization, by refusing to hire employees who are members of that union, or any other labor organization, and thereby discriminate against employees or applicants for employment in regard to hire and tenure of employment.

WE WILL NOT refuse to recognize and bargain collectively with Local 1100 as the exclusive bargaining representative of our employees in the following appropriate unit:

> All employees performing selling and nonselling work in the sundry department operated at 2558 Mission Street, San Francisco, California; excluding all other employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL recognize and bargain, upon request, with the above-named Union as exclusive bargaining representative of our employees in the unit found appropriate.

WE WILL offer immediate and full employment to Alice Dominici, Lucilla Edison, and Susanna Lopez without prejudice to their seniority or other rights and privileges, discharging if necessary any employees hired since we took over the operation of the sundry department at the Mission Street store, and WE WILL make them whole for any loss of pay, plus interest, they may have suffered as a result of our discrimination against them.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

GORDON J. MYATT, Administrative Law Judge: Upon a charge filed by Department Store Employees Union, Local 1100, affiliated with United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, AFL-CIO (hereafter called the Union),[1] on June 13, 1980, and an amended charge filed on July 30 against Ah Chu Company (hereafter called the Respondent), the Regional Director for Region 20 issued a complaint and notice of hearing on August 29.[2] In essence, the complaint alleges that the Respondent purchased the lease of the sundry department of a discount store operation from an owner whose employees were represented by the Union and covered by a collective-bargaining agreement. Further, that after the purchase, the Respondent unlawfully refused to hire the employees of the previous owner and unlawfully refused to recognize the Union as the exclusive bargaining representative of the employees in the leased departmeut. In addition, it is asserted that the Respondent refused to adhere to the terms and conditions of the existing collective-bargaining agreement covering these unit employees. The complaint asserts that by this conduct the Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (5) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, 29 U.S.C. 151, et seq. (hereafter called the Act). The Respondent filed an answer which admits certain allegations of the complaint, denies others, and specifically denies the commission of any unfair labor practices.

A hearing was held in this matter on February 3, 1981, in San Francisco, California. All parties were represented by counsel and afforded full opportunity to examine and cross-examine witnesses and present material and relevant evidence on the issues. Briefs were submitted by all parties and have been duly considered.

On the entire record in this case, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor while testifying, I make the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

Ah Chu Company, Respondent herein, is a sole proprietorship with its office and place of business located in San Francisco, California. The Respondent is an enterprise engaged in the sale of retail drugs and sundry products. During the calendar year ending December 31, 1979, the Respondent, in the course of its business operations, derived gross revenues in excess of $500,000. During a similar period, the Respondent purchased and received at its San Francisco facility products, goods, and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly from points outside the State of California. Based on the above, I find that the Respondent is, and has been at all times material herein, an employer engaged in commerce and in a business affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

---

[1] The name of the Union appears as amended at the hearing.

[2] Unless otherwise indicated, all dates herein refer to the year 1980.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

Department Store Employees Union, Local 1100, affiliated with United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, AFL-CIO, is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Background Facts

The discount store in which the Respondent purchased the lease operation of the sundry department was one of three such stores in San Francisco. One store was located on Alemany Boulevard, another on Mission Street, and the third on Geary Boulevard. These stores have a long history of changes in ownership over a period of years. However, the employees of the various leased departments have traditionally been represented by the Union with the exception of the pharmacy and shoe department employees. The employees in these latter departments were traditionally represented by different locals of the same International Union.

Some time in 1976 or 1977 (the exact date is not clear in the record), the three stores were owned by Payless Drug Stores Northwest, Inc., and operated under the name of Value Giant. Don Kurtz then purchased the Alemany Boulevard store from Payless within the same time frame and changed the name of that store to Giant Value. When Kurtz purchased the Alemany Boulevard store, he negotiated a contract with the Union covering the employees of the various leased departments except those under the jurisdiction of sister locals. At some unspecified date in 1977, Kurtz then purchased both the Mission Street and Geary Boulevard stores from Payless. A separate collective-bargaining agreement was negotiated with the Union covering the employees at these latter two stores for the period beginning August 1, 1977, and ending July 31, 1978. (G.C. Exh. 2.) By its terms, this contract lumped the employees at the Geary and Mission stores into a single bargaining unit as distinguished from the bargaining unit at the Alemany store.[3] However, the two contracts (Alemany and Geary-Mission) were identical in their substantive terms.

In April 1978, the Respondent purchased the leases for the pharmacy concessions from Kurtz at all three stores. Local 648 of the same International Union represented the pharmacy employees of the Respondent's predecessor at these stores. This local requested that the Respondent recognize it as the exclusive bargaining representative for the pharmacy employees after the Respondent took over the leases. Edwin Chu, owner of the Respondent, referred the union representatives to his labor consultant, Tyrone Cochran. Unrefuted testimony by Cochran discloses that, after he consulted with the representatives of Local 648, that Union no longer manifested an interest in representing the Respondent's pharmacy employees and dropped its demand for recognition.

B. The Respondent's Takeover of the Sundry Department at the Mission Street Store

Sometime in late 1978, Kurtz began to run into financial difficulties with the operation of the stores. In January 1980, Kurtz sold the Mission store to Volume Merchandise, who was a lessee of Kurtz at that particular facility. As part of the arrangement, Kurtz retained operation of the sundry department as a lessee of Volume. A new contract was negotiated between the Union and Volume for the Mission store employees coming within the Union's jurisdiction. (Resp. Exh. 1.) Although the employees working in the sundry department, now leased by Kurtz, would have normally been covered by this aggrement,[4] the Union and Volume attached a provision, by way of an appendix to the contract, specifically excluding these employees and making them a part of the unit with the Geary store of Kurtz.[5]

LaVere "Moe" Heilesen, business representative of the Union, testified that under the terms of the agreement with Volume, the Union considered the seniority rights and the payroll coverage of the sundry department employees to be combined with that of the Giant Value Geary store employees. But for all other purposes, according to Heilesen, the employees were covered under the Volume Merchandise contract, which the Union considered to be the master agreement. Ray Vetterlein, a labor consultant who represented Kurtz in all of his transactions involving the Giant Value stores, stated that he was confronted with a complex bargaining problem because Volume did not want to assume Kurtz' layoff list for the sundry department employees. Therefore, according to Vetterlein, he negotiated with the Union to get a separate agreement for Volume which specifically excluded the employees of the sundry department. Vetterlein stated the sundry department employees were made an "adjunct" to the Geary store unit and they were covered under the Geary contract. He further testified this modification (sec. 5 of the appendix to the contract) was put into the agreement specifically at the Union's request in order to protect the seniority and layoff rights of the sundry department employees.

[3] Thus, the employees at the Geary and Mission stores shared seniority and layoff and recall rights.

[4] The provision in the contract between the Union and Volume relating to leased departments is as follows:

> Section 21. Leased Departments.
> A. The Employer agrees that any employees performing work covered by this Agreement in leased or licensed departments, under subcontract or as demonstrators, shall be members of the Collective Bargaining Unit as defined in this Agreement, and the Employer agrees to retain and exercise full control over all of the terms and conditions of employment of all such employees.
> B. It is recognized by the Union that the terms of the Employer's lease or license arrangements obligate the lessee or licensee to pay the wages and observe the other terms of this Agreement, and the Union agrees that the Employer is entitled to place the financial responsibility for meeting the cost of observance of this Agreement upon said lessees and/or licensees.

[5] The provision in the appendix to the contract between the Union and Volume affecting the employees of the sundry department reads as follows:

> 5. Sundry Department Employees:
> Irrespective of the terms of Section 21 of this Agreement all Sundry Department employees shall be covered by and part of the d.b.a. by and between Giant Value 5250 Geary Boulevard, San Francisco, California, and Local 1100.

Kurtz continued to experience financial problems and, several months prior to June, entered into negotiations with Volume and the Respondent to have the Respondent purchase the lease for the sundry department as well as a liquor license held by Kurtz at the Mission store. These arrangements were finalized on May 8 and the Respondent was to take over operation of the sundry department at Mission Street on June 1. (Resp. Exhs. 4 and 5.)[6]

During the time Kurtz leased the sundry department at the Mission Street store, Robert McGrath was the manager and Ellen Wentworth was the assistant manager. In addition, six employees worked in the department and were part of the bargaining unit. These employees were: Alice Dominici, Lucilla Edison, Sara Gilbert, Gee Gwing Hung, Susanna Lopez, and Euwanda Sexton.

Although Kurtz and the Respondent attempted to keep their negotiations private, the unit employees quickly gained knowledge of the pending change in ownership of the lease. Dominici worked in the department as a cashier and stock clerk. She testified that at least 2 months prior to the Respondent taking over the lease, she spoke with McGrath about the employment prospects for the employees after the lease was transferred. According to Dominici, McGrath stated he had talked with Chu and the employees would be retained. On May 30, Dominici again spoke to McGrath about the employees' fate after the Respondent took over the department. She stated McGrath said Chu wanted to keep the employees. Dominici insisted she wanted to hear this directly from Chu and she went to speak with him in the pharmacy. According to Dominici, Chu said he wanted to keep the employees but was having problems between Local 648, a union he wanted, and Local 1100, which currently represented the employees. She stated Chu advised her to take a week off and fill out an application for employment. He told the employee that McGrath would contact her.[7] Dominici said Chu indicated he could not say much more at that time because it would create further problems for him.

Dominici testified that her last day of work in the sundry department was May 31. She was never contacted by McGrath but returned to the store sometime between June 16 and June 20. While there, she spoke with McGrath and commented that it did not seem as if the employees would be getting their jobs back. According to Dominici, McGrath replied that he did not know because "things were pretty lousy."

Edison worked in the camera section of the sundry department. She was classified as a department head and under the contract received a higher wage rate than the regular sales employees. She testified that, approximately 2 months before the Respondent took over the department, she questioned McGrath about her future employment. According to Edison, McGrath stated that Chu was going to keep her along with Dominici and Lopez. Since she knew Chu, Edison went directly to him to inquire about her job prospects under the new management. Edison testified Chu said he was not sure of the arrangements at that time. He indicated he wanted to retain Edison, but was having problems. On cross-examination, Edison acknowledged that she told Chu she had a job offer from a pharmacy in the area called "Joe's Pharmacy." She stated, however, that in her conversation with Chu she did not indicate she was going to accept the pharmacy job.

Edison further testified that she had another conversation with Chu on May 30. She said Chu informed her that he still wanted her to take over the camera section of the sundry department, but he was having trouble with the Union. According to Edison, Chu said he wanted to drop Local 1100 and get Local 648 to represent the employees. As in the case of Dominici, Chu advised Edison to take a week off and he would contact her about the job. Edison testified that during this conversation Chu asked if she would be willing to join Local 648 and give up her membership in Local 1100. Edison replied that it depended on her position with the Respondent and the money arrangements. After the transfer of the lease from Kurtz to the Respondent, Edison was not hired by the Respondent.

Lopez worked as a cashier and a sales clerk in the Mission store during Kurtz' operation of the sundry department. She testified that approximately 3 weeks before the change in ownership, she asked McGrath about her employment situation under the new management. She asked McGrath if the employees would keep their jobs and was told they would. Lopez posed the same question to McGrath the following week. According to her testimony, McGrath stated he had spoken to Chu and that the Respondent intended to retain the employees after the transfer of ownership. Lopez' last day in the department was May 30. She stated she asked McGrath what she was supposed to do (about her future employment by the Respondent). McGrath replied, according to Lopez, that the employee should wait a few days and she would be contacted. However, Lopez was never called by the Respondent.

McGrath was called as a witness in the case. He stated that, after Kurtz and the Respondent agreed to the terms of sale of the lease, it became common knowledge among the employees that Chu was taking over the operation of the department. He stated he was questioned on numerous occasions by Dominici, Edison, and Lopez about what would happen to the employees' jobs.[8] Each time he was questioned by the employees, McGrath stated he told them the Respondent wanted to keep all of the employees but did not know whom he would retain.

[6] Under the terms of the agreement between the Respondent and Kurtz, the Respondent purchased all of the inventory and fixtures in the sundry and liquor departments as well as Kurtz' liquor license.

[7] McGrath had accepted an offer from Chu 3 weeks previously to remain as manager of the sundry department after the transfer of the lease.

[8] According to McGrath, Sexton was on disability at the time of the sale of the lease, Gilbert indicated she wanted to retire, and Gwing Hung decided to transfer to the Geary store.

He advised the employees to fill out a new application for employment with the Respondent.

Because of the anxiety expressed by the employees, McGrath said he urged Kurtz during the transition period to issue a statement to them explaining their job rights. On May 19, Kurtz had McGrath and Wentworth circulate a memorandum to the employees stating that those employees with high enough seniority could elect to transfer to the Geary store. (Resp. Exh. 3.)[9] The employees were given until May 29 to make this election. All employees choosing to remain at the Mission store were to be scheduled to work through May 26, but would be paid through May 29.

On May 23, Kurtz issued another memorandum to the employees indicating that the inventory and transfer date had been changed to May 29. According to this memorandum all employees were to be terminated on May 28 and Gee (Gwing Hung) and Edison were eligible to transfer to the Geary store.[10] He cautioned there was no guarantee of employment by the new owner. (Resp. Exh. 2.)

Chu testified that the Respondent actually took over the lease on June 1 and the department was closed May 31 in order to take inventory. He stated that when the Respondent assumed operation of the sundry department, he transferred employees in from his other pharmacies to staff the department. Chu acknowledged that he spoke with Dominici and Edison regarding their chances of being employed by him once he took over the management of the department. According to Chu, he told Dominici that he did not know what his labor situation was going to be but she would have to reapply for employment. He further stated he advised Dominici he had enough help, and it would take a month or so to see if there would be any openings.

Chu admitted that when he spoke with Edison, he was rather evasive. He testified this was due to the fact that he felt the employees would come under the jurisdiction of Local 648 rather than Local 1100.[11] Chu further testified that when Edison informed him of the job offer she had from Joe's Pharmacy, he became curious about the procedure for employees transferring from Local 1100 to Local 648. Therefore, he asked Edison about making such a transfer and she indicated she would find out and advise him.

Regarding McGrath's purported offers of employment to the employees, Chu denied that he ever authorized McGrath to tell the employees they would be hired by the new management. Chu stated he told McGrath to inform the employees, when asked about jobs, that he simply did not know what the situation would be.

Sometime in July, Heilesen came into the store and was introduced to Chu by McGrath. According to Chu's testimony, Heilesen stated that the Respondent would have to hire all of the former employees back and execute a contract with the Union. Heilesen told Chu that if he did not do this, Volume would close down the sundry department. Chu referred Heilesen to Tyrone Cochran, his labor consultant, and offered to give Heilesen Cochran's telephone number. Chu stated that Heilesen indicated he knew Cochran and would get in touch with him.

Vetterlein testified that after the deal was consummated between Kurtz and the Respondent, he had many conversations with union representatives about the fate of Kurtz' former employees. According to Vetterlein, the Union threatened to picket Volume to force Chu to hire Kurtz' employees in the sundry department. He stated that the Union took the position that Volume had the contract which covered these employees at the Mission store, and the Union intended to picket in order to force Volume to compel Chu to hire the employees and execute an agreement with the Union. Vetterlein testified that he urged the Union to use the transfer rights in the agreement covering the sundry department employees at the Mission and the Geary stores. He stated, however, that the Union rejected this suggestion because it wanted Chu to pick up the employees laid off at Mission.

Cochran testified that in late May Chu informed him of the arrangement he had made with Kurtz to acquire operation of the sundry department. Cochran stated he felt that, because Chu had the pharmacies at the various Giant Value stores, Local 648 would seek to assert jurisdiction over the sundry department employees at Mission. Cochran stated that this was his belief even though he was aware that in the San Francisco area Local 648 covered pharmacy employees and Local 1100 covered sundry department employees in discount operations when located in the same building. When contacted by the Respondent's attorney during the negotiations for the purchase of the lease, Cochran testified he informed the attorney that the Respondent did not have to keep the employees of the prior owner of the lease. He told the attorney that, if the Respondent did keep the employees, he would have to pay the higher wage rates called for in the collective-bargaining agreement with the Union. Cochran further testified that after Heilesen contacted Chu he placed a call to Heilesen but was never able to get him nor were his calls ever returned by the union representative.

Concluding Findings

The General Counsel and the Charging Party argue that the Respondent is the successor employer to Kurtz in the operation of the sundry department at the Mission store. As such, it is contended that the Respondent refused to hire the employees of its predecessor because of their union affiliation and thus avoid having to bargain with the Union as the exclusive representative of these employees.[12]

[9] Only three employees had enough seniority to qualify to make the transfer. They were Edison, Gwing Hung, and Gilbert.

[10] Gwing Hung transferred to the Geary store. Edison testified she did not elect to transfer because there were no openings at that store for a department head. Therefore, if she opted to transfer, she would have to work at a reduced wage rate.

[11] Chu indicated this was his belief even though none of the employees at his pharmacies were represented by Local 648.

[12] The complaint alleges that the appropriate bargaining unit is:

> All employees performing selling and non-selling work in the sundry department operated by Respondent at 2558 Mission Street, San Francisco, California; excluding all other employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

The Respondent, on the other hand, contends that the bargaining unit is not that urged by the General Counsel or the Union. Respondent states that prior to the sale of the lease, the sundry department employees were specifically made a part of the Geary bargaining unit, and after the sale the unit at the Mission store became a part of the Respondent's pharmacy department. In addition, the Respondent argues that it is not a successor to Kurtz and therefore under no duty to bargain with the Union. The Respondent contends that the sundry department employees were either terminated, placed on layoff, or transferred by Kurtz to the Geary store at the termination of his lease. Respondent further contends that as the new owner of the lease it was under no obligation to employ the individuals working for Kurtz nor did it refuse to employ them because they were members of the Union.

I find that the Respondent's first argument—that a unit limited to sundry department employees at the Mission store is not an appropriate one—is without merit. Although the Respondent's position on this point is not articulated in precisely these terms, it in effect states that the continuity of the bargaining unit was destroyed when the Respondent took over the ownership of the lease at the Mission store. To support this position, Respondent relies on the collective-bargaining agreement between Giant Value and the Union, which placed the Mission and Geary stores in a single bargaining unit and the subsequent collective-bargaining agreement between Volume and the Union, which specifically retained the sundry department employees of the Mission store in the Geary unit. Thus, according to the Respondent's argument, its purchase of the lease at Mission caused a severance from the prior unit and the sundry department became merged with the Respondent's pharmacy department at that store.

While this argument contains some elements of persuasiveness, it overlooks the fact that the Board has consistently held, with court approval, that a much reduced bargaining unit may be treated as a miniature of the predecessor's larger unit. See, e.g., Nazareth Regional High School v. N.L.R.B., 549 F.2d 873 (2d Cir. 1977), enfg. 222 NLRB 1052 (1976); Zim's Foodliner, Inc. v. N.L.R.B., 495 F.2d 1131 (7th Cir. 1974), enfg. 201 NLRB 905 (1973). Cf. N.L.R.B. v. Band-Age, Inc., 534 F.2d 1 (1st Cir. 1976), enfg. 217 NLRB 449 (1975). The sale of the sundry department in the instant case is analogous to the sale of a single store which prior to the sale was part of a multistore bargaining unit. Such was the case in Zim's Foodliner where individual stores of a multistore bargaining unit were sold separately. The Board and the court found that the stores were operated at the same location, with the same physical plant and equipment, served the same products to the same customers, and the employees had the same job functions and immediate supervision as they had in the larger predecessor unit. Thus, it was determined that the fractionalized unit was an appropriate one.

In the instant case, there is no evidence in the record to contravene the contention of the General Counsel or the Charging Party that the Respondent sold the same type of products and provided the same kinds of services to the same spectrum of customers as did the predecessor prior to the transfer of the lease. Furthermore, the sundry department was operated in the same location—the Mission Street store—and was under the supervision of the same general manager who ran the department for the predecessor employer. Therefore, with the exception of the employee complement (which will be discussed infra) the "employing industry" remained identical to that which prevailed prior to the sale of the lease at the Mission store. In these circumstances, the contraction of the sundry department unit to the Mission store does not render it any less appropriate as a bargaining unit. Nazareth Regional High School, supra; Zim's Foodliner, supra. See also N.L.R.B. v. Foodway of El Paso, a Division of Kimbell Foods, Inc., 496 F.2d 117 (5th Cir. 1974).

The finding that the unit is appropriate leads to the more central question of whether the Respondent is a successor employer obligated under the circumstances here to hire the predecessor's employees and bargain with the Union. Under the Supreme Court's holding in Howard Johnson v. Detroit Joint Board,[13] and N.L.R.B v. Burns International Security Services,[14] a successor employer is not obligated to hire any of the work force employed by his predecessor. But, as pointed out in both decisions, a successor employer cannot refuse to hire the predecessor's "employees solely because they are union members or to avoid having to recognize the Union."[15] Therefore, the central issue here is not whether the Respondent was obligated to hire the employees of his predecessor but, rather, whether the Respondent refused to hire these employees because they were members of Local 1100 and thereby avoid having to bargain with that union.

In my judgment, the record warrants a finding that the Respondent unlawfully refused to hire those of the predecessor's employees who were available and willing to work at the Mission store after the transfer of ownership of the lease. The testimony of the former employees (Dominici, Edison, and Lopez) as well as that of Chu and McGrath graphically demonstrates that the employees became aware of the sale of the sundry department at least a month before its effective date. Further, upon gaining this knowledge, all of the employees were concerned over whether they could expect employment with the Respondent after the change in ownership of the lease. They engaged in repeated conversations about their job prospects with McGrath who, 3 weeks prior to the change in ownership, agreed to work in the same capacity as general manager for the Respondent. All three of the predecessors' employees testified they were told by McGrath they would be hired by the Respondent and that McGrath indicated that his assurances were based on his conversations with Chu. Contrary to this, McGrath testified that he told the employees on each occasion that he was apprised that the Respondent would like to keep all of them but did not know which ones would be retained. He advised the employees to fill out new applications. Chu, on the other hand, stated he instructed McGrath to tell the employees, when questioned about future employment, that he did not know what the Respondent intended. This variance in the statements of Chu and McGrath casts serious doubts on the reliability of their testimony. Accordingly, I find the testimony of the employees to be more convincing and trustworthy.

The testimony also indicates that Dominici and Edison were not satisfied with McGrath's assurance and each went to Chu independently. Dominici stated that Chu told her he wanted to keep the employees, but was having problems between Local 648 and Local 1100. At this time Chu indicated he wanted the employees to be represented by Local 648. In this same vein, Edison testified that Chu told her that on May 30 he was having trouble with Local 1100 because he wanted to drop that union and get Local 648. Although Chu denied telling this to Dominici and Edison, I do not credit him. Their testimony regarding Chu's statements comports with the testimony of Cochran, Respondent's labor consultant. When first apprised by Chu that the Respondent intended buying Kurtz' lease at Mission, Cochran told Chu's attorney that the Respondent did not have to keep the employees but, if they were retained, the Respondent would have to pay the higher wage rates required by the collective-bargaining agreement with the Union. Cochran also stated he reminded Chu he might have jurisdictional problems between Locals 648 and 1100, even though he was aware at that time that none of Chu's pharmacy employees at any of the stores were represented by a union.[16] This unrefuted testimony by Cochran lends support to the statements of Dominici and Edison that Chu did not want Local 1100 representing his employees. Further, it warrants the inference that Chu was concerned by the higher wage rates he would have to pay if he hired the predecessor's employees, since they were members of Local 1100. It also serves to explain why Chu asked Edison if she would consider giving up her membership in Local 1100 and transferring to Local 648.

In light of the above, I find that the credited testimony warrants the conclusion that the Respondent did not hire Dominici, Edison, or Lopez for the reasons that they were members of Local 1100. In making this finding, I rely on the assurances given the employees by McGrath that they would be hired by the Respondent only to the extent that it indicated the Respondent was considering employing these individuals until advised that it would be burdened with a union it did not want.[17] I find, therefore, that by refusing to hire these three employees because of their union affiliation, the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act. Karl Kallmann, d/b/a Love's Barbeque Restaurant, No. 62 v. N.L.R.B., 640 F.2d 1094, 1100 (9th Cir. 1981), enfg. in pertinent part 245 NLRB 78 (1979); Macomb Block and Supply, Inc., 223 NLRB 1285 (1976).[18]

The finding that the Respondent refused to hire the three employees of its predecessor because of their union affiliation further warrants the inference that this action was taken in order to allow the Respondent to avoid any bargaining obligation, as a successor employer, with the Union. The record reveals that the Respondent brought in three employees, in addition to Chu's wife, from its other pharmacies to work in the sundry department at Mission. Thus, it becomes evident that, had the Respondent hired the three employees of its predecessor, the Union would have maintained its majority status in the unit and the Respondent, as the successor employer, would then have been under an obligation to recognize and bargain with the Union. N.L.R.B. v. Burns International Security Services, Inc., supra. Therefore, the Respondent cannot now be permitted to evade its legal obligations through its own wrongdoing in refusing to hire its predecessor's employees. Karl Kallmann v. N.L.R.B., supra at 1100–01; N.L.R.B. v. Foodway of El Paso, supra. Accordingly, I find the Respondent has also committed a violation of Section 8(a)(5) of the Act. J. R. Sousa & Sons, Inc., 210 NLRB 982 (1974). See also K. B. & J. Young's Super Markets, Inc. v. N.L.R.B., 377 F.2d 463 (9th Cir. 1967).

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Respondent, Ah Chu Company, is an employer within the meaning of Section 2(2) of the Act engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. Department Store Employees Union, Local 1100, affiliated with United Food and Commercial Workers Union, AFL–CIO, is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

[16] Moreover, Cochran testified he was aware that Locals 648 and 1100 represented separate units of pharmacy and sundry department employees even when these units were in the same discount store location.

[17] Counsel for the General Counsel and the Charging Party contend that the other employees of the predecessor were also victims of an unlawful refusal to hire. I reject this contention as being unsupported in the record. McGrath testified that Sexton was on disability at the time of the sale of the lease and there is no indication in the record that she would have been considered for hire by the Respondent. McGrath also testified that Gilbert stated she did not wish to transfer to the Geary store and that she wanted to go on retirement or layoff. Thus, she voluntarily removed herself from consideration for hire by the Respondent. Gwing Hung opted to transfer to the Geary Street store and thereby removed himself from consideration for employment after the transfer of the lease.

Although these three individuals were alleged in the complaint to be discriminatees, they were not available at the hearing. Counsel for the General Counsel and the Charging Party asserted they were not aware that the Respondent would defend on the ground that these individuals were not available for employment after the transfer of the lease. A brief recess was taken to afford counsel an opportunity to secure these witnesses but they were not found. Counsel for the Charging Party made offers of proof regarding testimony they would have given. The offers of proof were rejected since the complaint and notice of hearing setting the hearing date had been issued some 5 months previously, and there was no showing as to good cause—other than the claimed surprise—why these witnesses were not available.

[18] Respondent contends that none of the employees filed an application for employment as requested and, thus, there was no refusal to hire them. This argument is without merit since Chu's conversations with Dominici and Edison made it clear to the employees that their union affiliation was an impediment to consideration for hire. Therefore, the failure of the employees to undertake a useless act is no defense to the unlawful refusal to hire. Macomb Block and Supply, Inc., supra.

3. The following constitutes a unit appropriate for purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act:

> All employees performing selling and non-selling work in the sundry department operated by Respondent at 2558 Mission Street, San Francisco, California; excluding all other employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

4. By refusing to retain or hire three sundry department employees of Giant Value, after purchasing the lease for and operating that department at the Mission Street store, because they were members of the Union, the Respondent has discriminated against these employees with regard to hire and tenure of employment in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

5. By unlawfully refusing to retain or hire the three sundry department employees of Giant Value because of their union affiliation, the Respondent has evaded its obligation, as successor to Giant Value, to recognize and bargain with the Union in violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

6. The above conduct constitutes unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that the Respondent has committed unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(3), (5), and (1) of the Act, it shall be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act. Since the Respondent has unlawfully evaded its obligation, as successor to Giant Value, to bargain with the Union as exclusive representative of its employees in an appropriate unit, it shall be ordered to bargain in good faith, upon request, with the Union and embody in a signed agreement any understanding reached. The Respondent shall be further ordered to offer immediate employment to Alice Dominici, Lucilla Edison, and Susanna Lopez in the same positions they held when the Respondent purchased the lease for the sundry department at the Mission Street store from Giant Value or, if those positions no longer exist, in substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or other rights and privileges, dismissing, if necessary, all employees hired since Respondent took over operation of the sundry department. In addition, the Respondent shall make whole these three employees for any loss of pay they may have suffered by reason of the discrimination against them by paying each a sum of money equal to that which she would have normally earned as wages from the date of discrimination to the date of employment, less net earnings during such period. Interest on said wages shall be computed in the manner prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Company, 90 NLRB 289 (1950), and Florida Steel Corporation, 231 NLRB 651 (1977).[19]

Upon the foregoing findings of fact, conclusions of law, and the entire record in this case, and pursuant to Section 10(c) of the Act, I hereby issue the following recommended:

ORDER[20]

The Respondent, Ah Chu Company, San Francisco, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Discouraging membership in Department Store Employees Union, Local 1100, affiliated with United Food and Commercial Workers Union, AFL-CIO, or any other labor organization, by refusing to hire employees who are members of that union, or any other labor organization, thereby discriminating against employees or applicants for employment in regard to hire and tenure of employment.

(b) Refusing to recognize and bargain collectively regarding rates of pay, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment with the above-named union as the exclusive bargaining representative of its employees in the following appropriate unit:

> All employees performing selling and non-selling work in the sundry department operated by Respondent at 2558 Mission Street, San Francisco, California; excluding all other employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Offer to Alice Dominici, Lucilla Edison, and Susanna Lopez immediate and full employment, without prejudice to their seniority or other rights and privileges, discharging if necessary any employees hired since the Respondent took over operation of the sundry department at the Mission Street store, and make them whole for any loss of pay they may have suffered by reason of the discrimination against them in the manner set forth in this Decision entitled "The Remedy."

(b) Recognize and, upon request, bargain in good faith with Local 1100 as the exclusive representative of its employees in the appropriate bargaining unit set forth above with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment. In the event an understanding is reached, embody the terms of said understanding in a signed agreement.

(c) Preserve and, upon request, make available to the Board or its agents, for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this recommended Order.

[20] In the event no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Rules and Regulations of the National Labor Relations Board, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order herein shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules and Regulations, be adopted by the Board and become its findings, conclusions, and Order, and all objections thereto shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

(d) Post in the sundry department at the Mission Street, San Francisco, California, store, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[21] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 20, after being duly signed by Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to ensure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Notify the Regional Director for Region 20, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps the Respondent has taken to comply herewith.

[21] In the event that this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Board."

Jefferson County Community Center, Inc. and Community Center Professional Employees Association, Colorado Education Association, NEA. Case 27-CA-7349

November 9, 1981

DECISION AND ORDER

By Members Fanning, Jenkins, and Zimmerman

Upon a charge filed on June 9, 1981, by Community Center Professional Employees Association, Colorado Education Association, NEA, herein called the Union, and duly served on Jefferson County Community Center, Inc., herein called Respondent, the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, by the Regional Director for Region 27, issued a complaint on June 15, 1981, against Respondent, alleging that Respondent had engaged in and was engaging in unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) and Section 2(6) and (7) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended. Copies of the charge and complaint and notice of hearing before an administrative law judge were duly served on the parties to this proceeding.

With respect to the unfair labor practices, the complaint alleges in substance that on May 19, 1981, following a Board election in Case 27-RC-5990,[1] the Union was duly certified as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of Respondent's employees in the unit found appropriate; and that, commencing on or about June 3, 1981, and at all times thereafter, Respondent has refused, and continues to date to refuse, to bargain collectively with the Union as the exclusive bargaining representative, although the Union has requested and is requesting it to do so. Thereafter, Respondent filed its answer to the complaint admitting in part, and denying in part, the allegations in the complaint, and raising certain "affirmative defenses."

On July 21, 1981, counsel for the General Counsel filed directly with the Board a Motion for Summary Judgment. Subsequently, on July 29, 1981, the Board issued an order transferring the proceeding to the Board and a Notice To Show Cause why the General Counsel's Motion for Summary Judgment should not be granted. Respondent thereafter filed a response to the Notice To Show Cause.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

Upon the entire record in this proceeding, the Board makes the following:

Ruling on the Motion for Summary Judgment

In its answer to the complaint and its response to the Motion for Summary Judgment, Respondent admits the request and its refusal to bargain with the Union. It, however, challenges the Union's certification, reiterating its contentions in the underlying representation proceeding that the Board lacks jurisdiction over its operations; that the Regional Director improperly included certain employees and excluded certain others from the bargaining unit; that the Board improperly overruled certain of Respondent's challenges and objections to the first election; and that the Acting Regional Director improperly overruled its objection to conduct affecting the second election.

Review of the record herein, including the record in Case 27-RC-5990, reveals that on February 1, 1980, the Union filed a representation petition under Section 9 of the National Labor Relations Act. On June 27, 1980, after a hearing, the Regional Director issued his Decision and Direction of Election in which he found that the Board had jurisdiction over Respondent, rejecting Respondent's assertions that it was a political subdivision of the State of Colorado. He also found that Respondent possessed sufficient control over the employment conditions of its employees to enable it to bargain effectively with a labor organization. Further, contrary to Respondent's positions, he included in the bargaining unit certain employees who Respondent asserted were supervisors and employees who were working on 1-year Federal grants and he excluded employees not directly involved in client care or contact. The Regional Director directed an election in two voting groups consisting of professional and nonprofessional employees, respectively. Respondent filed with the Board a timely request for review of the Regional Director's decision in which it reiterated the arguments previously rejected by the Regional Director. On August 4, 1980, the Board denied Respondent's request for review.

Thereafter, the first election was conducted by mail and manual balloting. The professional employees voted 37 for, and 17 against, inclusion in the same unit with the nonprofessional employees, with 12 challenged and 4 void ballots. The overall tally revealed 60 votes for, and 59 against, the Union, with 18 challenged and 3 void ballots. Respondent challenged the 18 voters on the grounds that they were no longer employed and further asserted that certain of them had been improperly included in the unit. It also filed timely objections to the election alleging, in substance, that certain prounion alleged supervisors had intimidated antiunion or undecided employees; that there were irregularities regarding the mailed ballots; that a ballot of a professional employee should have been voided; that the Board agent interfered with the election; and that a ballot had been fraudulently cast by an ineligible employee. Thereafter, the Regional Director ordered a hearing on Respondent's challenges and objections. On November 6, 1980, the Hearing Officer issued his report in which he recommended that the challenges to certain ballots be sustained, that the challenges to the remaining ballots be overruled, that the objection relating to the fraudulently cast ballot be sustained, and that the remaining objections be overruled. He further recommended that if, after the issuance of the revised tally, the fraudulently cast ballot was determinative, the election be set aside and a second election be directed. Respondent filed timely exceptions to the Hearing Officer's report. On March 24, 1981, the Board adopted the Hearing Officer's report.

See LTV Electrosystems, Inc., 166 NLRB 938 (1967), enfd. 388 F.2d 683 (4th Cir. 1968); Golden Age Beverage Co., 167 NLRB 151 (1967), enfd. 415 F.2d 26 (5th Cir. 1969); Intertype Co. v. Penello, 269 F.Supp. 573 (D.C.Va. 1967); Follett Corp., 164 NLRB 378 (1967), enfd. 397 F.2d 91 (7th Cir. 1968); Sec. 9(d) of the NLRA, as amended.

Subsequently, the ballots, the challenges to which had been overruled, were opened and counted and a revised tally issued which revealed that the fraudulently cast ballot was determinative. Therefore, in accordance with the Board's March 24 order (not published in volumes of Board Decisions), a second election was conducted on May 4, 1981. The professional employees voted 23 for, and 49 against, inclusion in the same unit with the nonprofessional employees, with 2 challenged ballots. In addition, the professionals cast 53 votes for, and 19 against, the Union, with 2 challenged ballots. The tally for the nonprofessional employees showed 17 votes for, and 55 against, the Union, with 2 challenged ballots.

Respondent filed a timely objection to the second election in which it contended that the Regional Office had interfered with the election by allowing the professional employees to vote again on whether they desired to be included in the same unit with the nonprofessional employees. The Acting Regional Director issued his Supplemental Decision and Certification of Representative on May 19, 1981, in which he overruled Respondent's objection, certified the Union as the bargaining representative of the professional employees, and certified the results of the election among the nonprofessional employees. Respondent filed a request for review of the Acting Regional Director's Supplemental Decision which was denied by the Board on June 19, 1981. It thus appears that Respondent is attempting in this proceeding to relitigate issues fully litigated and finally determined in the representation proceeding.

It is well settled that in the absence of newly discovered or previously unavailable evidence or special circumstances a respondent in a proceeding alleging a violation of Section 8(a)(5) is not entitled to relitigate issues which were or could have been litigated in a prior representation proceeding.[2]

All issues raised by Respondent in this proceeding were or could have been litigated in the prior representation proceeding, and Respondent does not offer to adduce at a hearing any newly discovered or previously unavailable evidence, nor does it allege that any special circumstances exist herein which would require the Board to reexamine the decision made in the representation proceeding. We therefore find that Respondent has not raised any issue which is properly litigable in this unfair labor practice proceeding. Accordingly, we grant the Motion for Summary Judgment.[3]

On the basis of the entire record, the Board makes the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. THE BUSINESS OF RESPONDENT

Jefferson County Community Center, Inc., a Colorado corporation, with its principal office and place of business at Arvada, Colorado, provides educational and health services for the developmentally disabled. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1979, it had revenues in excess of $3,700,000, and purchased goods valued at $15,000 directly from points outside the State of Colorado.

[2] See Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. v. N.L.R.B., 313 U.S. 146, 162 (1941); Rules and Regulations of the Board, Secs. 102.67(f) and 102.69(c).

[3] Respondent asserts in its answer to the complaint that it was not served with the charge, although it does not renew this contention in its response to the Motion for Summary Judgment nor in its response to the Board's Notice To Show Cause. The record reveals that Respondent was served with the charge.

Respondent also denies pars. 2(c), (d), and (e) of the complaint which allege that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1979, it had revenues in excess of $3,700,000 and purchased goods valued at $15,000 directly from points outside the State of Colorado, that it receives in excess of $220,000 annually from Federal funds which are transferred directly across state lines, and that it is an employer within the meaning of Sec. 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act. However, the Regional Director, in asserting jurisdiction in his Decision and Direction of Election, found that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1979, Respondent had revenues of $3,724,222, that it purchased goods valued at approximately $15,000 directly from outside the State of Colorado, and received in excess of $220,000 annually from Federal funds which were transferred directly across state lines. Subsequently, the Board denied Respondent's request for review in which it raised the issue of jurisdiction, and Respondent does not now offer to adduce any new evidence.

In addition, it receives in excess of $220,000 annually from Federal funds which are transferred directly across state lines.

We find, on the basis of the foregoing, that Respondent is, and has been at all times material herein, an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act, and that it will effectuate the policies of the Act to assert jurisdiction herein.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

Community Center Professional Employees Association, Colorado Education Association, NEA, is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. The Representation Proceeding

1. The unit

The following employees of Respondent constitute a unit appropriate for collective-bargaining purposes within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act:

> All social workers, case workers, counselor/evaluators, placement/follow-up specialists, therapists, nurses, teachers, home economists, behavior modification specialists, parent/-student involvement specialists, art/community instructor, vocational training instructor and nurse assistant; but excluding office clerical employees, and all guards, nonprofessional employees[4] and supervisors as defined in the Act, and all other employees.

2. The certification

On May 4, 1981, a majority of the employees of Respondent in said unit, in a secret-ballot election conducted under the supervision of the Regional Director for Region 27, designated the Union as their representative for the purpose of collective bargaining with Respondent.

The Union was certified as the collective-bargaining representative of the employees in said unit on May 19, 1981, and the Union continues to be such exclusive representative within the meaning of Section 9(a) of the Act.

B. The Request To Bargain and Respondent's Refusal

Commencing on or about May 28, 1981, and at all times thereafter, the Union has requested Respondent to bargain collectively with it as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of all the employees in the above-described unit.

Commencing on or about June 3, 1981, and continuing at all times thereafter to date, Respondent has refused, and continues to refuse, to recognize and bargain with the Union as the exclusive representative for collective bargaining of all employees in said unit.

Accordingly, we find that Respondent has, since on or about June 3, 1981, and at all times thereafter, refused to bargain collectively with the Union as the exclusive representative of the employees in the appropriate unit, and that, by such refusal, Respondent has engaged in and is engaging in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

IV. THE EFFECT OF THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES UPON COMMERCE

The activities of Respondent set forth in section III, above, occurring in connection with its operations described in section I, above, have a close, intimate, and substantial relationship to trade, traffic, and commerce among the several States and tend to lead to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow of commerce.

V. THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in and is engaging in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act, we shall order that it cease and desist therefrom, and, upon request, bargain collectively with the Union as the exclusive representative of all employees in the appropriate unit and, if an understanding is reached, embody such understanding in a signed agreement.

In order to insure that the employees in the appropriate unit will be accorded the services of their selected bargaining agent for the period provided by law, we shall construe the initial period of certification as beginning on the date Respondent commences to bargain in good faith with the Union as the recognized bargaining representative in the appropriate unit. See Mar-Jac Poultry Company, Inc., 136 NLRB 785 (1962); Commerce Company d/b/a Lamar Hotel, 140 NLRB 226, 229 (1962), enfd. 328 F.2d 600 (5th Cir. 1964), cert. denied 379 U.S. 817; Burnett Construction Company, 149 NLRB 1419, 1421 (1964), enfd. 350 F.2d 57 (10th Cir. 1965).

The Board, upon the basis of the foregoing facts and the entire record, makes the following:

[4] The complaint inadvertently describes the appropriate unit as excluding professional employees, whereas it is clear from the record that nonprofessional employees are excluded from this unit of professional employees.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Jefferson County Community Center, Inc., is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. Community Center Professional Employees Association, Colorado Education Association, NEA, is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. All social workers, case workers, counselor/evaluators, placement/follow-up specialists, therapists, nurses, teachers, home economists, behavior modification specialists, parent/student involvement specialists, art/community instructor, vocational training instructor and nurse assistant; but excluding office clerical employees, and all guards, nonprofessional employees and supervisors as defined in the Act, and all other employees, constitute a unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act.

4. Since May 19, 1981, the above-named labor organization has been and now is the certified and exclusive representative of all employees in the aforesaid appropriate unit for the purpose of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(a) of the Act.

5. By refusing on or about June 3, 1981, and at all times thereafter, to bargain collectively with the above-named labor organization as the exclusive bargaining representative of all the employees of Respondent in the appropriate unit, Respondent has engaged in and is engaging in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) of the Act.

6. By the aforesaid refusal to bargain, Respondent has interfered with, restrained, and coerced, and is interfering with, restraining, and coercing, employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act, and thereby has engaged in and is engaging in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

7. The aforesaid unfair labor practices are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board hereby orders that the Respondent, Jefferson County Community Center, Inc., Arvada, Colorado, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Refusing to bargain collectively concerning rates of pay, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment with Community Center Professional Employees Association, Colorado Education Association, NEA, as the exclusive bargaining representative of its employees in the following appropriate unit:

> All social workers, case workers, counselor/evaluators, placement/follow-up specialists, therapists, nurses, teachers, home economists, behavior modification specialists, parent/student involvement specialists, art/community instructor, vocational training instructor and nurse assistant; but excluding office clerical employees, and all guards, nonprofessional employees and supervisors as defined in the Act, and all other employees.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action which the Board finds will effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Upon request, bargain with the above-named labor organization as the exclusive representative of all employees in the aforesaid appropriate unit with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment and, if an understanding is reached, embody such understanding in a signed agreement.

(b) Post at its offices and facilities copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[5] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 27, after being duly signed by Respondent's representative, shall be posted by Respondent immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Notify the Regional Director for Region 27, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

[5] In the event that this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

WE WILL NOT refuse to bargain collectively concerning rates of pay, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment with Community Center Professional Employees Association, Colorado Education Association, NEA, as the exclusive representative of the employees in the bargaining unit described below.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL, upon request, bargain with the above-named Union, as the exclusive representative of all employees in the bargaining unit described below, with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment and, if an understanding is reached, embody such understanding in a signed agreement. The bargaining unit is:

All social workers, case workers, counselor/evaluators, placement/follow-up specialists, therapists, nurses, teachers, home economists, behavior modification specialists, parent/student involvement specialists, art/community instructor, vocational training instructor and nurse assistant; but excluding office clerical employees, and all guards, nonprofessional employees and supervisors as defined in the Act, and all other employees.

CENTER, INC.

Inland Steel Company and Dale Ray. Case 13-CA-18261

November 9, 1981

DECISION AND ORDER*

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On March 5, 1981, Administrative Law Judge Leonard M. Wagman issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and counsel for the General Counsel filed cross-exceptions and supporting brief and in response to Respondent's exceptions.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order,[2] as modified herein.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge as modified below and hereby orders that the Respondent, Inland Steel Company, East Chicago, Indiana, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the said recommended Order, as so modified:

1. Substitute the following for paragraph 2(a):

"(a) Make whole all mechanical maintenance employees of No. 11 Coke Battery who suffered reduction of their lunch break from 30 minutes to 20 minutes and the elimination of their washup time by paying such employees for 15 minutes per day 5 minutes for washup time and 10 minutes for lunchtime) from July 20 1978, to September 23, 1978."

2. Substitute the following for paragraph 2(d).

"(d) Remove and expunge from its files any reference to the two disciplinary warnings issued to employee Dale Ray on December 4, 1978, notify him in writing that this has been done and that evidence of these unlawful warnings will not be used as a basis for future discipline against him, and make him whole for any loss of pay he may have suffered as a result of his refusal to perform painting on December 2 and 3, 1978, in the manner set forth for loss of earnings in the section of this Decision entitled 'The Remedy.'"

3. Substitute the attached notice for that of the Administrative Law Judge.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

After a hearing at which all sides had an opportunity to present evidence and state their positions, the National Labor Relations Board found that we have violated the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, and has ordered us to post this notice.

* On January 20, 1982, Respondent requested en banc consideration of a motion for reconsideration of that portion of the Board's Order in this proceeding regarding the promulgation of rules regarding lunch periods and hours of employment in the coke battery. At the request of the parties, Respondent's motion was held in abeyance in order to provide all parties an opportunity to resolve the issue in a manner satisfactory to all concerned.

Thereafter, on March 15, 1982, the Board received the General Counsel's and Respondent's joint motion to amend the Board's Order. Respondent contends, and the General Counsel and Charging Party now agree, that par. 2(a) of the Administrative Law Judge's Order, which was adopted by the Board, added new terms and conditions of employment to the existing contract. The parties are in agreement that the terms and conditions of employment of Respondent's mechanical employees would have changed irrespective of the unfair labor practices committed by General Foreman Sanger. Upon amendment of the Board's Decision and Order as requested, Respondent agrees to comply with the Board's Order and withdraws its previously filed motion for reconsideration.

The Board, having duly considered the matter, on April 1, 1982, granted Respondent's request to withdraw its motion for the Board en banc to consider the contemporaneous motion for reconsideration; granted the General Counsel's and Respondent's joint motion to amend the Board's Order; and amended its Order. The Board's Order and the notice for posting herein reflect that amendment.

[1] Respondent has excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Administrative Law Judge. It is the Board's established policy not to overrule an administrative law judge's resolutions with respect to credibility unless the clear preponderance of all of the relevant evidence convinces us that the resolutions are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, Inc., 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing his findings.

Respondent has also contended that the Administrative Law Judge's interpretation of the evidence and his credibility findings were biased and prejudiced. Upon careful examination of the Administrative Law Judge's Decision and the entire record, we are satisfied that the contentions of Respondent in this regard are without merit.

Finally, in accord with the General Counsel's exceptions, we hereby correct two inadvertent errors made by the Administrative Law Judge in sec. II,D,1, of his Decision. The Administrative Law Judge's reference to Ray's assignment of rustproofing steel blocks and spare parts as "usual" is inaccurate; the word "usual" should read "unusual"; (2) also in sec. II,D,1, the Administrative Law Judge inaccurately stated that Sanger's recollection of the time of his decision to assign Dale Ray to rustproofing shifted from late June or July to early July or mid-July 1978. The record reveals that Sanger initially testified that he decided to assign Ray to rustproofing around August 20, 1978, and later testified that Ray was assigned to rustproofing around the end of June or beginning of July 1978. Neither of these inaccurate statements affects the ultimate disposition of this case.

[2] In accordance with his dissent in Olympic Medical Corporation, 250 NLRB 146 (1980), Member Jenkins would award interest on the backpay due based on the formula set forth therein.

WE WILL NOT threaten employees with more rigid working conditions because they initiate or process a grievance under our collective agreement with Local 1010, United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO, or otherwise seek to vindicate provisions of the collective-bargaining agreement, or because they engaged in other protected concerted activity covered by the National Labor Relations Act.

WE WILL NOT reduce the length of employees' lunch breaks, eliminate washup time, or otherwise impose harsher conditions of employment upon employees because fellow employees are initiating or processing grievances under our collective-bargaining agreement with Local 1010, United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO, or any other labor organization, or because they engage in union or other protected concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid and protection.

WE WILL NOT discourage the filing and processing of grievances under a collective-bargaining agreement or other union activity on behalf of Local 1010, United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO, or any other labor organization, by discriminating against its employees in the assignment or scheduling of work or by other changes in wages, hours, or conditions of employment.

WE WILL NOT assign employees to perform rustproofing, painting, or other work, or assign them to the midnight shift or otherwise affect their wages, hours, or conditions of employment because they initiated or processed a grievance or because they engaged in union or other protected concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL rescind General Foreman Robert Sanger's July 20, 1978, announcement and July 21, 1978, statement of rules regarding lunch periods and hours of employment for the interim period of start-up in the No. 11 Coke Battery; and WE WILL make whole all mechanical maintenance employees of No. 11 Coke Battery who were denied a washup period at the end of their shift and had their lunch period reduced from 30 minutes to 20 minutes, by paying each employee for 15 minutes per day 5 minutes for washup time and 10 minutes for lunchtime) from July 20, 1978, to September 23, 1978.

WE WILL make whole the mechanical employees of No. 11 Coke Battery, because we unlawfully penalized them on or about July 21, 1978, for taking a 15-minute washup period, by paying them any loss of earnings, plus interest, they may have suffered, by removing and expunging from their personnel files all references to the unlawful disciplinary actions taken against them, and by informing them in writing both that we have expunged our files and that evidence of our unlawful actions will not be used as a basis for future discipline against them.

WE WILL make Dale Ray whole for any loss of earnings he may have suffered as a result of the discrimination against him, with interest.

WE WILL remove and expunge from Dale Ray's personnel file and our records all copies or other evidence of the disciplinary letters we issued to him on December 4, 1978, and WE WILL notify him, in writing, both that this has been done and that evidence of these unlawful letters will not be used as a basis for future discipline against him.

INLAND STEEL COMPANY

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

LEONARD M. WAGMAN, Administrative Law Judge: Upon a charge filed by Dale Ray, an individual, the Regional Director for Region 13 of the National Labor Relations Board issued a complaint and notice of hearing in this case on January 31, 1979. The complaint, as amended, alleges that Respondent, Inland Steel Company, referred to below as the Company, violated Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (4) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, 29 U.S.C. §151, et seq., herein called the Act. The Company, by its timely answer, denies commission of the alleged unfair labor practices.

Upon the entire record, including my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses at the hearing, and after due consideration of the briefs[1] filed by the General Counsel and the Company, I make the following:

[1] The General Counsel's motion to correct the record is granted. The corrections are contained in Appendix A of this Decision. [Omitted from publication.] I also find merit in the General Counsel's motion requesting me to disregard writings which appear to be arbitration decisions which are labeled attachments "A" and "B" and which the Company appended to its brief. As the Company did not offer the proffered written evidence and authenticate it at the hearing, I have granted the General Counsel's motion and have disregarded them.

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION AND LABOR ORGANIZATION

The Company, a Delaware corporation, is engaged in the manufacture of steel products. In the course of its business operations, the Company annually receives at its East Chicago, Indiana, plant materials valued in excess of $50,000, all of which are shipped directly from points outside the State of Indiana. In its answer, the Company admits the foregoing data and concedes that at all times material it was an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act, and I so find.

The complaint alleges, the Company in its answer admits, and I find that Local 1010, United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO, referred to as the Union, is, and has been at all times material to this case, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

II. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Background and Issues

The Company's plant, known as the Indiana Harbor Works, employs approximately 24,000 persons. Since 1942, the Union has been the bargaining representative of the Company's production and maintenance employees under a series of collective-bargaining agreements, the latest of which has been in effect since August 1, 1977.

In March 1978,[2] Dale Ray, a company employee, testified in a National Labor Relations Board hearing in Case 13-CA-16952. Thereafter, on June 15, Administrative Law Judge Benjamin K. Blackburn issued a decision in that case, which the Board adopted,[3] concluding that the Company had violated the Act "[b]y maintaining a no-distribution rule which forbids employees to distribute literature in nonwork areas on nonwork time and which requires them to obtain prior approval of such material by submitting a copy to management before even bringing it into the plant . . . . [238 NLRB at 1206.]" Administrative Law Judge Blackburn also found that the Company violated the Act "by conditioning the right of Thomas Zangrilli and Dale Ray to report for work on October 2, 1977, on compliance with an invalid no-distribution rule . . . . [Id. at 1207.]" In July Ray and fellow employees filed a grievance complaining that salaried foremen had performed bargaining unit work.

The issues presented are: (1) whether the Company, in response to the grievance, violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by threatening employees with strict working conditions; (2) whether the Company carried out that threat and thus violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act, by curtailing the lunch period and washup time previously enjoyed by its No. 11 Coke Battery mechanical employees; and (3) whether the Company assigned No. 11 Coke Battery mechanic Dale Ray to rustproofing and painting for more than 5 months and transferred him to the night shift for 1 week in retaliation for his participation in the earlier Board unfair labor practice proceeding and because of his role in the filing of the grievance.

B. Alleged Interference, Restraint, and Coercion

During the week of July 17, Dale Ray, who was a mechanic employed in No. 11 Coke Battery, discussed the pending grievance with No. 11 Coke Battery's general mechanical foreman, Robert Sanger. Sanger asked Ray why he was filing a grievance. Ray replied that it was not his grievance alone, that there were eight employees involved, and that the cause of the grievance was the employment of salaried foremen to do bargaining unit employees' work.

Sanger pressed Ray for the names of the foremen who had been doing the unit work. Ray responded that it was Mechanical Foreman Lawrence Woodworth of No. 11 Coke Battery, and some other mechanical foremen who had been working at the plant on weekends, when "there was no one else working."

Sanger sought to persuade Ray that the grievance was unwarranted. Sanger said that Foreman Woodworth "had made an honest mistake" and that Woodworth had not been a salaried supervisor "for that long." Sanger added that he "could guarantee that it would not happen again" and questioned the need for filing the grievance.

Ray insisted that the grievance was warranted in light of the wages lost by unit employees. Ray hastened to argue that anyone who had been in the Company's employ as long as Woodworth had should recognize that salaried foremen did not perform unit work.

Sanger suggested that employees bring their complaints to him rather than immediately file a grievance. Ray replied that, if Sanger wished, the other grieving employees might agree to meet with Sanger. However, Ray disclaimed the role of spokesman for the group.

At this, Sanger expressed his view that such a meeting was unnecessary, and that Ray could convey Sanger's thoughts to the other grievants. Sanger added that, if any of them wanted to discuss the matter with him at that point, they could do so. Ray agreed to convey Sanger's sentiments to the concerned employees.

In the wake of Ray's last response, Sanger warned that the "department could be run one of two ways." He explained in substance that No. 11 Coke Battery could continue to operate "with a little bit of give and take" or it "could be run by the book," a circumstance "which could be worse" for employee Ray than it would be for Sanger. At this, Ray insisted that the grievance "was important" and that he intended "to pursue it." Sanger concluded the conversation stating, "If that's the way you feel about it, have the griever contact me and set up a meeting."[4]

On or about July 15, Mechanical Foreman Kenneth Gearhart, a supervisor in No. 11 Coke Battery, while driving in a truck at the Company's plant, with employee

[3] Inland Steel Company, 238 NLRB 1204 (1978).

[4] My findings regarding the foregoing conversation between General Foreman Sanger and employee Ray are based on the latter's full and forthright testimony. In his testimony, Sanger admitted that he discussed the grievance with Ray on or about July 17 or 18. However, Sanger's version does not include a warning of changed atmosphere in No. 11 Coke Battery. Nor did Sanger's testimony include a denial that he made the threat attributed to him by Ray. In assessing the two versions, I note that, unlike Ray, who appeared to be giving his best recollection of the details of the conversation, Sanger was content to provide a superficial account.

Patrick O'Sullivan, spoke of the pending grievance concerning supervisors performing unit work. In this context, Gearhart remarked: "If these guys go through with this grievance, things are going to get much worse in this department."[5]

Under Section 7 of the Act,[6] employees enjoy the right to file grievances with their collective-bargaining representative regarding wages, hours, and conditions of employment. General Motors Corporation, Packard Electric Division, 232 NLRB 335 (1977). It follows that a threat of reprisal against employees because they have filed a grievance regarding one of those concerns interferes with, restrains, and coerces employees in the enjoyment of that right, and therefore violates Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. A & W Products Company, Inc., 244 NLRB 1128, 1129 (1979). Precision Castings Corporation, Division of Aurora Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary of Allied Products Corporation, 233 NLRB 183, 188 (1977).

I find here that Sanger's remarks to Ray included a warning of reprisal for the No. 11 Coke Battery employees resort to a grievance regarding their claim that a supervisor had wrongfully deprived them of wages by performing unit work. Considered in context Sanger's remarks about the manner in which No. 11 Coke Battery could be operated was a threat that he, who was their general foreman, had authority to impose strictures to make life more difficult for all of the employees because three of them had filed a grievance. I find that this threat was likely to restrain, coerce, and interfere with the employees in their enjoyment of their Section 7 right to file grievances under the collective-bargaining agreement. I therefore find that by Sanger's warning the Company violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. I also find that Gearhart's more direct warning violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.[7]

C. The Reduction of the Lunch Break and the Elimination of Washup Time for the Mechanical Employees of No. 11 Coke Battery

On or about July 20, Sanger told the mechanical employees of No. 11 Coke Battery that they were only entitled to a 20-minute lunch period and that there would not be any washup time at the end of their shift. This announcement came 1 day after Sanger had observed his mechanical employees leaving their work area approximately 20 minutes before the termination of their shift. Along with his announcement regarding lunch periods and cleanup time, Sanger told the mechanical employees of No. 11 Coke Battery that they would lose pay for 30 minutes due to their early departure on the previous day. On July 21, Sanger posted a notice at No. 11 Coke Battery which announced the following:

> For the interim period before start-up the hours of work for the Mechanical gang shall be 6:30 A.M. to 2:30 P.M. This means that you will report to the Mechanical Turn Foreman ready for a work assignment promptly at 6:30 A.M. It further means that you will not leave your assigned work area to go home before 2:30 P.M. The lunch period shall be a paid 20-minute period, conditions permitting, to begin at 12:00 noon and end at 12:20 P.M. Persons not complying with these guidelines will be subject to discipline.

At all times material, the collective-bargaining agreement covering Sanger's employees contained the following in article 10, section 1(b):

> The normal work day shall be eight (8) hours of work in a twenty-four (24) hour period. The hours of work shall be consecutive except when an unpaid lunch period is provided in accordance with prevailing practices.

However, prior to Sanger's announcement, his mechanical employees did not adhere to the letter of the quoted contract language.

I find from the testimony of employees Ray, Williams, and Powers that, prior to Sanger's announcement, No. 11 Coke Battery's mechanical employees, as a matter of practice, took a paid 30-minute period for lunch. Approximately 3 weeks before the posting of the notice quoted above, Mechanical Turn Foreman Kenneth Gearhart had admittedly instructed the No. 11 Coke Battery mechancial employees under his supervision to limit their lunch periods to 30 minutes between noon and 12:30 p.m. "until further notice." In view of Gearhart's instructions and the common practice of the mechanical employees, I find that Sanger, Gearhart's immediate supervisor, was at all times aware that his employees were enjoying 30-minute lunch periods prior to on or about July 20.

I find from the testimony of employees Ray, Williams, and Powers that, prior to Sanger's announcement and posted notice, the No. 11 Coke Battery's mechanical employees would regularly leave their respective work stations around 15 or 20 minutes before the termination of their shift and proceed to their locker room where they put away tools, washed up, changed clothes, and prepared to leave the plant.[8] Here again, the practice conformed to Foreman Gearhart's instructions to his employees.[9] As of the time of the hearing, the Company continued to implement the lunch hour and washup policies announced by Sanger in July.

[5] My findings regarding Gearhart's remark to O'Sullivan are based on the latter's testimony. Of the two, O'Sullivan impressed me as being the more conscientious toward his role as a witness. Gearhart required reminders on no less than four occasions that "uhm-hum" is not a word. On occasions he appeared to be evasive during cross-examination by counsel for the General Counsel. In any event, Gearhart did not flatly deny the remarks attributed to him by O'Sullivan.

[6] In pertinent part, Sec. 7 provides:

> Employees shall have the right to self-organization, to form, join, or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection . . . .

[7] The complaint did not include an allegation that Gearhart's threat violated Sec. 8(a)(1) of the Act. However, as I find that Gearhart's remark was closely related to the subject matter of the complaint and was fully litigated, my finding that it violated Sec. 8(a)(1) accords with Board policy. The Timken Company, 236 NLRB 757, 758 (1978).

[8] In his testimony, Sanger conceded that it was "entirely possible" that foremen had granted mechanical employees a washup time at the end of their shift. However, I find that, prior to or on or about July 20, No. 11 Coke Battery's mechanical employees openly took washup time and that Foreman Gearhart expressly instructed employees to do so. I have also considered the infirmities in Sanger's testimony, as discussed elsewhere in this Decision, which impaired the reliability of his testimony. From these circumstances, I find that, prior to July 20, he was aware that his employees regularly enjoyed a washup period.

Throughout July and August, No. 11 Coke Battery was in the final stage of its 3-year construction period. No. 11 began production on September 23. On August 20, the Company divided No. 11 Coke Battery's mechanical employees into thee-shifts. Prior to that date, all mechanical section employees of No. 11 Coke Battery worked on a day shift.[10] The notice of July 21, recited above, was the first notice posted in No. 11 Coke Battery regarding hours of work. Further, the Company has never issued any notice concerning that topic to any of No. 11's other sections.

The General Counsel contends that the Company reduced the lunch break and eliminated washup time for the mechanical employees of No. 11 Coke Battery because employees Dale Ray, Jack Johnson, and Irvin Williams were pressing their grievance. The Company denies this contention and urges that only "legitimate business purposes" motivated its decision to impose these strictures. I find ample evidence to support the General Counsel's contention.

No doubt the sudden reduction of their lunch period from 30 to 20 minutes and the elimination of washup time were unpleasant changes in the working conditions of No. 11 Coke Battery's mechanical employees, and that the source of these announcements was, as General Foreman Sanger suggests, a nexus between his earlier confrontation with No. 11 Coke Battery mechanical employee Dale Ray and these changes.

General Foreman Sanger had become displeased with the stated intention of No. 11 Coke Battery employees Ray, Johnson, and Williams to press their grievance. Sanger's hostility towards the pending grievance provoked him into seeking a confrontation with Ray on or about July 17. In that encounter, Sanger sought to persuade Ray that the grievance was unnecessary. When Sanger saw that his effort was failing, Sanger threatened to operate "by the book," and warned that it would "be much worse for [Ray] than it would be for him" if Sanger did so. Thus did Sanger's hostility provoke him to threaten Ray and his fellow employees with less pleasant working conditions if Ray and his colleagues pressed their grievance. Ray, Johnson, and Williams did not waiver in their determination to press the grievance.

Finally, the timing of Sanger's announcements strongly suggests that he was carrying out his unlawful threat. Thus, they came a little more than 2 days after he had voiced his threat to supervise his employees "by the book."

I find no merit in the Company's contention that Sanger imposed the limitation on lunch and eliminated washup time because of changed operating conditions in the No. 11 Coke Battery. For, No. 11 Coke Battery did not begin production until on or about September 23.[11] Further, the Company did not show any change in No. 11's startup operations prior to Sanger's announcements and notice to otherwise explain the restrictions he imposed.

In sum, I find that General Foreman Sanger's imposition of strictures upon the lunch and washup practices of the No. 11 Coke Battery mechanical employees was motivated by his hostility toward the pending grievance of employees Johnson, Williams, and Ray. I also find that the deduction of 30 minutes' pay from wages due mechanical employees of No. 11 Coke Battery on or about July 19 was also motivated by the same hostility.

By these strictures and the penalty the Company unlawfully interfered with its employees' Section 7 right to file a grievance with their collective-bargaining representative and thereby violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. The same conduct also constituted discrimination in violation of Section 8(a)(3) of the Act. General Motors Corporation, Packard Electric Division, 232 NLRB 335 (1977).

D. The Alleged Discriminatory Treatment of Dale Ray

1. The facts

During the week beginning July 21, employee Stephen Bechtel overheard Foreman Gearhart discussing the grievance filed by Dale Ray, Irvin Williams, and Jack Johnson. Gearhart described Dale Ray as "a union man agitator type." He referred to Williams as a follower and expressed curiosity as to why Johnson was involved.[12]

Dale Ray's name came up at or about the same time in connection with an unfair labor practice proceeding against the Company. The July/August issue of the Union's newspaper, Local 1010 Steelworkers at Inland Steel Company, contained the following article under a headline "Members Stick Up For Their Rights—Back Inland Down":

> Tom Zangrilli and Dale Ray of #4 BOF came to work one night with a stack of newspapers to pass out to any one who might be interested. Because these papers had a radical point of view, the guards refused to let Tom and Dale enter the plant with them. The two knew that any employee has a right to distribute literature relating to the union or union activities in non-working areas (canteen, locker rooms, lunch shanties, etc.) on non-working times (before and after work, lunch and coffee breaks).

[9] Ray testified that, prior to Sanger's notice, Foreman Gearhart had instructed the mechanical employees under his supervision to follow the washup practice. Gearhart testified that the only instructions he gave his employees about cleaning up was that they could police up their work areas beginning 10 minutes before the end of their shift. However, as I found Ray to be the more reliable witness, I have credited his testimony.

[10] The mechanical section is one of the seven sections constituting the No. 11 Coke Battery Department. As of January 15, 1979, No. 11 Coke Battery consisted of 380 hourly employees, 40 foremen, 7 general foremen, and 1 assistant superintendent. Sanger's mechanical section performs No. 11's maintenance. Its complement consists of 39 mechanics, 54 apprentices, and 14 foremen.

[11] I based this finding on the testimony of Company Superintendant McMorris.

[12] My findings regarding Gearhart's remarks are based on Bechtel's testimony. Gearhart did not deny making the remarks attributed to him by Bechtel.

> They refused to surrender their legal rights, and thus lost a day's pay.
> The Supreme Court affirmed employees' rights to distribute union literature on company property. The rulings upheld findings by two lower courts against a Time Inc. subsidiary and Beth Israel Hospital of Boston. In both cases, the Justices relied on long standing rulings that off-duty workers can solicit for a union except in "special circumstances" and can hand out literature in non-working areas.
> They took the matter to the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB). This is the federal agency in charge of administering the federal labor laws (not to be confused with the Inland Steel's Department of "Labor Relations.") The NLRB said the Company was wrong and Inland was ordered to pay all time lost with interest. A notice of this and the regulations governing distribution of literature must be posted by the Company where everyone can see it.
> Unless the Company appeals this decision and it is overturned by the Court (a highly likely possibility see article above) we can assume that they will not recognize our right to distribute union related literature in the plant.

The decision referred to in the quoted article was Administrative Law Judge Blackburn's decision in Inland Steel Company, Case 13-CA-16952.

On an occasion during the last 2 weeks of July, after Ray had received a copy of the Union's newspaper and after his conversation with Sanger, No. 11 Coke Battery's superintendent, Charles E. McMorris, summoned Ray to his office.[13] General Foreman Sanger had by this time described Ray to McMorris as the "spokesman" for the grieving employees. When Ray presented himself, McMorris showed him a copy of the Union's newspaper containing the quoted article. Although McMorris said he had seen the article, he asked Ray to summarize it. Ray explained that the article discussed a Board case concerned with distribution of literature in nonworking plant areas during nonworking time. McMorris asked what Dale meant by "nonworking areas and nonworking time." Dale explained that he meant "in the locker room before and after work and in the lunch room during the lunch break."

The two then joined issue on the question of distribution of literature. McMorris complained that the distribution of literature in the employees' locker room created a "very bad litter problem." He said he hoped that Ray would attempt some other means of communicating with his fellow employees. Ray expressed displeasure at employees who threw literature on the floor. However, he insisted that, if he believed there were a need for such distribution, he would do so and McMorris would be obliged to solve the litter problem. McMorris then focused his attention upon Ray's motive for distributing literature. McMorris said that Ray should not use his working hours at the plant in an attempt "to change people's ideas about the Union." Ray asserted that he knew what he was being paid for and that he also knew his rights, and that McMorris need not worry that Ray would exceed those rights. Ray added that he intended to use the rights. McMorris acknowledged Ray's rights but cautioned that if Ray exceeded those rights that he, McMorris, would have to do something about it.

McMorris drew Ray's attention to the current collective-bargaining agreement stating that he considered it to be "law," and that he adhered to it "to the letter." Ray responded that he also adhered to the contract. McMorris went on to explain how the Company had won a grievance against the Union at the arbitration stage which he, McMorris, had pressed. Ray asked McMorris if that were all that McMorris wanted to talk to him about, and McMorris responded yes, unless Ray had some other matter to raise.

Ray asked McMorris if it were possible to settle the pending grievance. McMorris rejected the suggestion on the ground that he believed that the matter should be taken through the grievance procedure. At this, the conversation broke off and Ray left McMorris' office.

On July 28, the grievance reached step one when General Foreman Sanger and the Union's official griever, employee J. Freeman, discussed the matter of a supervisor doing unit work. Thereafter, on August 7, Sanger decided to resolve the grievance by admitting that a supervisor had performed bargaining unit work, assuring the employees that a repetition of this infraction would not occur, and agreeing to make grieving employees Ray, Johnson, and Williams whole for their loss of wages. The Union accepted Sanger's resolution of the grievance.

Two hours before the conversation with McMorris, Foreman Alfred Hernandez assigned Ray to wash a Grove mobile crane with soap and water. Present at the time Hernandez gave Ray this instruction, were four or five mechanical employees including Mike Baculla. Dale Ray questioned Hernandez' instructions and reminded him that Baculla had washed the machine on the previous day. Hernandez responded that soap had not been available when Baculla washed the Grove on the previous day and that it was available now. Ray insisted that there was only "mill dirt" on the crane and expressed doubt that further washing would improve its appearance. Hernandez insisted that Ray wash the crane adding that "they" wanted Ray to wash it. Ray asked who Hernandez was referring to but received no response except direction to perform the work. As a matter of practice, prior to this incident, the crane's operators were responsible for washing it. Prior to Hernandez' assignment of that task to Ray the latter had not operated the Grove.[14]

On the day after Dale Ray's confrontation with Superintendent McMorris, Foreman Gearhart assigned[15] Ray

[13] My findings regarding Ray's conversation with McMorris are based on Ray's and McMorris' testimony.

[14] My findings regarding the confrontation between Hernandez and Ray are based on Ray's testimony. Of the two, Ray seemed to have the more vivid recollection.

[15] Gearhart testified that he made the assignment on his own initiative in early July. Gearhart also testified that he made the assignment in part because Ray could not operate mobile equipment due to his vision. I also find from Stephen Bechtel's testimony that, before Ray began rustproofto rustproofing some small steel blocks. Gearhart made the assignment at 7 o'clock that morning, instructing Ray to accompany him to the No. 11 Coke Battery's shop area, where the steel blocks were located. Gearhart instructed Ray to use a 1-inch paint brush to apply the compound from a 55-gallon drum. Gearhart instructed Ray to perform this task in an area of the shop where he would be by himself and where the floor was clear.

At the time Sanger made the assignment, Ray had been a mechanic for 2 years. Prior to that, he had undergone an apprenticeship at the Company's plant. In sum, Ray had been in the Company's employ for approximately 5-1/2 years.

There were other employees of lesser skill employed in No. 11 Coke Battery at the time of Ray's assignment. Apprentices and laborers were in its work force. The laborers were the lowest paid employees in the department. Ray and his fellow mechanics were among the most highly paid employees in No. 11 Coke Battery.

From late July 1978 until the middle of January 1979, Ray was assigned to rustproofing. First he covered steel blocks and later spare parts. He rustproofed two different types of blocks. The first was a rectangular block with a hole that had tap threads. He rustproofed approximately 4,000 of that variety. He also rustproofed 6,000 rectangular blocks, each of which had a round piece welded to it. In the course of this assignment, Ray heard fellow employees refer to him as "Rusty Jones."

Ray conceded that rustproofing was part of a mechanic's work. However, he also credibly testified that, while rustproofing is part of a mechanic's job, assignment to that task for a 5-month period was extraordinary. Indeed, his was the only incident of such an assignment that he knew of.

Other witnesses considered Ray's assignment to be abnormally long. James Lanigan, who had been in the Company's employ for approximately 4 years at the time of the hearing, and had been in No. 11 Coke Battery since March 1978, considered the length of Dale's assignment to rustproofing to have been unusual for a mechanic. Lanigan was not aware of another mechanic or apprentice mechanic in No. 11 Coke Battery ever having been assigned to rustproofing for more than 1 week at a time.

Mechanic Jack Johnson, an employee of No. 11 Coke Battery since June 1, and a company employee for 4 years, was not aware of any No. 11 Coke Battery mechanic, aside from Dale Ray, who had been assigned to rustproofing for 5 months or longer. Further, based on his experience of 4 years with the Company, he considered Ray's assignment to be unusual.

Irvin Williams, who at the time of the hearing had been a company employee for 3-1/2 years and had been employed in No. 11 Coke Battery for approximately 14 months as a welder, was not aware of any employee at No. 11 Coke Battery, other than Dale Ray, who had ever been assigned to do rustproofing for 5 months or longer. Nor was he aware of any employee of No. 11 Coke Battery who had been assigned to do rustproofing for more than a month at a time. Employee Wayne Powers, who at the time of the hearing had been employed by the Company for 7 years and worked in No. 11 Coke Battery as a mechanical apprentice for approximately 1 year, was not aware of any mechanic, other than Ray, whom the Company had assigned to do painting in No. 11 Coke Battery for 5 months or longer. Nor was he aware of any other mechanic or apprentice mechanic other than Ray who, as of the time of the hearing, had been assigned to do painting in No. 11 Coke Battery for 1 month or longer. He was not aware of a mechanic or apprentice mechanic other than Dale Ray who was assigned to do painting for more than 1 week in No. 11 Coke Battery. Finally, he testified credibly that Dale Ray's assignment of rustproofing was not a normal assignment.

The Company unsuccessfully attempted to show that Ray's assignment was considered favorably by No. 11 Coke Battery employees. General Foreman Sanger, Foremen Gearhart, Hernandez, and Johnson testified that employees inquired about obtaining Dale Ray's rustproofing assignment or similar work. However, Gearhart and Johnson punctuated their testimony in this regard with smiles and chuckles. Hernandez testified that he did not reply to employees Dale Hamilton and Richard Bailey. Sanger testified that he received similar inquiries from employees Jack Johnson and Dale Hamilton. However, employees Hamilton and Johnson both testified that they did not want to do rustproofing. Initially the Company's testimony suffers from the infirmity of being hearsay. However, the sarcastic demeanor of witnesses Gearhart and Johnson as they testified and the credible testimony of two current employees, Hamilton and Johnson, strongly suggested that Ray's fellow employees were not in fact envious of him.

On approximately six occasions between July 1978 and mid-January 1979, Dale Ray received brief assignments to handle mechanical breakdowns. However, he spent 90 to 95 percent of his time rustproofing. When Ray took a 2-week vacation during the last part of October and the first days of November, the Company assigned no one to perform the rustproofing.

On the day that Foreman Gearhart first assigned Ray to rustproofing, employee James Lanigan began to assist in the work. Lanigan had no definite work assignment and had been instructed by his immediate supervisor to assist employees who might need help. Lanigan chose to help Ray.

Approximately 20 minutes after Lanigan began assisting Ray, Gearhart approached. He inquired why Lanigan was assisting Ray. Upon hearing the explanation, ing, Gearhart with a chuckle took credit for devising "a good job for Mr. Ray." However, Sanger testified that it was his decision to assign Ray to rustproofing. I am doubtful of Sanger's recollection of the time of his decision which, in his testimony, he shifted from late June or July to early July or mid-July. I also rejected, as unreliable, Foreman Lawrence Johnson's speculation that Ray began rustproofing in late May. I have accepted Dale Ray's recollection of the timing of the assignment. His convincing testimony was corroborated by O'Sullivan and Foreman Hernandez.

As for the issue of who decided to make the assignment, I have accepted Sanger's admission. Of the two, he appeared more concerned than was Gearhart about Ray's grievance activity. By the time of the assignment Sanger had already evidenced his concern by imposing reprisals upon the mechanical employees. Further, of the two, Sanger seemed more at ease as he frankly took credit for the decision.

Gearhart directed Lanigan to seek another assignment.[16] For the next 2 months, Ray received no help in rustproofing. hereafter, on two or three occasions, the Company assigned an apprentice, for 1 day, to help Ray rustproof spare parts.

Foreman Gearhart also prevented other employees from coming in contact with Ray during the months of rustproofing. In the first month of this assignment, Ray overheard Gearhart on several occasions order employee Jack Johnson, who was either moving towards Ray's area or standing nearby, not to talk to Ray.[17] Gearhart issued a similar warning to employee Wayne Powers.[18] In each instance, Gearhart threatened to send the employee home if the employee violated the order.

Gearhart also issued warnings to employees Williams and O'Sullivan regarding their contacts with Ray. Out of Ray's presence, Gearhart told Williams to stay away from Ray, warning that Ray would "get Williams in trouble." Gearhart issued a similar injunction to employee O'Sullivan, also out of Ray's hearing.

On another occasion in August, Gearhart approached O'Sullivan at the plant after the latter had returned from Ray's end of the shop. After "shaking his finger like a parent," he warned O'Sullivan: "I don't want you down there talking to that man anymore. You're not supposed to talk to him." O'Sullivan protested: "I haven't been told that since I was out of grade school. My parents don't even have to tell me who I can or who I can't talk to anymore." Gearhart pointed his shaking finger at Dale Ray during this exchange. Prior to this encounter O'Sullivan had been talking to Ray for approximately one minute about O'Sullivan's recent vacation.[19]

Gearhart's instruction to employees Johnson, Williams, and O'Sullivan were unique. None of the three had ever before received instructions from company supervision to cease talking to, or remain away from, a fellow employee. Dale Ray also never heard a company supervisor give such instructions to employees regarding another employee.

Four or 5 weeks after Ray began rustproofing, he suggested a change in the procedure to General Foreman Sanger. Ray suggested taking the boxes in which the steel blocks were stored, putting a drain on them and a lid and filling the boxes with oil to prevent the blocks from rusting. Sanger rejected that process saying it would be too messy and that he wanted the blocks rustproofed with a brush.

In September, Ray complained to General Foreman Sanger about "rustproofing all the time." Ray asked why the Company could not employ an apprentice or laborer to do that work in view of the shortage of mechanics at No. 11 Coke Battery. Sanger responded that Ray had received the assignment because he was a mechanic and thus did not need constant supervision. Ray went on to complain that whenever he looked up from his work "there was a foreman standing over me or harassing me about something." Sanger denied being aware of such conduct by supervisors. Ray asked how long the rustproofing assignment would last. Sanger replied he did not know and that it could last "indefinitely." At this the conversation broke off.[20]

On the following day, the Company posted a shift schedule for No. 11 Coke Battery's mechanics covering the first week of October. The schedule showed that Ray was transferred from the day shift to the midnight shift. Thereafter, Ray worked on the midnight shift for only 1 week. The Company returned Ray to the day shift where he remained until the middle of February 1979. While assigned to the midnight shift, Dale Ray continued to perform rustproofing. To his knowledge no one continued his work on the day shift while he was on the midnight shift.

On or about December 2, Foreman Riggsby directed Ray to apply an undercoating paint to the storage loft located over the carpenters' area in No. 11 Coke Battery's mechanical shop. Ray balked at this assignment telling Riggsby that he did not believe that it was "a mechanic's job" and refused to perform the work. Riggsby told Ray to discuss the matter with General Foreman Sanger.

Ray immediately presented himself in General Foreman Sanger's office, where he complained that the assignment he had received from Riggsby was not a mechanic's work. In the exchange which followed, Ray suggested that the work be assigned to a painter or laborer. Sanger asked if Ray was refusing to do the work and Ray conceded that he was, whereupon Sanger sent Ray home.

On the following day, Ray reported for work. He met Supervisor Riggsby who asked, "Are you ready to paint the loft?" Ray again refused. Whereupon Riggsby moved Ray's timecard out of his pocket, punched it, and directed Ray to go home.

Ray did not report to work on December 4. Instead, he went to the Board's Chicago office where he filed an unfair labor practice charge in the instant case.

As a result of Ray's refusal to perform the assigned paint job on December 2 and 3, the Company issued two disciplinary statements to him on December 4. In addition, Ray lost pay for December 2, 3, and an additional 8 hours on December 14. After December 4, Dale returned to work and painted the loft, a job which required until the middle of January 1979.[21]

I also find from Ray's testimony that at the end of May 1979 Foreman Lawrence Johnson, a shift foreman assigned to No. 11 Coke Battery, disclosed to Ray that General Foreman Sanger had scolded Johnson on those occasions when Johnson had relieved Ray of rustproofing to perform mechanical breakdown work. Johnson also disclosed that the reason Sanger was irked by Johnson's actions was because Superintendent McMorris wanted Ray to perform the rustproofing and nothing else.

[16] My findings regarding Gearhart's encounter with employee Lanigan are based on Ray's and Lanigan's testimony which was largely corroborated by Gearhart.

[17] My findings regarding this incident are based on Dale Ray's and Jack Johnson's testimony.

[18] I based my findings regarding Powers' encounter with Gearhart on Ray's and Powers' testimony.

[19] My findings regarding Gearhart's encounters with Williams and O'Sullivan are based on Williams' and O'Sullivan's testimony.

[20] Ray's detailed version of this conversation is largely corroborated by Sanger. However, Sanger seemed to gloss over the encounter and was not careful to remember details. I have, therefore, credited Dale Ray's version.

[21] My findings regarding the storage loft painting assignment are based on Ray's testimony and the Company's records.

2. Analysis and conclusions

There is much to show that prior to Dale Ray's assignment to rustproofing his superiors manifested annoyance at the grievance that he and two other employees had filed, and at the Board's decision indicating his right and the right of another employee to distribute union literature at the plant. Significantly, No. 11 Coke Battery's supervision considered Ray the leader of the grieving trio, and something of a union agitator.

General Foreman Sanger directed his animus at Ray to persuade him to withdraw the grievance. Sanger threatened reprisals against Ray's fellow employees and warned that it would "be worse for Ray" than it would be for Sanger if Sanger retaliated against the grievance. Ray remained steadfast in his intent to press the grievance.

Superintendent McMorris gave vent to his feelings by bluntly warning Ray to take care lest he go too far with his Section 7 right to distribute union literature and seek employee support for his union sentiment. McMorris also warned that he would run No. 11 Coke Battery strictly according to the contract. Ray insisted that he intended to exercise fully his Section 7 rights.

That Sanger imposed more onerous conditions on No. 11 Coke Battery's mechanical employees by truncating their lunch period and eliminating their washup time revealed his and the Company's willingness to resort to unlawful punishment when confronted with employees exercising their right to enforce a collective-bargaining agreement. These reprisals together with Foreman Johnson's disclosure suggest that Sanger and McMorris would not shrink from using a work assignment to punish a leading employee advocate of the Union and contract enforcement.

The opportunity to punish Dale Ray resoundingly appeared in the form of a lengthy menial job; 10,000 steel blocks needing rustproofing. Sanger admittedly seized this opportunity. The assignment to rustproof steel blocks and then spare parts for a total of 5-1/2 months was usual. The attempt to isolate Ray while he was thus engaged is further evidence of Sanger's and McMorris' punitive attitude. The chuckles of supervisors as they testified that other employees sought the same work reflect the tedium and unpleasant nature of the work. In September, when Ray complained to Sanger about the rustproofing, the general foreman responded. He transferred Ray to the midnight shift for 1 week. Finally, in December Sanger found one last opportunity to punish Ray. Well aware of Ray's resentment, Sanger assigned him to rustproofing a storage loft. In sum, I find strong support for the General Counsel's contention that the Company's treatment of Dale Ray ran afoul of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

However, I am not persuaded that the General Counsel has established a prima facie case showing that the Company violated Section 8(a)(4) and (1) of the Act. For, in his remarks to Ray, McMorris made no reference to Ray's participation in the Board proceeding in Case 13-CA-16592. Nor was there any reference in any of Sanger's remarks or in any other supervisor's remarks to Ray's role in that case. All of Superintendent McMorris' remarks focused on the limitations on Ray's right to distribute union literature and talk about his union sentiment during working hours at the plant.

To establish a violation of Section 8(a)(4) of the Act the record must show that the Company's discrimination against employee Ray was "because he has filed charges or given testimony under this Act." I find no such showing has been made. Accordingly, I shall recommend dismissal of the allegation that by its treatment of Ray the Company also violated Section 8(a)(4) of the Act.

The Company urges that its assignment of work to Dale Ray was free of unlawful motive. General Foreman Sanger, the management official who made these assignments to Ray, offered explanation of Ray's unusual treatment. However, I find Sanger's testimony casts serious doubt upon the Company's proffered defense.

Shifts in Sanger's testimony suggest a hasty improvision. He first testified that he chose Ray for rustproofing at the time that No. 11 Coke Battery's maintenance employees began going on shift work. However, at a later point in his testimony, Sanger testified that he assigned Dale Ray to do rustproofing before the mechanical employees began shift work. The record shows the mechanics in Sanger's section began shift work on August 20. According to Sanger's later testimony his decision was made "toward the latter part of June or first of July." Sanger also admitted that he was on vacation during the last week of June and at least through July 4.

I do not credit Sanger's explanation that he chose Dale Ray without knowledge of his qualifications other than that he was a mechanic, and that, for the latter reason, he and his foremen decided that Ray required only "a very minimum amount of supervision" and therefore was more suited to the assignment than an apprentice mechanic. Dale Ray Joined the No. 11 Coke Battery in March and his assignment to rustproofing came no less than 4 months later. I find it difficult to credit Sanger's testimony that by that time all he knew about Ray was that he was a mechanic. Moreover, the Company's records reveal that, on May 31 and June 30, No. 11 Coke Battery employed 8 mechanics and, that by July 31 this number increased to 22. Thus, it appears that the Company had at least seven other mechanics to chose from. Absent from Sanger's testimony is any specific comparison of Ray with the other No. 11 Coke Battery mechanics. A further infirmity in Sanger's testimony was his reluctance to characterize rustproofing. When counsel for the General Counsel asked him whether he would describe the application of rustproofing with a paint brush as a skilled job, Sanger's initial answer was: "I'm sure that some of your unions would describe that as a skilled job, yeah." When pressed again, Sanger answered, "I really don't know how to answer that." When reminded of his experience at Inland Steel and the fact that he was a supervisor of foremen in No. 11 Coke Battery, Sanger finally answered: "I would say semi-skill."

Nor am I satisfied with Sanger's explanation as to why he did not employ an apprentice mechanic to perform the work assigned to Ray. According to Sanger, he did not choose an apprentice to do the job on the ground that he and his foremen wanted to provide them with "as much exposure as possible in the fastest possible time to a coke battery." However, the startup date of the battery was September 23, almost 2 months after Sanger assigned the rustproofing to Dale Ray. This circumstance suggested that the apprentice mechanics of No. 11 Coke Battery did not have the desired opportunity to observe No. 11 Coke Battery in operation at the time Sanger selected Dale Ray. Further, there were no training classes for the mechanics in No. 11 Coke Battery. Nor was there any training material regarding the startup of the coke battery. In sum, I find Sanger's explanation regarding the failure to select an apprentice other than Dale Ray lacking in substance.

Further, the Company made no attempt to explain why it could not relieve Ray of the tedium of painting 10,000 steel blocks and an unknown number of spare parts by rotating the job among the mechanical employees under Sanger's supervision. Nor was there any explanation for Sanger's refusal to relieve Ray of the tedium of the rustproofing work in September, when Ray complained.

Finally, Sanger's excuse for his assignment of Ray to the midnight shift on the week of October 1 does not withstand scrutiny. According to Sanger, he needed three employees to replace two employees who were absent from the midnight shift. The two absent employees were involved in the mechanical maintenance of No. 11 Coke Battery. Two of the three replacements filled in for the two absent employees, the third replacement, Dale Ray, performed only rustproofing. The unanswered question is why Dale Ray had to do rustproofing on the midnight shift instead of the day shift.

In sum, I find the Company's explanation of its treatment of Dale Ray fatally lacking in substance. The absence of a plausible explanation leaves unrebutted the strong evidence of unlawful motive recited above. I therefore find that the selection of Dale Ray to perform rustproofing on the steel blocks, the spare parts, and the storage loft was calculated to cause Dale Ray discomfort, deprive him of job satisfaction, and finally, to provoke him into refusing a work assignment. The Company meted out this harsh treatment to Ray because of his stubborn insistence upon pressing the grievance and his stated determination to distribute literature regarding union activity on the premises, under the limitations carved out by Board law. I find, therefore, that by this treatment, including the disciplinary letters and loss of pay imposed upon Ray for his refusal to paint the loft, the Company violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Inland Steel Company is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. Local 1010, United Steelworkers of America, AFL–CIO, is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. The Company violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by threatening its employees with more rigid working conditions because they engaged in the protected concerted activity of filing and pursuing a grievance under a collective-bargaining agreement between the Company and the Union.

4. The Company violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act by reducing the lunch break and eliminating the washup time for the mechanical maintenance employees of No. 11 Coke Battery, because fellow employees were pressing a grievance under a collective-bargaining agreement between the Company and the Union.

5. By assigning employee Dale Ray to perform rustproofing and painting work, and by assigning him to the midnight shift for a 1-week period, all because he engaged in union activity, including the distribution of literature on company premises and the pressing of a grievance under a collective-bargaining agreement, the Company violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

6. The aforesaid unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

7. The Company has not otherwise violated the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that the Company has engaged in and is engaging in unfair labor practices, I shall recommend that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and take affirmative action necessary to effectuate the purposes of the Act. I shall also recommend that the Company be ordered to restore the lunch period provided for the mechanical employees of No. 11 Coke Battery to 30 minutes, and that it restore to those same employees the 15-minute washup period provided prior to on or about July 21, 1978. I shall also recommend that the Company be ordered to make whole all mechanical employees of No. 11 Coke Battery who suffered loss of wages because they left their work area and took a 15-minute washup period on or about July 20, 1978. I shall also order the Company to make employee Dale Ray whole for the wages lost by reason of his refusal to perform painting on December 2 and 3, 1978, and to expunge from his personnel records all copies of the disciplinary letters the Company issued to him for such refusal. Interest on the backpay provided herein shall be computed in accordance with the Board policy described in Isis Plumbing & Heating Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962), and Florida Steel Corporation, 231 NLRB 651 (1977).

Upon the foregoing findings of fact, conclusions of law, and upon the entire record and pursuant to Section 10(c) of the Act, I hereby issue the following recommended:

ORDER[22]

The Respondent, Inland Steel Company, East Chicago, Indiana, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

---

[22] In the event no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Rules and Regulations of the National Labor Relations Board, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order herein shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules and Regulations, be adopted by the Board and become its findings, conclusions, and Order and all objections thereto shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Threatening employees with more rigid working conditions because they seek to vindicate a collective-bargaining agreement by pressing grievances or by other concerted activity protected by Section 7 of the Act.

(b) Reducing lunch breaks, eliminating washup time, or otherwise imposing more onerous conditions of employment on employees because their fellow employees are processing a grievance under a collective-bargaining agreement between the Company and Local 1010, United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO, or any other labor organization.

(c) Discouraging the filing and processing of grievances under a collective-bargaining agreement or other union activity on behalf of Local 1010, United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO, or any other labor organization, by discriminating against its employees in the assignment or scheduling of work or by other changes in wages, hours, or conditions of employment.

(d) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action which is deemed necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Rescind General Foreman Robert Sanger's announcement of on or about July 20, 1978, and his published statement of rules regarding lunch periods and hours of employment which was posted on or about July 21, 1978, in No. 11 Coke Battery and restore to the mechanical employees of that department their practices regarding lunch hours and washup time as they existed prior to July 21, 1978.

(b) Remove all disciplinary warnings and rescind all money penalties and other disciplinary action imposed on the mechanical maintenance employees of No. 11 Coke Battery, who on or about July 20, 1978, exercised their established practice of taking a 15-minute washup period at the end of their shift.

(c) Make whole the employees who suffered loss of pay on or about July 20, 1978, because they took a 15-minute washup period at the end of their shift in the manner set forth for loss of earnings in the section of this Decision entitled "The Remedy."

(d) Remove and expunge the two disciplinary warnings issued to employee Dale Ray on December 4, 1978, and make him whole for any loss of pay he may have suffered as a result of his refusal to perform painting on December 2 and 3, 1978, in the manner set forth for loss of earnings in the section of this Decision entitled "The Remedy."

(e) Preserve and, upon request, make available to the Board or its agents, for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amounts of backpay due under the terms of this recommended Order.

(f) Post at its East Chicago, Indiana, plant copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix B."[23] Copies of said notices on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 13, after being duly signed by the Company's representative, shall be posted by the Company immediately upon receipt thereof and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Company to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(g) Notify the Regional Director for Region 13, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that that portion of the amended complaint which alleges that the Company violated Section 8(a)(4) of the Act be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

[23] In the event that this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

Arnold Ready Mix Corporation and Terry L. Montgomery. Case 14-CA-14741

November 9, 1981

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND HUNTER

On August 28, 1981, Administrative Law Judge John C. Miller issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, the General Counsel filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings, and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order as modified herein.[1]

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge, as modified below, and hereby orders that the Respondent, Arnold eady Mix Corporation, Imperial, Missouri, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the said recommended Order, as so modified:

Add the following as paragraph 2:

"2. Take the following affirmative action which is necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act:

"(a) Post at its facility in Imperial, Missouri, copies of the attached notice marked 'Appendix.'[6] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 14, after being duly signed by Respondent's representative, shall be posted by Respondent immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

"(b) Notify the Regional Director for Region 14, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps have been taken to comply herewith."

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

JOHN C. MILLER, Administrative Law Judge: The hearing in this case was held in St. Louis, Missouri, on May 12, 1981. Respondent is alleged to have violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended. The 8(a)(1) allegations primarily involve comments that an individual had been discharged for supporting the union and that he had forfeited his seniority even though reinstated. With respect to the 8(a)(3) allegations, it is alleged that Respondent discharged employee Terry Montgomery and refused to reinstate him because he engaged in union activity and/or protected concerted activity, including the filing of workman's compensation claims against Respondent. At a hearing before me, the parties were offered the opportunity to adduce evidence to support the respective positions. Upon the record as a whole, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

It is alleged and admitted that Respondent, Arnold Ready Mix Corporation (Respondent) is, and was at all times material herein, a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the State of Missouri. Respondent has maintained its principal office and place of business at Highway 61-67 in Imperial, Missouri. Respondent was at all times engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of ready-mixed concrete and related products. During the fiscal year ending May 31, 1980, Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business operations at its Imperial place of business, manufactured, sold, and distributed products valued in excess of $500,000 of which products valued in excess of $50,000 were shipped from said place of business directly to points located outside the State of Missouri. On the basis of the above-admitted facts, I find that Respondent is, and was at all times material herein, an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

Local 30, Industrial Miscellaneous Workers Union (the Union) is, and has been at all times material herein, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

II. ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. 8(a)(1) Allegations

Paragraph 5 of the complaint alleges a number of 8(a)(1) violations. Paragraph 5(a) of the complaint alleges that Respondent's owner, Robert Smerker, threatened an employee with reprisals because employees had filed grievances against Respondent pursuant to the collective-bargaining agreement in effect between Respondent and the Union. Paragraph 5(b) alleges that sometime during November 1980[1] Respondent's co-owner, Charles Smerker, Sr., told employees that another employee, who had been discharged and subsequently reinstated, had been discharged for advocating the Union and had forfeited his seniority when reinstated.

[1] The General Counsel excepts solely to the Administrative Law Judge's inadvertent failure to include in his recommended Order provisions requiring Respondent to take affirmative action to remedy the violation found. We find merit in the General Counsel's exceptions and shall modify the Administrative Law Judge's recommended Order accordingly.

[6] "In the event that this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading 'Posted by Order of the National labor Relations Board' shall read 'Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board.'

With reference to the 8(a)(1) allegations and paragraph 5(a) of the complaint, Don Carter, union steward on the job at Arnold Ready Mix, testified that on October 3, he filed a grievance with Arnold Ready Mix and that shortly thereafter he had a conversation with Bob Smerker about the grievance. At that time, Smerker made threats to him, telling him that if employees kept filing grievances like this, he could always assign them to bad jobs and make sure they got bad references. The grievance apparently concerned Respondent's use of relatives as employees while other members of the Local were laid off and not working.[2] Bob Smerker who testified at length did not contradict Carter's testimony; in fact, he never commented on this portion of Carter's testimony. I credit Carter to the extent that Bob Smerker made two veiled threats to give employees reprisals for filing grievances concerning Respondent's practice of utilizing relatives as employees when other union members were out of work.

With respect to paragraph 5(b) of the complaint, Carter further testified that at a later point, sometime before December 5, 1980, he was in the drivers' room at the plant when Charlie Smerker finished a telephone call and commented to him that Terry Montgomery was back at the Labor Board. Smerker allegedly then stated that Montgomery had lost his seniority when he was fired the last time for trying to get the Union in. Charles Smerker denied making such comments with respect to this conversation concerning Montgomery. Smerker further testified that he was out of work because of a rupture for 3 to 4 weeks prior to December 5. Thus, in this situation I find it quite impossible and do not credit Carter's testimony that Charlie Smerker told Carter that Montgomery had lost his seniority when Respondent attempted to fire him the last time for getting the Union in.

I find, therefore, that Bob Smerker did make the comments alleged in paragraph 5(a); namely, that in the event of future grievance filing, employees would receive bad assignments and if they left they would get bad references from Respondent. With respect to the latter part of the 8(a)(1) allegations which involved Montgomery, I credit Charlie Smerker and find that he did not make the statement that Montgomery had been previously discharged and had lost seniority when subsequently rehired for advocating the Union. Accordingly, I find that Bob Smerker's response to the filing of the group grievance on October 3 was to threaten that reprisals would be taken against those employees continuing to file such grievances. I find this to be violative of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

B. Section 8(a)(3) Allegations

Section 8(a)(3) allegations are contained in paragraph 6 of the complaint. Paragraph 6 alleges that Respondent discharged employee Terry Montgomery on or about December 5 because Montgomery engaged in union activity and/or protected concerted activity, including the filing of a workman's compensation claim against Respondent.

At the time of his discharge, Terry Montgomery had been employed by Respondent to drive a concrete truck and to do general maintenance work since April 1978. In November 1979, Local 30, Industrial Miscellaneous Workers Union began organizing Respondent's employees. At this time Montgomery signed a union card. He acknowledged that he did not distribute any literature but stated that he had secured signed union authorization cards from other employees.[3]

Counsel for the General Counsel introduced, over the objections of Respondent's counsel, evidence of a prior settlement involving an alleged discriminatory discharge in November 1979. While I have admitted it, much of this is background material and I am not utilizing it as a basis for any findings of an unfair labor practice within the 10(b) period. To the extent that it may reflect antiunion animus, I have considered it. In this settlement, Montgomery had received a backpay settlement of $370 and had been reinstated to his job. Respondent claimed that this alleged discriminatory discharge was really a discharge stemming from costly damage to two of Respondent's trucks in which Montgomery was directly involved: one incident involved a broken crankshaft and the other a burned out engine due to a leak in a radiator hose.

With respect to the former incident, Robert Smerker testified that he talked with the representative of the manufacturer of that diesel engine who had informed him that the only way the crankshaft could have been broken was for the driver to be free wheeling, that is, driving without the gears being engaged, and then suddenly engaging the transmission at a higher speed then the motor was capable of taking. Montgomery testified that to his knowledge that was the only time they had had a crankshaft broken on that type of diesel engine. With respect to the latter incident where the engine got overheated, Montgomery was driving a truck and attempting to break in a new driver. Apparently after delivering some concrete, the truck had driven over something that had torn a hole in the hose and, as a result, all the water had leaked out of the radiator. The engine overheated and all the water ran out, causing the entire engine to be overhauled. Although Montgomery correctly claimed that the pressure guage was not operational, Robert Smerker stated that it is the responsibility of the driver, not the driver trainee, to make sure that the truck has been thoroughly checked.

[1] All dates hereafter will refer to 1980, unless otherwise specified.

[2] Carter also testified that there had been a continuing conflict between the Union and Respondent because of this practice.

[3] I credit his testimony only to the extent that he got signed union cards after his discharge in November 1979 and not before this time as indicated in his November 16, 1979, Board affidavit. (Resp. Exh. 1).

It does appear that Montgomery had a history of improperly handling the Company's equipment. I credit Robert Smerker that the crankshaft could only have been broken because of Montgomery's negligence in driving the truck. In any event, these incidents which occurred in 1979 and early 1980 did not trigger Montgomery's discharge on December 10, 1980. The letter of dismissal, dated December 10, did not mention the broken crankshaft or the burned out engine. Consequently, while they serve to exemplify Montgomery's background as an employee, I do not consider them significant in determining whether his discharge was based on legitimate grounds or was discriminatorily motivated.

Montgomery acknowledged that he was working from April 26–30 when he injured his ankle, and that he was off work thereafter from the period of May 1 through September 5. With regard to this ankle injury on April 30, Montgomery testified that he filed a workmen's compensation claim and apparently received benefits under such claim until he received the medical release on or about September 5. While Respondent was not directly involved in the workmen's compensation claim other than to verify the facts surrounding it, Respondent does ultimately pay a higher workman's compensation based on the experience rating an employer gets. However, the award itself is paid by workman's compensation and did not directly involve Respondent.

On September 5, Montgomery received a medical release from his doctor. On September 25, he took such release in to Darrell Richardson, office manager of Respondent. Richardson said that he would accept the medical release but that he had no work for Montgomery at that time. It is not disputed that due to a fall off in the whole building industry there was less demand for concrete and that where Respondent had formerly employed some 20 drivers, it was only employing some 8 to 9 drivers in late 1980. Also Richardson credibly testified that Respondent's output in cubic yards of concrete had dropped 62 percent over that of the prior year.

Montgomery further testified credibly that he filed a grievance against Respondent on October 3 because he was not being assigned to any work. There was a meeting about this grievance in the latter part of October in Local 30's office and although it was presumably going to the second step, the grievance was apparently not resolved. It was on December 5 that Montgomery was recalled to work and became involved in incidents which Respondent claims led to his discharge.

On December 11, Montgomery received a letter (G.C. Exh. 2), dated December 10 from Darrell Richardson, Respondent's office manager, advising him that he was terminated. The letter contained six paragraphs in length and listed several reasons for his termination, including three incidents which occurred on December 5. The dismissal letter stated that on December 5 Montgomery had backed his truck into another truck; had left his truck unattended without the drum turning, resulting in the customer's refusing the material because it had started to set whereupon the entire load of 6 cubic yards of concrete had to be dumped; and he had failed to drain the truck's water tank, failed to leave the valves open, and failed to bring in the water hose as per posted instructions. The letter also stated that several customers expressed concern for the safety of the employees when Montgomery was backing the truck into the job and that some customers had requested that he not be sent to their jobs.

Montgomery testified that while it was true that he had not taken the water hose in, he claimed that he had drained his water tank and left his valves open on the night of December 5. He also acknowledged that on the same day he had backed into another truck on the plantsite, but that no damage was caused to either vehicle. Montgomery also stated that to his knowledge he had received no complaints from customers about his driving, had never been suspended, had never been reprimanded, and, except for the prior alleged discriminatory discharge in November 1979, had never been discharged.

As to the loss of 6 yards of concrete, Montgomery testified that on December 5 at 3 p.m., he was assigned to deliver a load (6 yards) of ready- mix concrete to Roy Holley at the "Holley" or "Sugar Creek" jobsite. The site was somewhere "off Highway 30, 3 or 4 miles back off a gravel road," and the concrete was to be used for the fittings of a house which was located up a hill. When Montgomery arrived at the site, he was reluctant to drive onto it as it was only a dirt road up the hill. Montgomery testified that he tried to get in touch with the office to see whether the jobsite had been checked out and whether he could drive onto the site. The message was relayed to him to go ahead and deliver the concrete. After getting Holley to sign the receipt, he attempted to get his ready-mix truck up the hill. He got part way up the hill and got stuck when his front wheels slid 18 inches off the roadbed. Montgomery then left with Bill Emerson, the general contractor, to call a wrecker to pull his truck free. However, it was Emerson, not Montgomery, who actually placed the call.

Montgomery testified that when he left with Emerson, the drum of his truck was still turning but that when he returned it was no longer turning. The importance of this is the fact that concrete, if not continued to be mixed, will set and obviously cause problems in attempting to get it out of the mixer, becoming useless to any customer who wishes to use it. Montgomery attempted to get the drum turning again but was unsuccessful, and the entire load of concrete had to be dumped.

At or about 4:30 or 5 p.m., a small wrecker arrived, but was inadequate to handle the large ready-mix truck. Approximately 1 hour later a second wrecker arrived. Finally, after engaging the use of three wreckers, Montgomery freed his truck and moved it back down the hill. Montgomery returned the truck to Respondent's garage about 9 p.m. At that time, he talked to Darrell Richardson and told him what had happened. He was then told to wash out the truck and go home.

According to the testimony of Roy Holley, whom I credit, Montgomery's failure to properly deliver the concrete cost Holley about $500 to $600 for workmen who were standing around waiting for the concrete to be poured, and also the amount for half the load of the concrete.[4] Holley further stated that he did not recall whether the drum of the truck was turning when Montgomery left to call the wrecker, but he did indicate that there was no necessity for Montgomery to leave his truck. On the Saturday following the incident, Holley went to Respondent to complain about Montgomery. He told Darrell Richardson and Charlie Smerker that Montgomery was argumentative and was just not capable of handling the truck. Holley also testified that he was familar with Montgomery from other jobs, and that in fact he had complained to Respondent about Montgomery's driving and inability to place the truck where he wanted the concrete poured on several prior occasions.

[4] Respondent paid for the other half, plus the fees for three wreckers.

There was similar testimony that several contractors made similar complaints about Montgomery. Paul Harris, a foundation contractor, testified credibly that he also had complained about Montgomery's driving on December 5, with respect to an incident which occurred earlier in the day. Montgomery had delivered concrete to one of his jobsites and in the process, because of his failure to follow Harris' instructions, had run over some of his forms and, in fact, had jeopardized Harris' safety by driving too fast. He stated that he told Respondent that he did not want Montgomery delivering concrete to any of his jobs.

Hershal Webb, a general contractor who has been doing business with Respondent for about 15 years, stated that he also had complained about Montgomery to Charlie Smerker. He said that although Montgomery eventually completed a job, he always argued with Webb about how the job should be done. As an example, Webb stated that on one job Montgomery did not want to back between two houses, although there was a 14-foot passageway, and wanted the contractor to wheel barrels of concrete from the truck to the site of the pour. This, of course, would make quite a bit of additional work for the contractor. I credit Webb that he did complain on a number of occasions about Montgomery and that he had asked that Montgomery not be sent to his jobs.

Contractor Tom Phelps testified that on one occasion Montgomery disregarded his instruction and made too tight a turn around the corner of a foundation. The rear wheels of Montgomery's truck hung over the edge of the excavation and caved in parts of the bank while two workers were below. This resulted in a very low quality concrete pour and substantial extra expense to Phelps, since he had to use his own equipment to keep the truck from falling into the foundation while several of his men stood around unable to work. As a result, Phelps told Respondent that he did not want Montgomery back on any of his jobs.

Robert Smerker testified that the Monday after December 5, 1980, incident at the Sugar Creek job, he and his brother Charlie visited the site to determine how bad it was since they had to deliver some additional concrete there. He testified that they drove their pickup truck up the hill with no difficulty. At that time he talked to Emerson, who said he could not understand why Montgomery had problems, that the conditions were not that bad, and that Montgomery could not drive. In fact, both Holly, the foundation contractor, and Emerson, the general contractor, testified that on the following Wednesday a number of loads of concrete were delivered without incident to the jobsite. They did concede that because of a heavy rain on Sunday, they did not attempt to have any concrete delivered until Wednesday, until both the foundation and the road had dried out. Bob Smerker then testified that after visiting the jobsite on Monday morning, he and his brother Charlie decided to terminate Montgomery. In sum, in addition to Holly and Emerson, who were involved in the December 5 incident in which Montgomery's truck got stuck, there were three other contractors who expressed the views that Montgomery was a poor driver, some of whom had requested he not be sent to their jobsites. Thus, Respondent had legitimate grounds for discharging Montgomery, which included numerous customer complaints and a poor driving record.

Summary and Conclusions

The overwhelming weight of credible evidence establishes that Terry Montgomery was at best a marginal employee. It appeared that he had had more than his share of problems handling Respondent's equipment and that he was involved in one burned out engine and at another point, a broken crankshaft which resulted in a very expensive repair job. Nor does there appear to be any doubt that Montgomery's driving ability, while perhaps acceptable under a normal driving circumstance, did not measure up to acceptable standards as far as backing up ready-mix trucks and handling the trucks in difficult situations. On December 5, alone, Montgomery was involved in three incidents, a situation which raises considerable questions about his driving ability. He had backed into another truck on the plant's premises, although he admittedly caused no damage. On the same day, he had backed over some forms in attempting to deliver his concrete on the jobsite. The third and final incident was his getting his truck stuck in the Sugar Creek job at which Holley and Emerson were working. I conclude and find that there were legitimate customer complaints about Montgomery's driving, and that in several incidences he had caused contractors trouble and money and endangered employees because of his poor driving.

It seems clear that Montgomery had alienated a number of customers, some of whom were regular customers. As Bob Smerker testified, he informed Montgomery at one point that there was no place he could send him anymore because nobody wanted him on the jobsites. While I take that to be some exaggeration, there is little doubt that Montgomery's driving ability was not acceptable to Respondent's customers. Furthermore, there are a number of other employees involved with the Union, including Don Carter, the union steward, who filed a number of grievances and apparently had not been discriminated against. Whatever friction may have existed between Montgomery and Respondent due to Montgomery's filing of grievances, I find that the motivating cause of Montgomery's discharge was based on legitimate grounds, namely, customer complaints and Montgomery's poor driving ability. Accordingly, I find insufficient evidence to support the allegations that Montgomery was terminated either because of his union or concerted activities, or because he filed a workmen's compensation claim. Therefore, I recommend that the complaint in this respect be dismissed.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent Arnold Ready Mix Corporation is an employer within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. Local 30, Industrial and Miscellaneous Workers Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. Charles Smerker on or about October 3, 1980, threatened employees with reprisals, including bad work assignments and bad references if they continued to file grievances against Respondent. Such conduct is violative of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

4. Respondent did not violate Section 8(a)(1) of the Act in any other manner.

5. The discharge of Terry Montgomery, on December 10, 1980, was not discriminatorily motivated, and Respondent did not violate Section 8(a)(3) or (1) of the Act.

6. The aforesaid practices are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent engaged in an unfair labor practice in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, I shall recommend that Respondent be ordered to cease and desist from its unlawful practice. I further recommend that Respondent be ordered to post an appropriate notice and take affirmative action in order to effectuate the policies of the Act.

Upon the basis of the foregoing findings of fact, conclusions of law, and the entire record, and pursuant to Section 10(c) of the Act, I hereby recommend the issuance of the following:

ORDER[5]

The Respondent, Arnold Ready Mix Corporation, Imperial, Missouri, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Unlawfully threatening employees with reprisals for filing grievances against Respondent in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

(b) In any like or related manner unlawfully interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

After a hearing at which all sides had an opportunity to present evidence and state their positions, the National Labor Relations Board found that we have violated the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, and has ordered us to post this notice.

The National Labor Relations Act, gives you, as employees, certain rights:

To engage in self-organization
To form, join, or help a union
To bargain collectiveley through a representative of your own choosing
To act together for collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection
To refrain from any or all of these things.

WE WILL NOT unlawfully threaten employees with reprisals for filing grievances against us.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner unlawfully interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

By Members Fanning, Jenkins, and Zimmerman

On May 28, 1981, Administrative Law Judge Thomas D. Johnston issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, Respondent Employer and the General Counsel filed exceptions and supporting briefs.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge to the extent consistent herewith.

The Administrative Law Judge found, and we agree, that Respondent Townsend and Bottum, Inc., violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act by laying off a number of employees because of their nonmembership in Local 70, United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipe Fitting Industry of the United States and Canada, AFL-CIO (hereinafter Respondent Union), and in order to give preference to members of Respondent Union. However, the Administrative Law Judge further found that the evidence was insufficient to establish that Respondent Union, in violation of Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2), failed or refused to register certain laid-off employees on its referral lists and refer them for employment because they were not members. In this regard, he found that signing the lists was a prerequisite for referral by Respondent Union. He further found that, since the alleged discriminatees had merely requested Respondent Union's business manager, Otis Fahl, to send them out to other jobs when work was available and had not asked to sign the lists, Respondent Union's failure to place them on these lists did not violate the Act. For the reasons set forth below, we find that signing the out-of-work lists was not a requirement at the time the alleged discriminatees requested work and that, under the circumstances, their request to be sent out when work was available was tantamount to a request to be placed on the referral lists. We further find that Respondent failed to place them on the lists because they were not members and, accordingly, such failure or refusal to do so violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act.

Briefly, Respondent Union's business manager, Fahl, testified that the Union maintained out-of-work lists which were used for referrals. Those employees who were placed on the lists were generally given priority according to the date their names were registered. He testified that, although it had been the practice prior to his taking over as business manager in January 1980[2] to place only members of Respondent Union on the lists, he would have, upon request, placed anyone on the lists regardless of their nonmembership in Respondent Union. He stated, however, that he had never received such a request from a nonmember. With respect to the procedure member-employees followed in order to be placed on the lists, Fahl testified that, prior to May 1980 "[a] man would either call or come in and report that he was unemployed and I would put his name on the list." However, as of May, he began the practice of having employees sign the lists themselves.

According to the testimony credited by the Administrative Law Judge, shortly after their layoff on February 8, employees Paul Vander Ploeg, Pat Sorenson, Harvey Cummings, and Robert Knowles met with Fahl.[3] They told Fahl that they had been laid off and inquired as to the availability of work. Fahl responded that there was none at present and the employees asked if they could go to work again "when you need help." According to Fahl, he told them "yes, if the occasion came up and we could use them I would certainly put them to work because they had done us a good job." At the hearing Fahl explained that he did not put their names on any of the out-of-work lists[4] because they did not ask him to and "I don't solicit names for the out of work list." Thereafter, employees whose names were placed on the lists on dates subsequent

[1] Respondent Employer has excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Administrative Law Judge. It is the Board's established policy not to overrule an administrative law judge's resolutions with respect to credibility unless the clear preponderance of all of the relevant evidence convinces us that the resolutions are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, Inc., 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing his findings.

[2] All dates refer to 1980 unless otherwise indicated.

[3] The record is unclear as to whether Knowles was with the other three employees when they spoke with Fahl. However, Fahl testified that he was and that he was told the same thing as the other employees. The Administrative Law Judge credited Fahl's testimony with respect to this meeting and implicitly found that Knowles was present.

[4] There were several lists, which essentially grouped employees on the basis of skills; e.g., plumbers, pipefitters, etc.

to the above meeting were referred out for reemployment at Respondent Employer.[5]

The foregoing evidence clearly reveals that, contrary to the Administrative Law Judge's finding, there was no requirement that out-of-work employees personally sign the out-of-work lists at the time the four employees were laid off and contacted Respondent Union. As Business Manager Fahl testified, such a procedure was not instituted until sometime in May, 3 months after Vander Ploeg, Sorenson, Cummings, and Knowles reported that they had been laid off and wanted work. Whether their request to Fahl was sufficient to constitute a request to be placed on the out-of-work lists must be viewed in this light.

As noted above, Fahl testified that, prior to May, an out-of-work employee "would either call or come in and report that he was unemployed and I would put his name on the list." The four alleged discriminatees did precisely that, and we find that their conduct in reporting their layoff and indicating their availability for work was sufficient to entitle them to be placed on the out-of-work lists.[6]

With respect to Respondent Union's justification for not doing so, we reject its explanation that its failure to register these employees was only because they did not specifically request it. Rather, the evidence indicates that this failure was motivated by the employees' lack of membership in Respondent Union. Business Manager Fahl's testimony reveals that unemployed members were not required to make such a specific request. They needed only to notify the Union of their status, by telephone or otherwise, without resort to a recitation of any "magic words." In addition, Fahl clearly misled these nonmembers when he told them he would refer them when work was available, knowing that referrals were made on the basis of priority on the out-of-work lists. Finally, we note that, by Fahl's own admission, placement on the lists had been limited to Respondent Union's members, ostensibly until he took over as business manager in January, approximately 1 month before the incident at issue. Although he testified that he would have placed nonmembers on the list but that no one had ever requested it, the evidence set forth above belies this assertion.[7] On the contrary, we find that Respondent Union, through its agent Otis Fahl, disregarded the requests for referral by Vander Ploeg, Sorenson, Cummings, and Knowles and failed or refused to register them on its out-of-work lists and refer them for employment. We further find that their request was disregarded because they were not members of Respondent Union. Accordingly, we conclude that Respondent Union violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act[8] and that the aforesaid are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

AMENDED REMEDY

Having found that Respondent Union has engaged in an unfair labor practice in violation of Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act, we shall order that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action to effectuate the policies of the Act. We shall order that Respondent Union notify in writing Townsend and Bottum, Inc., and other employers with whom it had or now has exclusive referral agreements, with copies to Paul Vander Ploeg, Robert Knowles, Pat Sorenson, and Harvey Cummings, that it has no objection to their employment, and that it will not refuse to register any of these individuals, or any other job applicant, through its hiring hall procedures because he lacks membership in Local 70. We shall further order that Respondent Union make the above-named individuals whole for any loss of earnings suffered by reason of its unlawful conduct. Backpay shall be computed in the manner set forth in F. W. Woolworth Company,[9] with interest thereon computed in the manner set forth in Florida Steel Corporation.[10]

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board hereby orders that:

---

[5] There was some dispute as to whether the alleged discriminatees were qualified for these positions. We shall leave this determination to compliance since, in any event, a finding of a violation does not turn on whether work was available at the time. See, e.g., Pipeline Local Union No. 38, affiliated with the Laborers' International Union of North America, AFL-CIO (Hancock-Northwest, J. V.), 247 NLRB 1250 (1980).

[6] We note that there is no indication in the record that the employees even knew of the existence of these lists and Respondent Union did not appear to have been anxious to apprise them of its referral procedure.

[7] There is no allegation of discrimination occurring either prior to or after the February incident at issue. However, the fact that Respondent Union maintained "members only" out-of-work lists in the past and, despite the ostensible change in its policy barely 1 month before the incident involved herein, has never placed a nonmember on these lists is very relevant and probative of its motivation in failing to register the employees here. Indeed, Respondent Union's past practice, its misleading statements to Vander Ploeg and the others concerning its willingness to refer them for work, and the absence of a single instance in which a nonmember was placed on these lists indicate that in failing to register these nonmembers it was continuing its past practice of maintaining "members only" out-of-work lists.

[8] See, e.g., Brotherhood of Teamsters & Auto Truck Drivers Local No. 70, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen & Helpers of America (California Trucking Association), 188 NLRB 305 (1971).

A. Respondent Townsend and Bottum, Inc., Ann Arbor, Michigan, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Laying off or in any other manner discriminating against any employee in regard to hire or tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment because of their nonmembership in Local 70, United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipe Fitting Industry of the United States and Canada, AFL–CIO, or any other labor organization, or in order to give preference to the members of said labor organizations except to the extent that such rights may be affected by an agreement requiring membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment as authorized in Section 8(a)(3) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them under Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act:

(b) Preserve and, upon request, make available to the Board or its agents, for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(c) Post at its Ann Arbor, Michigan, facility and at the jobsite, if it is still performing work there, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix A."[11] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 7, after being duly signed by Respondent Employer's authorized representative, shall be posted by Respondent Employer immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent Employer to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(d) Notify the Regional Director for Region 7, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps Respondent Employer has taken to comply herewith.

B. Respondent Local 70, United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipe Fitting Industry of the United States and Canada, AFL–CIO, Grand Rapids, Michigan, its officers, agents, and representatives, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Failing and refusing to register on its referral lists and refer for employment Paul Vander Ploeg, Robert Knowles, Pat Sorenson, Harvey Cummings, or any other applicant, because of nonmembership in Local 70, or any other union.

(b) In any like or related manner restraining or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Make whole Paul Vander Ploeg, Robert Knowles, Pat Sorenson, and Harvey Cummings for any loss of pay they may have suffered because of the discrimination against them in the manner set forth in the section of this Decision entitled "Amended Remedy."

(b) Notify in writing Townsend and Bottum, Inc., and other employers with whom it had or now has exclusive referral agreements, with copies to the above-named individuals, that it has no objection to their employment, and that it will not refuse to register any of these individuals, or any other job applicant, through its hiring hall procedures because he lacks membership in Local 70.

[11] In the event that this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

(c) Preserve and, upon request, make available to the Board or its agents, for examination and copying, all records pertaining to employment through its hiring halls, and all other records necessary and useful in determining the amount of backpay due.

(d) Post at its business office, hiring halls, and meeting places copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix B."[12] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 7, after being duly signed by Respondent Union's official representative, shall be posted by it immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to members are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent Union to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Notify the Regional Director for Region 7, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps Respondent Union has taken to comply herewith.

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

After a hearing at which all sides had an opportunity to present evidence and state their positions, the National Labor Relations Board found that we have violated the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, and has ordered us to post this notice.

The Act gives employees the following rights:

To engage in self-organization

To form, join, or assist any union

To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice

To engage in activities together for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection

To refrain from the exercise of any or all such activities.

WE WILL NOT lay off or in any other manner discriminate against employees in regard to hire or tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment because of their nonmembership in Local 70, United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipe Fitting Industry of the United States and Canada, AFL-CIO, or any other labor organization, or in order to give preference to their members except to the extent such rights may be affected by an agreement requiring membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment as authorized in Section 8(a)(3) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them under Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL offer immediate and full reinstatement to Kelly Rose, Ralph Landolf, Giles Buteau, Craig Whitlow, Dennis Thornley, Harry Sample, Jessie Wilkins, Terry Whitman, Thomas J. Slifko, William L. Slifko, LeRoy Krieger, Ken Huizinga, Larry Patton, Mike Hubbard, Donald Ferrell, Arthur Ashby, John Ashby, Paul Sniff, Ray Schrier, Charles Dunn, Thomas Crawford, Richard Warren, Bernard Collins, Charles Bowhan, Larry Schaub, Craig Beckwith, Paul Veldman, Dave Hammerstrom, Robert Davis II, Walter Roung, Paul Vander Ploeg, Robert Knowles, Harvey Cummings, Fred Sliter, Pat Sorenson, Robert A. WE WILL make Paul Vander Ploeg, Robert Knowles, Pat Sorenson, and Harvey Cummings whole for any loss of earnings suffered as a result of the discrimination against them, with interest.

WE WILL notify Townsend and Bottum, Inc., and other employers with whom we had or may have exclusive referral agreements, in writing, with copies to the above-named individuals, that we have no objection to their employment, and that we will not refuse to register or refer these individuals, or any other job applicant, through our hiring hall procedures because he lacks membership in Local 70.

LOCAL 70, UNITED ASSOCIATION OF JOURNEYMEN AND APPRENTICES OF
THE PLUMBING AND PIPE FITTING
INDUSTRY OF THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA, AFL-CIO

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

THOMAS D. JOHNSTON, Administrative Law Judge: These consolidated cases were heard in Grand Rapids, Michigan, on December 18 and 19, 1980,[1] and January 12, 1981, pursuant to a charge filed on June 6 by Paul Vander Ploeg, an individual, against Townsend and Bottum, Inc. (herein referred to as Respondent Company), in Case 7-CA-17861, and amended charge[2] filed on June 6 by Ploeg against Local 70, United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipe Fitting Industry of the United States and Canada, AFL-CIO (herein referred to as Respondent Union) in Case 7-CB-4744, and an amended consolidated complaint issued on July 31 in both cases.

The amended consolidated complaint, which was further amended at the hearing, alleges that Respondent Company violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended (herein referred to as the Act), by laying off welding and pipefitting employees[3] on or about January 18, 22, 23, 25, 28, 29, and 30 and February 1, 4, 6, 7, 8, 14, and 15 at its West Olive jobsite because of their nonmembership in Respondent Union and in order to give preference to members of Respondent Union.

The amended consolidated complaint also alleges that Respondent Union violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act by advising employees at the West Olive jobsite that union members were being given preference over nonmembers in admission to Respondent Company's sponsored training classes; by causing Respondent Company to deny permission to attend Respondent Company's sponsored training classes to nonmember employees[4] at the West Olive jobsite and to give preference to members of Respondent Union, thereby causing Respondent Company to discriminate against employees because of their nonmembership in Respondent Union; by dening Ploeg access to study materials for Respondent Union's journeymen's examination because of his nonmembership in Respondent Union; and by refusing to refer Ploeg and other nonmembers[5] to jobs with Respondent Company or to put them on an out-of-work list because of their nonmembership in Respondent Union, thereby causing such employees not to be rehired by Respondent Company and thereby causing Respondent Company to discriminate against employees because of their nonmembership in Respondent Union.[6]

Respondent Company, in its answer dated August 8, denies having violated the Act.

Respondent Union, in its answer dated August 8 to the amended consolidated complaint, which also included the adoption of its original answer dated June 24 to a complaint issued against it, denies having violated the Act.

The issues involved are whether Respondent Company violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by discriminatorily laying off[7] the discriminatees because of their nonmembership in Respondent Union and in order to give preference to Respondent Union's members; and whether Respondent Union violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act as alleged by making unlawful statements to employees, by discriminating against Ploeg by denying him access to study materials for its Journeymen's examination, by discriminatorily causing Respondent Company to deny Ploeg permission to attend its sponsored training classes, and by discriminatorily refusing to refer Ploeg, Sorenson, Cummings, and Knowles to jobs with Respondent Company or to put them on an out-of-work list, thereby causing Respondent Company to discriminate against them because of their nonmembership in Respondent Union.

[1] All dates referred to are in 1980 unless otherwise stated.

[2] The original charge was filed on April 8.

[3] The names of these laid-off employees (herein referred to as the discriminatees) are contained in the General Counsel's response to a more definite statement.

[4] The General Counsel defined "nonmember employees" as used here to mean only Ploeg.

[5] The "nonmembers" referred to here and as defined by the General Counsel were Pat Sorenson, Harvey Cummings, and Robert Knowles.

[6] Certain other allegations contained in the amended consolidated complaint alleging that Respondent Union violated Sec. 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act were disposed of either through an informal settlement agreement containing a nonadmission clause or by withdrawal of such allegations.

[7] The layoffs themselves, as opposed to the selection of those employees to be laid off, were not alleged to be discriminatory.

Upon the entire record in this case, and from my observations of the witnesses and after due consideration of the briefs filed by the parties, I hereby make the following:[8]

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. THE BUSINESS OF RESPONDENT COMPANY

Respondent Company, a Michigan corporation with its principal office and place of business located in Ann Arbor, Michigan, is engaged in the construction business at various projects in the State of Michigan, including a project located in West Olive, Michigan, where it is the general contractor on the construction of a power plant for Consumers Power Company.

During calendar year 1979, a representative period, Respondent Company, in the course of its operations, received gross revenues in excess of $500,000, and purchased and received goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000 which were delivered to it at its West Olive, Michigan, job directly from points located outside the State of Michigan.

Respondent Company is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

Local 70, United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipe Fitting Industry of the United States and Canada, AFL-CIO, is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Background

Respondent Company was engaged as the general contractor on the construction of a power plant located in West Olive, Michigan, for the Consumers Power Company (herein referred to as the jobsite). Robert Shilande, who had previously served as piping superintendent, was its project superintendent.[9] Its employees working on the jobsite were represented by Respondent Union with which it had collective-bargaining agreements applicable to the jobsite covering said employees.

Included among the employees employed on the jobsite and represented by Respondent Union were members of Respondent Union; members, sometimes referred to as "travelers," of other local unions of the United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipe Fitting Industry of the United States and Canada, AFL-CIO (herein referred to as the International), from both the United States and Canada; and nonunion employees, also referred to as "permit" or "white ticket" employees.

Otis Fahl has been the business manager of Respondent Union since about January 10 and succeeded Chester Krupiczewicz, who is now deceased. Robert Ferris served as Respondent Union's main steward on the jobsite from January 1, 1978, until July 1980.

B. The Exclusive Referral System

The collective-bargaining agreements between Respondent Company and Respondent Union covering work on the jobsite contain referral and hiring procedures. Under these provisions Respondent Union is required to maintain out-of-work lists for the categories of plumbers, fitters, welders, refrigeration mechanics, and apprentices. Respondent Company is required to advise Respondent Union's business manager of the number of applicants needed, and Respondent Union is then required to refer them in the chronological order they registered on the out-of-work lists. Respondent Company may reject applicants for certain valid reasons, and has the right to recall any former employee who is collecting unemployment against its account and to select from anywhere on the lists members for service work only. The agreements further provide that if, upon request, Respondent Union is unable within 48 hours to supply journeymen, including journeymen with special skills, Respondent Company may secure journeymen from any other source. The 48-hour period (Saturdays, Sundays, and holidays excepted) shall began at 8 a.m. of the day following the day on which the request is made.

Several nonunion employees, presented as witnesses by the General Counsel, who worked on the jobsite as welders or pipefitters, including Craig Beckwith, Knowles, Cummings, Ploeg, Kenneth Huizinga, David Hammerstrom, and Sorenson, all credibly testified, without denial, that before being hired by Respondent Company they were required to have referral slips from Respondent Union. Cummings, Ploeg, Hammerstrom, and Sorenson had all contacted Respondent Company initially about being hired after seeing advertisements placed by it for employees, but before being hired they were instructed by Respondent Company's representatives, including Welding Coordinator John Keenan, to go to Respondent Union for referral slips, which they did.

Respondent Company's project superintendent, Shilander, as well as Respondent Union's business manager, Fahl, and its steward, Ferris, acknowledged that before being hired by Respondent Company to work on the jobsite all employees were required to, and did, have referral slips from Respondent Union. This included members of Respondent Union, travelers from other locals of the International, including those in Canada, and nonunion employees. These referral slips were issued by Respondent Union's business manager and given to Steward Ferris by the employees upon their arrival at the jobsite.

[8] Unless otherwise indicated, the findings herein are based on the pleadings, admissions, stipulations, and undisputed evidence contained in the record, which I credit.

[9] Shilander was a supervisor under the Act.

C. The Discriminatory Layoffs by Respondent Company

There were approximately 387 employees employed by Respondent Company at the jobsite during January as reflected by its monthly earnings register. Business Manager Fahl estimated that in January and February there were approximately 80 members of Respondent Union employed on the jobsite.

Respondent Company's records prepared or kept by it dealing with layoffs, which listed the union status of those employees laid off, reflect that beginning on January 18 and continuing through February 15 a total of 153 unit employees who had been performing work as pipefitters or welders were laid off from work at the jobsite.

On January 18 those employees laid off were Kelley Rose, Marcel Trudeaux, Garry L. Parks, John R. McCormick, Edward Rogers, Richard Brougham, Ronald Gionet, Wade Westline, Hazen Hollis, R. Roy, Raymond Legault, Mato Brkic, John Y. Coulombe, E. Huot, Daniel T. Gallagher, Ludwig Diermeier, Richard Bibeau, Pierre Marcotte, Rejean Desilets, John W. Dempsey, Paul Mongrain, Gillis LaBlanc, Pierre Bibeau, Jacques Durand, Pierre Durand, John R. Massey, John Newman, Henry Hay, Claude Doyon, Christopher H. Keane, Gilles LeFebvre, Richard Murchie, James Gallacher, Paul J. Peloquin, Marcel DeLongue Epee, Jacques Pepin, John McGloin, Gary Landry, Charles Beer, Damien Paulin, Willfied Belair, Benoit Gelinas, Gerard Chainey, George W. Westline, Phillip Menard, George Auspitz, Mavius Dube, Alain Dumais, Jean L. Theroux, Alain Jutras, Yuan Godan, Roger Dompierre, Dennis Belisle, and Guy Patenaude. With the exception of Kelley Rose, who was a member of Local 798, all of the other employees laid off on January 18 were from Canada and various Canadian locals.

On January 23 the only employee laid off was Ralph Landolf, who was a member of Local 2.

On January 25 those employees laid off were Giles Buteau, Marcel Lemire, Renald Filion, Richard Fournier, Jean Duval, Michel Caya, Craig Whitlow, Robert Lussier, Albert Landry, and Donald E. Stanley. Except for Giles Buteau and Craig Whitlow, who were members of Locals 617 and 190, respectively, all of the remaining employees laid off on January 25 were from Canada and various Canadian locals.

On January 28 those employees laid off were Dennis Thornley, Harry Sample, Jessie Wilkins, Luc Gautier, and Craig Whitlow.[10] Luc Gautier was from Canada and a Canadian local while Dennis Thornley and Harry Sample belonged to Local 798. Jessie Wilkins was a member of Local 640 and Craig Whitlow was a member of Local 190.

On January 29 those employees laid off were Thomas J. Slifko, LeRoy Krieger, Terry Whitman, and William L. Slifko.

Terry Whitman was a member of Local 158 whereas both Slifkos belonged to Local 27 and LeRoy Krieger was a member of Local 513.

Those employees laid off on February 1 were Paul Sniff, Ken Huizinga, Larry Patton, Mike Hubbard, Rene Allard, Donald Pinard, Gerard Dionne, Kenneth de Cropper, John Goba, Normand LaFlamme, Dennis Herbert, Rejean Savoie, Steve Dayah, Charles E. Dunn, David Billedeau, Patrick Russell, Douglas Stewart, Thomas A. Crawford, Jean P. Jutras, Ray Schrier, Ken Bursey, Jim Young, Len Sullivan, Raymond Chasse, Donald Ferrell, Stan Colton, Avmand Allard, C. J. Chapman, Gabriel Savard, Richard A. Warren, Bernard Collins, Arthur Ashby, John Ashby, Raymond Dillon, Paul A. McAree, Angelo Cannata, Roger LaLancette, Cecil Fobert, Raymond Roussel, Yvon Dion, Michel Boudreau, Dennis Thornley,[11] Charles H. Bowhan, and Larry Schaub. All of the employees were laid off on February 1, from Canada and various Canadian locals except for certain employees who were either nonunion or members of other locals. Those nonunion employees were Ken Huizinga, Larry Patton, Mike Hubbard, Donald Ferrell, and Arthur and John Ashby. The members of other locals were Paul Sniff and Ray Schrier from Local 154, Charles Dunn from Local 102, Thomas Crawford from Local 460, Richard Warren from Local 313, Bernard Collins from Local 671, Dennis Thornley from Local 798, and Charles Bowhan and Larry Schaub from Local 669.

Those employees laid off on February 8 were Craig Beckwith, Kevin J. Rogler, Paul Veldman, Dave Hammerstrom, Murray Cohen, Robert Davis II, Jerry Lucas, Walter Roung, Richard Sharp, Charles Vass, George Steinmetz, Paul Ploeg, Robert Knowles, Joseph Pielesnik, Robert Howe, Harvey Cummings, Fred Sliter, Pat Sorenson, Robert A. McCarthy, Joseph Broniecki, George Pellerin, John Higginbotham, Juan Barrios, Louis A. Smith, Vincent C. Reynolds, Ken Byron, and James E. Daugherty.

The employees laid off from work on February 8 were either nonunion employees or members of other locals. The nonunion employees were Craig Beckwith, Paul Veldman, Dave Hammerstrom, Robert Davis II, Walter Roung, Paul Ploeg, Robert Knowles, Harvey Cummings, Fred Sliter, and Pat Sorenson. The records do not show the status of Robert A. McCarthy; however, he was not a member of Respondent Union. Insofar as the remaining employees are concerned, Kevin Rogler, Richard Sharp, and Ken Byron were members of Local 638, Murray Cohen was a member of Local 629, Jerry Lucas was a member of Local 387, Charles Vass was a member of Local 111, George Steinmetz was a member of Local 50, Joseph Pielesnik and Robert Howe were members of Local 154, Joseph Broniecki and Vincent Reynolds were members of Local 1, George Pellerin was a member of Local 144, John Higginbotham was a member of Local 195, Lewis Smith was a member of Local 821, James Daugherty was a member of Local 211, and Juan Barrios was a member of Local 391.

On February 14 the only employee laid off was Lawrence Roberts, who was a member of Local 821.

On February 15 those employees laid off were Robert Carroll, George Coleson, John W. May, James Vanders Heuvel, Kevin Pratt, M. O'Hara, and E. O'Hara. Three of these employees, namely, George Coleson, M. O'Hara, and E. O'Hara, were members of Respondent Union. Robert Carroll belonged to Local 449 and James Heuvel to Local 190. Neither John May nor Kevin Pratt were union members.

[10] Whitlow, as previously noted, was included in the January 25 layoff.

[11] Thornley, as previously noted, was included in the January 28 layoff.

Project Superintendent Shilander testified that these layoffs resulted from a gearing down of Respondent Company's operations on the jobsite and that he made the decision on each layoff. This was accomplished by his first determining the number and classifications of employees to be included in each layoff, whereupon the general foremen along with the foremen then submitted to him lists of names of employees they themselves selected to be laid off for his approval. He then reviewed each of the lists to see whether they were fair, whether there would be any problems with upcoming vacations, and that the layoffs did not include specific areas like hot welders. Those factors, which Shilander stated were to be considered in selecting the employees for layoff and about which he had previously instructed his foremen in meetings, included absenteeism, productivity, expertise in their field, classifications required for upcoming work, and sometimes areas of work.

Shilander acknowledged that he did not review the qualifications of each individual selected for layoff or compare them to those employees retained but only looked to see whether there were any glaring inequities concerning whether the names should be included on the lists. According to him, on these particular layoffs he did not see any problems with letting the layoffs go through the way they were requested, stating he trusted the decisions of the general foremen and foremen. Shilander also acknowledged that no records were kept of the reasons for laying off the employees.

None of the general foremen or foremen who selected the names of the employees to be laid off testified concerning the reasons they selected those employees whose names they submitted to Shilander.

Shilander denied that he was ever pressured by Respondent Union concerning how to make the layoffs, although he stated that former Business Manager Krupiczewicz, about October 1979, had informed him he wanted him to take a hard look at Respondent Union's members before he laid them off and that Business Manager Fahl, after taking office, had indicated he did not want any of the arrangements previously made with Krupiczewicz changed.

Robert Knowles, who was one of the discriminatees employed on the jobsite who was laid off from work on February 8, credibly testified without denial that in December 1979 or January 1980, upon asking Respondent Company's foreman, Mike Duffy,[12] under whom he worked, if he knew the order of layoff that would be coming up or if he would be laid off since the job was slowing down, Duffy replied that he thought it would be subjourneymen,[13] then the Canadians, and then the permit hands or white tickets in that order.

Knowles, Ploeg, Huizinga, Hammerstrom, and Sorenson all credibly testified without denial that at the time they were laid off on February 8, except for Huizinga, who was laid off on February 1, the jobs they were working on had not been completed and there was still work to be performed.

Respondent Company's records reflect that prior to the layoffs in issue here Respondent Company, in December and early January, also laid off from work approximately 59 employees[14] who had been performing work as welders, pipefitters, and subjourneymen pipefitters on the jobsite. Six of those employees were members of Respondent Union, while the rest of them were either nonunion employees or members of other locals, including 20 Canadians from various Canadian locals.

Following the layoffs in issue here Respondent Company, during the period beginning February 18 and continuing through April 4, laid off approximately 119 additional employees.[15] Thirty-seven of those employees were members of Respondent Union, while 6 of them were nonunion employees and the remaining employees were members of other locals.

Shilander's undisputed testimony, which I credit, establishes that all of the Canadians employed on the jobsite were working under visas for which Respondent Company had applied. Those visas, which were originally good for 1 year, expired about Thanksgiving 1979, but at the request of Respondent Company they had been extended for an additional 3 months and would have expired about the end of February. No further extensions of the visas were requested. All of the Canadians had been laid off by about the first part of February and Shilander explained that it was because their visas were to expire.

Both Shilander and Ferris testified at the time of the hearing that the only employees still working on the jobsite were members of Respondent Union.

Shilander and Ferris estimated that by about the end of February or March all of the nonunion employees working on the jobsite had been laid off work. Ferris also estimated that from about May until September there were approximately 90 employees still employed on the jobsite who, with the exception of a few travelers from Michigan locals, were members of Respondent Union. According to Ferris, the number of employees on the construction crew had dropped to approximately 25 in December.

D. Respondent Union's Alleged Conduct Concerning Welding Training Classes

Respondent Company sponsors welding training classes for its employees employed at the jobsite. Based on the undisputed testimony of Respondent Union's steward, Ferris, which I credit, those employees interested in attending such classes submit their applications to him, which he in turn gives to Respondent Company's welding coordinator, Keenan. Keenan alone then selects the applicants to attend the welding training classes and notifies Ferris to have those employees selected to report to class. Respondent Union does not participate in the selection process.

[12] Although Knowles described Duffy as being a general foreman, he was not among those listed by Shilander, and Stewart Ferris described him as being a foreman.

[13] According to Ferris, subjourneymen earn 60 percent of the journeyman's rate of pay and they are not members of Respondent Union.

[14] The layoffs of these employees were not alleged to be discriminatory.

[15] The layoffs of these employees were not alleged to be discriminatory.

Ploeg testified that in the spring of 1979 he asked Ferris whether there were any openings in the welding class. When Ferris informed him there were not any openings he asked if he could be put on a waiting list, whereupon Ferris told him there was no list. Upon asking whether he could get in at a later date, Ferris informed him that union personnel were given the first opportunity to get into the class.

Ploeg further testified that in the fall of 1979, which he subsequently defined to mean August 1979, he again asked Ferris, in the presence of Assistant Steward Jerry Patton,[16] about the possibility of getting into the welding class, but was told that it was full. Upon asking again if he could get in at a later date, Ferris informed him that he could not because union members were given the first opportunity to get into the class.

Ferris denied making such statements attributed to him by Ploeg or ever refusing to take applications for the classes. He further stated that he had received applications from nonunion employees, including Ploeg,[17] Knowles, and Cummings, which he then turned over to Welding Coordinator Keenan. According to Ferris' undisputed testimony, he observed Knowles attending welding classes about February or March 1979. Cummings acknowledged that in the spring or summer of 1979 he had filled out an application for welding school which he gave to Ferris. Although he was not accepted, he acknowledged that he never pushed it.

I credit the testimony of Ferris over that of Ploeg, whom I discredit, and find that Ferris did not inform Ploeg or other employees that union members were being given preference over nonmembers in admission to the welding training classes as alleged.[18] Apart from my observation of the witnesses in discrediting Ploeg, his testimony was both contradictory and contrary to that of other witnesses presented by the General Counsel.

E. Respondent Union's Alleged Denial Of Study Materials To Ploeg

Ploeg testified that, about the first week in March during a telephone conversation he initiated with Business Manager Fahl, he asked Fahl about the possibility of getting in Respondent Union as an apprentice or subjourneyman, whereupon Fahl informed him that he would have to have 4 years of experience and would have to take some kind of test. Upon asking Fahl if he could get material for the test, Fahl informed him that he could not unless he was in some way affiliated with the Union or was referred or accepted as an apprentice.

Fahl denied making such statements to Ploeg. He further denied that there was any such study materials in existence, and no evidence was proffered to establish that any such materials ever actually existed.

I credit Fahl rather than Ploeg, whom I have previously discredited.

F. Respondent Union's Alleged Refusal To Refer Employees

Ploeg, Sorenson, Cummings, and Knowles all worked as journeymen at the jobsite performing welding or pipefitting work from 1978 until their layoffs on February 8.

Respondent Union's records and the undisputed testimony of Fahl establish that Respondent Union maintains separate out-of-work lists for plumbers, pipefitters, welders, and apprentices, which is also required by the collective-bargaining agreements covering work on the jobsite. Employees are referred to jobs in the order their names appear on each list except for those exceptions contained in the collective-bargaining agreements such as when an employee is drawing unemployment benefits from Respondent Company. Initially, Fahl at the request of the employees who were out of work, would list their names on these out-of-work lists. However, about May the practice was changed whereby the employees themselves would sign these lists.

Fahl denied that employees had to be members of Respondent Union to have their names placed on the out-of-work lists. However, he admitted making a statement in an affidavit given to a Board agent as follows: "If there is a work shortage we keep an unemployed list and you have to be a member of the local to be put on that list. Fahl's explanation for making such a statement was that it was in response to a question about what the past practices of the Local had been as far as maintaining an out-of-work list. According to him, since taking over as business manager in January, he had never experienced anyone other than members coming in and wanting to be placed on the list so the only ones who had been on the list would have been members of Respondent Union.

Knowles testified that on the day of his layoff, February 8, he went to Respondent Union's hall and talked to Fahl. During the conversation, he asked Fahl if he would send him out on a job in the future when they had work, whereupon Fahl informed him that he would. Knowles stated he believed that he also asked Fahl if there would be a signup list or a list for nonmembers and Fahl told him no. Upon asking Fahl if he would refer him to other business agents since he was not a member of Respondent Union and could not get a travel card, and if Fahl would let him know about other jobs, Fahl informed him that he would and for him to keep in touch.

Knowles acknowledged that he did not ask to sign an out-of-work list or for Fahl to put his name on such list.

Fahl, while stating that he had several discussions with Knowles about admission to Respondent Union's apprenticeship program, denied having any discussions with him about putting his name on an out-of-work list or that Knowles asked to be placed on a list.

I credit the testimony of Fahl rather than that of Knowles, whom I discredit. Besides my observation of the witnesses in discrediting Knowles, he expressed uncertainty in his own testimony about what actually transpired.

[16] Patton did not testify.

[17] Ploeg did not deny submitting an application to Ferris.

[18] The statements Ploeg alleges Ferris made to him also occurred more than 6 months prior to the filing of the charge against Respondent Union in the instant case, and Sec. 10(b) of the Act would preclude finding a violation even if such statements were credited.

On February 11, Ploeg, Sorenson, and Cummings, who had all been laid off from work on February 8, had a conversation with Fahl at Respondent Union's hall. Ploeg, who stated he had heard about the out-of-work list from members of Respondent Union, testified he asked Fahl about being put on a work list. Fahl informed all three he would put them on the work list, but told them that he would not refer any men out anymore as white ticket or permit men and that the only way he would refer men to other jobs would be as subjourneymen; and he also said that their chance of getting employment at that time was slim because he had people laid off or out of work and he would have them hired out before he would hire out a nonunion member. Upon asking Fahl about being referred out to another local or area other than Local 70's area as he did with his union members, Fahl replied he could not do that. Before leaving, Ploeg again asked Fahl whether they would be put on the out-of-work list and Fahl replied that they would. Ploeg acknowledged that he never asked Fahl if he could sign the out-of-work list.

Neither Sorenson nor Cummings, called as witnesses by the General Counsel, corroborated Ploeg's testimony, and in fact Sorenson contradicted it. All Cummings recalled that was said was that they asked if there was any work in the area or if Fahl knew of any work in Michigan where they needed hands, whereupon Fahl told them that at that time he had men on the bench and there was no work in the area. While Sorenson initially stated that they asked Fahl if he would keep them in mind for future reference for a job and asked if there was some kind of list, he subsequently stated that he did not remember himself or anyone in the group asking to have his name put on a referral list or anyone else in the group saying anything about a list and denied that Fahl said anything about it.

Fahl denied that anyone asked to be put on the out-of-work list or referred to such list. According to him, they asked if he would send them out on other jobs when he got additional work and he told them that he would because they had done a good job.

I credit the testimony of Fahl concerning this conversation rather than that of Ploeg, Sorenson, and Cummings. Besides my observation of the witnesses in discrediting them, they contradicted each other's testimony concerning what transpired and Ploeg has been discredited previously.

Fahl explained at the hearing that he did not place their names on the out-of-work list because they did not ask him to and that he did not solicit names for such list.

Ploeg further testified that following this conversation he had two telephone conversations with Fahl. The first occurred on February 18 at which time he called Fahl and asked whether the laid-off employees were on the work list, whereupon Fahl informed him that they were. Pursuant to his inquiry about the availability of work Fahl told him that he had men out of work and did not have any work for them. The last conversation occurred the first week in March when he called Fahl and asked if there was work available, whereupon Fahl informed him that there was nothing he could do for him at least until summer or later.

Fahl credibly denied having such conversations with Ploeg.

Respondent Union's out-of-work lists for pipefitters and welders reflect that after February 11 it had referred employees to Respondent Company for work on the jobsite, including jobs other than those designated as maintenance work. For example, in May or June, M. O'Hara, K. Pratt, and J. Knowles were referred as welders and, in May, P. Shaffer was referred as a pipefitter. These employees were all members of Respondent Union.

Respondent Union's records as well as the testimony of Fahl reflect that the names of Ploeg, Sorenson, Cummings, and Knowles were not placed on the out-of-work lists maintained by Respondent Union and they were not thereafter referred by it to jobs with Respondent Company.

Although Fahl denied referring anyone to Respondent Company after January within the classifications or skills of Ploeg, Sorenson, Cummings, or Knowles, Fahl also denied knowing what categories they were in, except that two of them were certified welders, and, according to him, the capabilities of the employees are determined at the jobsite by Respondent Company.

G. Analysis and Conclusions

The General Counsel asserts that Respondent Company violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by discriminatorily laying the discriminatees off from work because of their nonmembership in Respondent Union and to give preference to Respondent Union's members; and that Respondent Union violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act by making unlawful statements to employees, discriminating against Ploeg by denying him access to study materials for its journeymen's examination and causing Respondent Company to deny Ploeg permission to attend its sponsored training classes, and discriminatorily refusing to refer Ploeg, Sorenson, Cummings, and Knowles to jobs with Respondent Company or to put them on an out-of-work list causing Respondent Company not to rehire them and to discriminate against them because of their nonmembership in Respondent Union.

Section 8(a)(1) of the Act prohibits an employer from interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act. Section 8(a)(3) of the Act provides in pertinent part: "It shall be an unfair labor practice for an employer . . . by discrimination in regard to hire or tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment to encourage or discourage membership in any labor organization."

Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act prohibits a union from restraining or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act. Section 8(b)(2) of the Act prohibits a union from causing or attempting to cause an employer to discriminate against an employee in violation of Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

The first issue discussed is whether Respondent Company violated the Act as alleged by discriminatorily laying off the discriminatees.

The fact that layoffs may be economically justified is no defense if the selection of those employees laid off is for discriminatory reasons. See N.L.R.B. v. Bedford-Nugent Corporation, 379 F.2d 528, 529 (7th Cir. 1967), and N.L.R.B. v. Denna Products, Co., 195 F.2d 330, 335 (7th Cir. 1952), cert. denied 344 U.S. 827. Direct evidence of discriminatory motivation is not necessary to support a finding of discrimination and such intent may be inferred from the record as a whole. Heath International, Inc., 196 NLRB 318 (1972). Further, where motivation for discharge is at issue, the General Counsel must make a prima facie showing sufficient to support the inference that protected activity by employees was a motivating factor in an employer's decision to discharge, and the employer then has the burden of showing that the employees would have been discharged absent that protected activity. Wright Line, a Division of Wright Line, Inc., 251 NLRB 1083 (1980).

The findings supra, establish that on January 18, 23, 25, 28, and 29 and February 1, 8, 14, and 15 Respondent Company laid off a total of 153 unit employees who had been performing construction work at the jobsite, including the discriminatees. Except for 3 members of Respondent Union who were included in the February 15 layoff, the remaining 150 employees laid off were either nonunion employees or members of other locals of the International from the United States and Canada. During December 1979 or January 1980, Respondent Company's foreman, Duffy, who like other foremen and general foremen who would have been involved in making the selections for layoff, indicated to discriminatee Robert Knowles, who was laid off on February 8, that the subjourneymen, Canadians, and nonunion employees would be laid off first. This is consistent with what actually occurred during each of these layoffs except for the February 15 layoff when three members of Respondent Union were included among the seven employees laid off from work on that occasion.

Although Respondent Company's project superintendent, Shilander, approved the names of the employees to be included in these layoffs, his own testimony reflects that the general foremen and foremen upon whose judgment he relied actually selected those employees who were then laid off. Not only did these general foremen and foremen not testify concerning their specific reasons for selecting the employees to be laid off, but the evidence fails to establish what those reasons were. Further, it does not appear plausible that had the general foremen and foremen applied the criteria as instructed by Shilander in selecting employees for layoff that only members of Respondent Union would have, as here, been retained, especially in view of the large number of employees laid off. Moreover, the evidence further shows that Respondent Company not only had records reflecting the union membership status of its employees employed at the jobsite, but some of Shilander's own lists of those employees to be laid off indicated whether they were Canadians or nonunion employees. However, Shilander also possessed knowledge at the time of the layoffs that the visas of the Canadians employed on the jobsite were about to expire, and he explained this was why the Canadians had been laid off.

Having found that, during the eight layoffs beginning January 18 and continuing through February 14, a total of 146 employees comprised solely of nonunion employees or members of other locals of the International from the United States and Canada were laid off from work at the jobsite while no members of Respondent Union were included in these layoffs; that during this period Foreman Duffy stated that nonunion employees and Canadians would be laid off first; that the pattern of these layoffs was consistent with Duffy's statements; and that some of Project Superintendent Shilander's own layoff lists reflect the union status of the employees selected, I am persuaded, and I so find, contrary to Respondent Company's position as expressed in its brief, that the General Counsel has established a prima facie showing that the motivating factor in Respondent Company's decision to lay these employees off was because of their nonmembership in Respondent Union and in order to give preference to members of Respondent Union. Respondent Company, having proferred no evidence to establish the specific reasons these employees, with the exception of the Canadians, were selected for layoff, failed to meet its burden of showing that these employees, except for the Canadians, would have been laid off from work absent their nonmembership in Respondent Union or absent a desire to give preference to Respondent Union's members. Insofar as the Canadians are concerned, however, since their visas were expiring and would have required them to be laid off anyway, which Shilander explained was the reason they were no longer employed on the jobsite, I find that Respondent Company has met its burden by showing that it would have taken the same action against the Canadians by laying them off in the absence of their nonmembership in Respondent Union or in the absence of a desire to give preference to members of Respondent Union. With respect to the February 15 layoff, since only seven employees were involved and unlike the other layoffs it included members (three) of Respondent Union, I am persuaded and find that the General Counsel has failed to establish a prima facie showing that the selection of the employees in this layoff was discriminatorily motivated.

Therefore, I find for those reasons expressed supra that Respondent Company violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act by discriminatorily laying off Kelley Rose on January 18 ; Ralph Landolf on January 23; Giles Buteau and Craig Whitlow on January 25; Dennis Thornley, Harry Sample, Jessie Wilkins, and Craig Whitlow on January 28; Terry Whitman, Thomas J. Slifko, William L. Slifko, and LeRoy Krieger on January 29; Ken Huizinga, Larry Patton, Mike Hubbard, Donald Ferrell, Arthur Ashby, John Ashby, Paul Sniff, Ray Schrier, Charles Dunn, Thomas Crawford, Richard Warren, Bernard Collins, Dennis Thornley, Charles Bowhan, and Larry Schaub on February 1; Craig Beckwith, Paul Veldman, Dave Hammerstrom, Robert Davis II, Walter Roung, Paul Ploeg, Robert Knowles, Harvey Cummings, Fred Sliter, Pat Sorenson, Robert A. McCarthy, Kevin Rogler, Richard Sharp, Ken Bryon, Murray Cohen, Jerry Lucas, Charles Vass, George Steinmetz, Joseph Pielesnik, Robert Howe, Joseph Broniecki, Vincent Reynold, George Pellerin, John Higginbotham, Lewis Smith, James Daugherty, and Juan Barrios on February 8; and Lawrence Roberts on February 14 because of their nonmembership in Respondent Union and in order to give preference to members of Respondent Union.

I further find for the reasons indicated, supra, that Respondent Company did not violate Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act by laying off the remaining discriminatees who were either Canadians from Canadian locals or were included in the February 15 layoff; namely, Marcel Trudeaux, Garry L. Parks, John R. McCormick, Edward Rogers, Richard Brougham, Ronald Gionet, Wade Westline, Hazen Hollis, R. Roy, Raymond Legault, Mato Brkic, John Y. Coulombe, E. Huot, Daniel T. Gallagher, Ludwig Diermeier, Richard Bibeau, Pierre Marcotte, Rejean Desilets, John W. Dempsey, Paul Mongrain, Gillis LaBlanc, Pierre Bibeau, Jacques Durand, Pierre Durand, John R. Massey, John Newman, Henry Hay, Claude Doyon, Christopher H. Keane, Gilles LeFebvre, Richard Murchie, James Gallacher, Paul J. Peloquin, Marcel DeLongue Epee, Jacques Pepin, John McGloin, Gary Landry, Charles Beer, Damien Paulin, Willfied Belair, Benoit Gelinas, Gerard Chainey, George W. Westline, Phillip Menard, George Auspitz, Mavius Dube, Alain Dumais, Jean L. Theroux, Alain Jutras, Yuan Godan, Roger Dompierre, Dennis Belisle, Guy Patenaude, Marcel Lemire, Renald Filion, Richard Fournier, Jean Duval, Michel Caya, Robert Lussier, Albert Landry, Donald E. Stanley, Luc Guatier, Rene Allard, Donald Pinard, Gerard Dionne, Kenneth de Cropper, John Goba, Normand LaFlamme, Dennis Herbert, Rejean Savoir, Steve Dayah, David Billedeau, Patrick Russell, Douglas Stewart, Jean P. Jutras, Ken Bursey, Jim Young, Len Sullivan, Raymond Chasse, Stan Colton, Avmand Allard, C. J. Chapman, Gabriel Savard, Raymond Dillon, Paul A. McAree, Angelo Cannata, Roger LaLancette, Cecil Fobert, Raymond Roussel, Yvon Dion, Michel Boudreau, Robert Carroll, George Coleson, John W. May, James Vanders Heuvel, Kevin Pratt, M. O'Hara, and E. O'Hara.

The next issues to be resolved are whether Respondent Union violated the Act by causing Respondent Company to deny Ploeg permission to attend its welding training classes and whether it denied Ploeg access to study materials for its journeymen's examination.

The evidence, supra, establishes that Respondent Union's steward, Ferris, did not inform Ploeg or other employees that union members were being given preference over nonmembers in admission to Respondent Company's welding training classes. Having so found, and since the evidence further establishes that Respondent Company alone determines which applicants will be accepted for its welding training classes, the evidence fails to establish that steward Ferris caused Respondent Company to deny Ploeg permission to attend such classes and to give preference to members of Respondent Union as alleged. With respect to the journeymen's examination, the findings establish that Business Manager Fahl did not inform Ploeg that he could not get materials for the test unless he was in some way affiliated with the Union or was referred or accepted as an apprentice. For this reason, and in view of Fahl's uncontradicted denial and the absence of any evidence to the contrary that any such study material actually ever existed, I find that Fahl did not deny Ploeg access to study materials for Respondent Union journeymen's examination because of his nonmembership in Respondent Union as alleged.

The remaining issue to be resolved is whether Respondent Union violated the Act by refusing to refer Ploeg, Sorenson, Cummings, and Robert Knowles to jobs with Respondent Company or to put them on an out-of-work list, thereby causing Respondent Company not to rehire them and to discriminate against them because of their nonmembership in Respondent Union.

The evidence, supra, establishes that in order to work for Respondent Company at the jobsite employees were required to have referrals from Respondent Union. Such requirement clearly establishes that there was in existence at all times material herein an exclusive referral system between Respondent Union and Respondent Company covering work on the jobsite. The fact that Respondent Company had the right to reject applicants for certain valid reasons, that it could recall former employees who were collecting unemployment against its account, that it could select applicants from anywhere on the out-of-work lists for service work only, and that it could secure journeymen from any source if after 48 hours Respondent Union was unable to fulfill its requests for journeymen does not detract from finding this to be an exclusive referral system.

Under Section 8(b)(2) of the Act when a union prevents an employee from being hired, thereby demonstrating its influence over the employee and its power to affect his livelihood, there is a presumption that the effect of such action is to encourage union membership on the part of all employees who have perceived that exercise of power; however, such presumption may be rebutted where facts show that the action taken by the union was necessary to the effective performance of its function of representing its constituency. International Union of Operating Engineers, Local 18, AFL-CIO (William F. Murphy), 204 NLRB 681 (1973), enforcement denied 555 F.2d 552 (6th Cir. 1977).

An employee's request for employment must be considered in a lawful nondiscriminatory manner and is not dependent upon the availability of a job when such application is made. Master Stevedores Association of Texas, Houston Maritime Association, Inc., and their Employers-Members, 156 NLRB 1032, 1034 (1966).

The evidence, supra, establishes that in early February following the layoffs of Robert Knowles, Ploeg, Sorenson, and Cummings, who had been employed by Respondent Company at the jobsite, their names were neither placed on Respondent Union's out-of-work lists, nor were they referred to jobs by Respondent Union although other employees in the same job classifications were subsequently referred by Respondent Union to the jobsite for employment with Respondent Company. These employees referred had signed the out-of-work lists after Ploeg, Sorenson, Cummings, and Knowles had contacted Respondent Union.

However, the credited testimony of Business Manager Fahl establishes, as admitted by both Ploeg and Robert Knowles and undenied by Cummings and Sorenson, that they did not ask Fahl to sign the out-of-work lists, which is a requirement before employees can be referred by Respondent Union. Rather, all Fahl was asked was if he would send them out to other jobs when he got additional work, whereupon he told them that he would. Under these circumstances, I find that, the evidence is insufficient to establish that Respondent Union unlawfully refused to refer Ploeg, Sorenson, Robert Knowles, and Cummings or to place their names on the out-of-work lists, and that Respondent Union did not violate Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act as alleged.

IV. THE EFFECT OF THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES UPON COMMERCE

The activities of Respondent Company set forth in section III, above, occurring in connection with Respondent Company's operations described in section I, above, have a close, intimate, and substantial relationship to trade, traffic, and commerce among the several States and tend to lead to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow thereof.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Townsend and Bottum, Inc., is an employer engaged in commerce withhin the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. Local 70, United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipe Fitting Industry of the United States and Canada, AFL-CIO, is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. By discriminatorily laying off Kelley Rose on January 18, 1980; Ralph Landolf on January 23, 1980; Giles Buteau and Craig Whitlow on January 25, 1980; Dennis Thornley, Harry Sample, Jessie Wilkins, and Craig Whitlow on January 28, 1980; Terry Whitman, Thomas J. Slifko, William L. Slifko, and LeRoy Krieger on January 29, 1980; Ken Huizinga, Larry Patton, Mike Hubbard, Donald Ferrell, Arthur Ashby, John Ashby, Paul Sniff, Ray Schrier, Charles Dunn, Thomas Crawford, Richard Warren, Bernard Collins, Dennis Thornley, Charles Bowhan, and Larry Schaub on February 1, 1980; Craig Beckwith, Paul Veldman, Dave Hammerstrom, Robert Davis II, Walter Roung, Paul Ploeg, Robert Knowles, Harvey Cummings, Fred Sliter, Pat Sorenson, Robert A. McCarthy, Kevin Rogler, Richard Sharp, Ken Bryon, Murray Cohen, Jerry Lucas, Charles Vass, George Steinmetz, Joseph Pielesnik, Robert Howe, Joseph Broniecki, Vincent Reynolds, George Pellerin, John Higginbotham, Lewis Smith, James Daugherty, and Juan Barrios on February 8, 1980; and Lawrence Robert on February 14, 1980, because of their nonmembership in Respondent Union and in order to give preference to members of Respondent Union, Respondent Company has violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

4. Respondent Union did not violate Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act as alleged.

5. The aforesaid unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent Company has engaged in certain unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act, I shall recommend that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and to take certain affirmative action to effectuate the policies of the Act.

Accordingly, Respondent Company shall be ordered to offer immediate and full reinstatement to Kelley Rose, who was discriminatorily laid off on January 18, 1980; to Ralph Landolf, who was discriminatorily laid off on January 23, 1980; to Giles Buteau and Craig Whitlow, who were discriminatorily laid off on January 25, 1980; to Dennis Thornley, Harry Sample, Jessie Wilkins, and Craig Whitlow who were discriminatorily laid off on January 28, 1980; to Terry Whitman, Thomas J. Slifko, William L. Slifko, and LeRoy Krieger, who were discriminatorily laid off on January 29, 1980; to Ken Huizinga, Larry Patton, Mike Hubbard, Donald Ferrell, Arthur Ashby, John Ashby, Paul Sniff, Ray Schrier, Charles Dunn, Thomas Crawford, Richard Warren, Bernard Collins, Dennis Thornley, Charles Bowhan, and Larry Schaub, who were discriminatorily laid off on February 1, 1980; to Craig Beckwith, Paul Veldman, Dave Hammerstrom, Robert Davis II, Walter Roung, Paul Ploeg, Robert Knowles, Harvey Cummings, Fred Sliter, Pat Sorenson, Robert A. McCarthy, Kevin Rogler, Richard Sharp, Ken Bryon, Murray Cohen, Jerry Lucas, Charles Vass, George Steinmetz, Joseph Pielesnik, Robert Howe, Joseph Broniecki, Vincent Reynolds, George Pellerin, John Higginbotham, Lewis Smith, James Daughtery, and Juan Barrios, who were discriminatorily laid off on February 8; and to Lawrence Roberts, who was discriminatorily laid off on February 14, 1980, to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent jobs, without prejudice to their seniority and other rights and privileges.[19] It shall be ordered to make them whole for any loss of earnings and other compensation they may have suffered by reason of the discrimination against them in their employment herein found by laying them off on the dates indicated. Backpay shall be computed in the manner prescribed by the Board in F. W. Woolworth Company, 90 NLRB 289 (1950), with interest thereon as prescribed in Florida Steel Corporation, 231 NLRB 651 (1977).[20]

[Recommended Order omitted from publication]

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On June 30, 1980, Administrative Law Judge James T. Youngblood issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, counsel for the General Counsel filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge and hereby orders that the complaint be, and it hereby is, dismissed in its entirety.

MEMBER JENKINS, dissenting:

The Administrative Law Judge found that Respondent, Columbus Products Company, did not violate Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by refusing to furnish the Union with certain information which the Union requested to process grievances. I disagree and would reverse his findings.

The essential facts are not in dispute.

On November 16, 1978,[2] line two of the refrigeration assembly in Respondent's appliance manufacturing plant malfunctioned. Production on line two halted and those employees who worked on that line were temporarily unable to work. The regular lunch hour of the line two employees was from 11 until 11:30 a.m. Due to the malfunction, however, Respondent advanced the lunch hour by a half hour, that is, from 10:30 until 11 a.m. This change was resisted by the employees and the Union.

Respondent's supervisors observed two union stewards, Tom Fultz and Don Parkinson, who worked on line two, passing among the employees and speaking with each employee individually. Thereafter, most employees refused to change their lunch hours as Respondent's supervisors requested. Respondent stated that many employees verbally volunteered to their supervisors that Parkinson and Fultz had told them not to change their lunch hour. As a result of their refusal to follow supervisory instructions, the employees who refused to take an earlier lunch break were suspended for a day and a half. Respondent suspended Parkinson and Fultz for 5 days each on grounds that they fomented insubordination among the hourly employees.

Pursuant to the collective-bargaining agreement then in effect between the parties,[3] the Union filed grievances on behalf of the two stewards. During the grievance procedure the Union requested the names of employees who had volunteered information about Parkinson and Fultz. Respondent refused to divulge the employees' names, but it gave the Union the substance of their comments to the supervisors. On December 11, the Union also re-

[1] Our dissenting colleague correctly states the rule requiring an employer to provide information which is of probable or potential relevance to the proper performance of the duties of a collective-bargaining representative. However, the rule is not per se, and in each case the Board must determine whether the requested information is relevant, and if relevant, whether it is sufficiently important or needed to invoke a statutory obligation of the other party to produce it. Tool and Die Makers' Lodge No. 78, IAM, AFL-CIO (Square D Company, Milwaukee Plant), 224 NLRB 111 (1976).

We find, in agreement with the Administrative Law Judge, that the information here requested is not of such significance or necessity to warrant a finding that the refusal to provide it violates the Act. As emphasized by the Administrative Law Judge, Respondent informed the Union of the substance of the employees' statements pertaining to the conduct which is the subject of the grievance; Respondent assured the Union that it would not call as witnesses any of the employees who gave statements or make any reference to their statements in the grievance proceeding; and the Union did in fact interview every employee involved in the incident of alleged misconduct. In these circumstances, all relevant and needed information has been rendered and we fail to see how the furnishing of the names of employees can enable the Union to represent employees more effectively. See American Standard, Inc., 203 NLRB 1132 (1973). In this connection, the dissent's reliance on Transport of New Jersey, 233 NLRB 694 (1977), is misplaced. There, the subject of the grievance was the determination that a bus driver was at fault for a traffic accident. The union requested the names and addresses of passenger witnesses to the accident, even though the employer stated that its determination was based solely on the driver's, version and the physical circumstances. Clearly, the witnesses version of the accident would aid the union in evaluating the physical evidence and the driver's testimony. Further, the requested information was necessary because the union had no other way of knowing who the passengers were and was unable to interview them without securing their names from the employer. None of these considerations are present in the instant case. The Union knows which employees were involved in the incident and has already conducted interviews with them. Receiving the names of employees who gave statements to Respondent, therefore, adds nothing to the Union's ability to evaluate the grievance or intelligently pursue it.

[2] All dates herein are in late 1978 or early 1979, unless otherwise indicated.

[3] The collective-bargaining agreement was effective from October 18, 1976, through March 15, 1980.

259 NLRB No. 29

quested the names of the employees who were instructed or encouraged by Parkinson and Fultz to disobey orders from Respondent's supervisors. Respondent refused to furnish the information on grounds that it was unnecessary. Respondent also asserted, as an additional ground for denying both requests, that the Union would harass and retaliate against the employees should their names be revealed.[4]

On January 4, Respondent, by letter, informed the Union that it did not intend to call any of the employees as witnesses during the grievance and arbitration procedure, but that it would rely solely on the testimony of its supervisory personnel. The Union interviewed every employee on line two and obtained from them statements that they had not received encouragement to refuse to change their lunch hour from either Parkinson or Fultz.

The Administrative Law Judge observed that there was a duty imposed on an employer to provide the bargaining representative, upon request, information which is relevant and necessary in order that the representative may intelligently execute its statutory obligations to the employees whom it represents. However, he concluded, without citing any authority, that the Union was able to gather all relevant and necessary information it needed regarding the incident without forcing Respondent to disclose the names of the employees in question. In so finding, he emphasized that in response to the Union's request for employees' names Respondent gave the Union the substance of the comments made by those employees who talked with management after talking with the stewards. He further noted that, not only did the Union have access to all the information it needed, it had in fact interviewed all the employees involved in the incident. Finally, the Administrative Law Judge concluded that, since the Union had access to all information regarding the incident, Respondent was under no duty to furnish the names of employees whom it did not intend to call as witnesses merely because the Union claimed relevance. Accordingly, he dismissed the 8(a)(5) charges against Respondent.

The General Counsel contends that Supreme Court and Board precedent require a violation finding because Respondent refused the Union's request for information which was necessary and relevant to enable the Union to fulfill its duty to process the grievances and fairly represent the unit employees. I find merit in this contention.

The Board and the courts have applied a liberal discovery standard in determining whether a bargaining representative is entitled to requested information.[5] Thus, the Board has held that an employer has an obligation, as part of its duty to bargain in good faith, to provide information needed by a bargaining representative for the proper performance of its duties. It has further held that while an employer has no obligation to provide information which is plainly irrelevant to any dispute concerning the bargaining unit, it must supply information which is of even probable or potential relevance.[6] The rationale underlying this liberal discovery policy is to enable the bargaining agent to have sufficient information to evaluate the merits of an employee's claim.[7]

The information here requested by the Union meets the Board's standard of necessity and relevance. The Union requested two things in furtherance of the grievance, the names of all employees who had volunteered information about Parkinson and Fultz, and the names of those employees who were instructed or encouraged by Parkinson and Fultz to disobey Respondent's order to take an early lunch hour. Respondent refused to furnish any employees' names, but it did give the Union the substance of their comments. The record is unclear on this point, but presumably the "comments" referred to all the statements of those employees who volunteered information. Respondent has not, however, provided the Union the names of those employees whom Parkinson and Fultz told not to take the early lunch.

In similar circumstances the Board has held that an employer has a duty to furnish the names of witnesses to an incident for which an employee was disciplined, Transport of New Jersey, 233 NLRB 694 (1977). In that case a bus operator grieved the employer's determination that he was at fault in an accident. The union requested names and addresses of passenger witnesses to the accident. There, as here, the employer contended the information was not relevant because its determination of fault was not based upon any information from the witnesses whose identity the union sought, but instead was grounded solely on the operator's version of the accident and the physical circumstances. The Board rejected the employer's argument, finding that the names of the witnesses and the information which might be obtained from them was relevant to the issues raised by the grievance and were necessary to enable the union to intelligently process the grievance.

[4] Respondent did not offer any direct evidence to support its contention that the Union would harass the employees were their names to be revealed.

The same considerations apply here. Clearly the names of the employees who gave Respondent information about the two union stewards as well as the names of the employees who allegedly were instructed by the stewards to disobey orders are relevant to the issues raised by the grievance. Further, these employees may provide valuable firsthand information, which the Union does not now have, which could aid the Union in its evaluation of the merits of the grievance or which the Union could employ to rebut Respondent's case. That Respondent does not intend to rely on or refer to this information during the arbitration hearing does not detract from the importance of this information to the Union. Nor is the importance of the information diminished by the interviews already conducted by the Union with all the unit employees. Simply knowing the names of employees who allegedly either saw the stewards encouraging others to insubordination or were themselves so encouraged would give the Union a sense of the strength of Respondent's case and better enable it to evaluate the merits of its position and would enable the Union to verify such "second-hand" information or supplement it, if appropriate. This is particularly so where, as here, the employee responses to the Union's inquiries were at odds with the information the Union received from Respondent to the effect that employees advised their supervisors that the two stewards had instructed or encouraged them to disobey the early lunch hour order. It follows then that the names of the employees who volunteered this information are both relevant and necessary. Providing this information will facilitate the disposition of the grievance, which in turn will conserve the resources of the Board.

Respondent nevertheless argues that surrender of the information to the Union will expose the named employees to retaliation from the Union. In support of this position, it cites Anheuser-Busch, Inc.[8] In that case the Board held that an employer's refusal to furnish witnesses' statements was not a violation of Section 8(a)(5) of the Act because disclosure of the statements could lead to the intimidation of employees and the reluctance to give statements. The instant case is distinguishable in that the Union is not requesting witnesses' statements, thus there is no question of disclosing specific information given in confidence.[9] Further, the evil the Board sought to prevent in Anheuser-Busch—retaliation against employees who gave statements—is purely speculative in this case. Although Respondent contends that the Union will retaliate against these employees if their names are revealed, it cites no direct evidence to support its assertion. Moreover, Respondent stated that it did not intend to call employee witnesses. Hence, there can be no concern that the Union might attempt to force witnesses to change their testimony. I am therefore not persuaded that there is a substantial basis for Respondent's claimed fears of retaliation and harassment if the names are revealed.

Accordingly, I would find, for the foregoing reasons, that Respondent's refusal to furnish the Union with the information it requested violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

JAMES T. YOUNGBLOOD, Administrative Law Judge: The complaint which issued on January 17, 1979, alleges that since on or about December 11, 1978, the International Union of Electrical Radio and Machine Workers, AFL-CIO-CLC, and its Local 746 (herein the Union), requested Columbus Products Company, A Division of White-Westinghouse Corporation (herein Columbus or Respondent) to furnish the names of employees who allegedly were instructed and/or encouraged by employees Fultz and Parkinson to disobey orders from Respondent supervisors and since that date Respondent has refused to bargain collectively in good faith with the Union by failing and refusing to supply the Union with the information requested in violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act. Respondent filed an answer to the complaint admitting the service of the charge, jurisdiction of the Board, that Respondent is an employer as defined in the Act, and that the Union is a labor organization as alleged in the complaint, but denied the commission of any unfair labor practices. This matter was heard before me at Columbus, Ohio, on August 6, 1979. Respondent, the Charging Party, and the General Counsel filed post-hearing briefs which have been duly considered.

Upon the entire record, and from my observations of the witnesses and their demeanor, and after due consideration of the briefs filed by the parties, I hereby make the following:

FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS

A. The Facts

The facts in this case are not in dispute. Respondent and the Union executed a collective-bargaining agreement effective from October 18, 1976, to March 15, 1980.[1]

Continued

On November 16, 1978, mechanical problems arose on line two of the refrigeration assembly in Respondent's plant. As the line was shut down, employees were unable to work and this created a situation in which management decided to advance the normal lunch period by one-half hour. Thus, the normal lunch period was from 11 until 11:30 a.m. Respondent proposed to advance the lunch period by one-half hour making it from 10:30 to 11 a.m., thereby utilizing some of the downtime on the line. This change affected approximately 90 hourly employees on this line. There was resistance by the employees and the Union, and most employees refused to change their lunch period as instructed by management supervisors. Two union stewards, Parkinson and Fultz, were regularly assigned to work on a portion of line two. They were also affected by the shutdown. On the occasion of the lunch hour change, management employees allegedly observed these two stewards passing among the line two employees and talking to each employee. It appears that thereafter the hourly employees refused supervisory instructions to take an early lunch.

According to management, many of the employees volunteered verbally to their supervisors that stewards Parkinson and Fultz had told them not to change their lunch period. As indicated earlier, many of the hourly rated employees refused to change their lunch period as instructed by the supervisors. As a result of this many of the hourly employees received a disciplinary suspension of 1-1/2 days. Because management felt that part of the refusal by the employees to change their lunch period was the result of the encouragement to insubordination by stewards Parkinson and Fultz, the stewards were each given a 5-day disciplinary suspension. On December 4, 1978, grievances on their behalf were filed by the Union.

During the course of the grievance procedure the Union requested the names of all employees who had volunteered information about Parkinson and Fultz. The Company refused to furnish these employees' names but did divulge the substance of their comments. On December 11, the Union requested Respondent to furnish it with the names of employees who allegedly were instructed or encouraged by employees Fultz and Parkinson to disobey orders from Respondent's supervisors, contending the information is relevant and necessary to represent the employees in the bargaining unit, including the processing of their grievances. As indicated, Respondent refused to furnish the information contending it is not necessary and that the Union would retaliate and harass the employees.

During the grievance proceedings, and by letter dated January 4, 1979, and at the hearing, Respondent made it known to the Union that it did not intend to call any of the employees as witnesses during the grievance and arbitration procedure and that whatever testimony would be put on to establish that the employees had been informed by Parkinson and Fultz not to take the early lunch hour would be established by Respondent's supervisory personnel. Thus, Respondent made it clear that it did not intend to call any of the employees as witnesses and therefore Respondent had no need for their names. Additionally, Respondent asserts that the Union interviewed all of the employees on line two and obtained nothing from them with regard to any statements made to supervisors that the stewards told them not to change lunch hours. Respondent argues that because the employees are available to the Union and the Union can call as many witnesses as it deems necessary, it is not relevant to the Union's case in the grievance procedure for Respondent to divulge the names of the witnesses that it interrogated concerning the stewards who had informed them not to take the early lunch hour.

B. Conclusions

It is well settled that the Act imposes upon an employer the duty to furnish the Union, upon request, information relevant and necessary to enable it to intelligently carry out its statutory obligations as the employee's exclusive bargaining representative, and, under the standard of relevancy as applied by the Board and the courts, it is sufficient that the Union's request for information be supported by showing probable or potential relevance.

It is important to understand here that the Union did not request the substance of the employees' statement relating to the conduct of Parkinson and Fultz. It sought only the names of employees who allegedly were instructed by Parkinson and Fultz to disobey orders from Respondent's supervisors. Here Respondent had informed the Union that it was not going to call any of the employees who had given statements against the stewards as witnesses in the grievance and/or arbitration proceeding. It informed the Union that it would rely only upon its own supervisors' testimony. Additionally, Respondent informed the Union of the substance of the employees' statements pertaining to the conduct of Parkinson and Fultz. Moreover, the Union had in fact interviewed every employee involved on line two and had obtained from them a statement that they had not received any encouragement to insubordination from either steward Parkinson or steward Fultz.

It appears to me that in the instant case the Union was able to gather all the information it needed regarding the incident and was in full possession of all relevant and necessary information. The Union also had access to all information it needed to process the grievance through arbitration without forcing Respondent to disclose the names of witnesses.

While I agree that Respondent cannot determine what information it wishes to provide the collective-bargaining representative of its employees in its duty to fairly represent these employees, I also agree that Respondent does not have to provide the Union with information it does not need to process a grievance through arbitration. Thus, where the Union has access to all the information regarding the incident involved it is my conclusion that Respondent is under no duty to furnish the names of witnesses to the Union merely because it claims relevance. In the instant case, Respondent's representatives have disclosed to the Union the substance of the employees' statements made pertaining to the conduct of Parkinson and Fultz. All relevant information has been tendered. In my opinion it can serve no useful purpose to reveal the names of persons who not only will not be witnesses but will not even be referred to by name in the arbitration proceedings. Additionally, the Union has admitted that it interviewed each person involved in the incident and obtained their own information without regard to the names of the witnesses which might be called by Respondent.

All production employees, all tool room (Tool Department) employees, and all maintenance employees, including the zone maintenance men, but excluding all power house employees, all office and clerical employees, professional employees, guards and all supervisors as defined in the Act.

Therefore, it is my view as the Union has access to all of the information it needs to process the grievance through arbitration it is not incumbent upon Respondent to disclose the names of witnesses which it specifically has indicated it does not intend to call in the arbitration proceedings. Therefore, it is my conclusion that the complaint herein shall be dismissed in its entirety. Having found that Respondent is not engaged in the violation of the Act as alleged in the complaint, I shall recommend that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of the Act.
2. The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.
3. Respondent did not as alleged in the complaint refuse to bargain collectively with the Union as the collective-bargaining representative of Respondent's employees within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

On the basis of the foregoing findings and conclusions, and upon the entire record, and pursuant to Section 10(c) of the Act, I hereby issue the following recommended:

ORDER[2]

The complaint is hereby dismissed in its entirety.

---

[2] In the event no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Rules and Regulations of the National Labor Relations Board, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order herein shall, as provdied in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules and Regulations, be adopted by the Board and become its findings, conclusions, and Order, and all objections thereto shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company and Communications Workers of America, AFL-CIO. Case 5-CA-11932

November 21, 1981

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On June 10, 1981, Administrative Law Judge Benjamin Schlesinger issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief,[1] the General Counsel filed cross-exceptions and a brief in response to Respondent's exceptions, and the Charging Party Union filed a brief in opposition to Respondent's exceptions.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings,[2] and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge and hereby orders that the Respondent, Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company, Washington, D.C., its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the said recommended Order.

---

[1] Respondent has requested oral argument. This request is hereby denied as the record, the exceptions, and the briefs adequately present the issues and the positions of the parties.

[2] Respondent has excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Administrative Law Judge. It is the Board's established policy not to overrule an administrative law judge's resolutions with respect to credibility unless the clear preponderance of all of the relevant evidence convinces us that the resolutions are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, Inc., 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing his findings.

The Administrative Law Judge found that an early 1979 letter from the Union to Respondent stated that the Union did not engage in prearbitration discovery. However, no such statement appears in the letter. This apparently inadvertent error does not affect our decision.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

BENJAMIN SCHLESINGER, Administrative Law Judge: This proceeding was heard by me in Washington, D.C., on January 26-27, 1981. Based on an unfair labor practice charge filed on February 15, 1980, by Communications Workers of America, AFL-CIO (the Union), a complaint issued on July 3, 1980, alleging that Respondent Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, 29 U.S.C. §151, et seq., by refusing to furnish to the Union certain information concerning pending arbitration. Respondent denied that it violated the Act in any manner and set forth numerous affirmative defenses including, inter alia, the untimely filing of the charge under Section 10(b) of the Act, and the past practice, waiver, estoppel, and the burden of complying with the Union's request.

Upon consideration of the entire record in this proceeding,[1] including my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and the briefs submitted by the General Counsel, Respondent, and the Union, I hereby make the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

I. JURISDICTION

I find, as Respondent admits, that it is a New York corporation engaged in the installation and maintenance of communications services at its Washington, D.C., location. During the 12 months preceding the issuance of the complaint, a representative period, Respondent had gross revenues in excess of $1 million and purchased and received from points located outside the District of Columbia goods and services valued in excess of $50,000. I conclude, as Respondent admits, that it is an employer engaged in commerce and in operations affecting commerce as defined in Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

I further find and conclude, as Respondent admits, that the Union is and has been a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act. At all times material herein, Respondent has recognized the Union as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of its employees in a unit appropriate for collective bargaining consisting of all nonsupervisory and nonconfidential employees employed in various job classifications by Respondent at its Washington, D.C., Virginia, West Virginia, and Maryland facilities. The agreement in effect at the times pertinent to this proceeding contained a detailed three-step procedure, followed by arbitration, for the resolution of employees' grievances.[2]

II. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. The Facts

In late 1978,[3] employee Dennis Henson was suspended for 2 days for his use of an "improper tone of voice" when speaking with one of Respondent's customers. Henson grieved his suspension and, following the failure of Henson's immediate supervisor to remove the suspen-

[1] Certain errors in the transcript are hereby noted and corrected.

[2] Only the Union has the right to file grievances, and only certain grievances may be arbitrated.

[3] Despite the fact that this proceeding was exhaustively litigated, there does not appear in the record the date when the underlying alleged discipline occurred. Nonetheless, the parties, in their equally exhaustive briefs, have stated that the discipline took place in or about the time indicated, which I have accepted as fact.

sion, the grievance was appealed to the second step. There, and on or about December 19, 1978, Michael M. Agnew, the executive vice president of the Union's Local 2336, pressed Henson's claim and, during discussion with Edison, a representative of Respondent, requested various documents. He was permitted to examine (but not allowed a copy of)[4] all documents pertaining to Respondent's actions, both positive and negative, concerning Henson; and Edison read to him (Agnew was not allowed to read it himself) the policy guide that Respondent used to discipline Henson. Agnew asked whether Respondent's records showed that any other employee had been suspended for the same offense. Edison replied that she did not know of any and would not supply a list of names of such employees in any event. The second-step conference ended without agreement on the underlying grievance.

At the third-step conference held on February 13, 1979, Charles Sangmeister, a union staff representative, was the Union's chief spokesman. During the course of the meeting, because Respondent's representative stated that it was standard policy to suspend emoloyees for using an improper tone of voice, even for the first time, Sangmeister asked Respondent's supervisors to produce Respondent's policies showing that employees guilty for the first time of usinq an improper tone of voice had to be suspended and for the names of those employees who had been similarly suspended. Respondent's representative stated that he did not have the names of persons disciplined and would not produce them if he had.

On February 14, 1979, the Union filed its demand for arbitration, there being a time limit of 2 weeks to do so after the parties failed to agree in the third step. At that point, as has been customary in the handling of these disputes, the Union's attorney assumed control of the grievance. In reviewing the files, Attorney Michael A. Murphy realized that his information was insufficient to permit him to make a judgment as to whether to arbitrate Henson's grievance, settle it, or withdraw it. Because he failed to receive a favorable response to his request of Respondent for information, he issued on October 10, 1979, two subpenas, signed by the designated impartial and union arbitrators,[5] one requiring Respondent to produce, prior to the arbitration, the "name of each employee fired, suspended, or given a final warning solely for an improper tone of voice toward a customer during the last five years." On October 11, 1979, Respondent's legal department responded that it would "not honor such a request since we view it as pre-arbitration discovery. As you well know, it has never been our practice to engage in such discovery prior to an arbitration hearing."

The arbitration hearing was scheduled, delayed, and postponed, from time to time, on request of the Union, which in December 1979 sought unsuccessfully to enforce its subpena in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia. After the district court dismissed the Union's complaint, the Union filed the unfair labor practice charge which initiated this proceeding; rescheduled the arbitration for hearing on September 4, 1980; still later, on June 9, 1980, renewed its request of Respondent for the same material; and finally refused to hold the arbitration hearing pending the disposition of the instant proceeding.

B. Credibility

There is one factual finding supra, which deserves some discussion, that is, whether in the second and third steps, union representatives requested documents pertaining to the discipline of other employees for the offense of which Henson was accused. Despite the testimony of Agnew and Sangmeister, Respondent claims that the Union's minutes of the grievance meetings show no such demand for information. Respondent's minutes also contain no such reference.

Respondent contends, therefore, that the testimony was fabricated. Its argument is not without some appeal, especially because the Union did not immediately file an unfair labor practice charge against Respondent. However, Respondent's argument might have been persuasive had one of Respondent's eight representatives at the two grievance meetings testified in supoort of Respondent's position. However, not one of them testified at the hearing. No excuse for their nonappearance was presented, and I infer from their absence that they would not have supported Respondent's present contentions. Golden State Bottling Co., Inc., d/b/a Pepsi-Cola Bottling Company of Sacramento v. N.L.R.B., 414 U.S. 168, 174 (1973); International Union, United Automobile, Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers of America (UAW) [Gyrodyne Co. of America], 459 F.2d 1329, 1335–39 (D.C. Cir. 1972); Fred Stark and Jamaica 201 St. Corp., Inc. and Jamaica 202 St. Corp., Inc., 213 NLRB 209, 214 (1974), enfd. 525 F.2d 422, 431 (2d Cir. 1975), cert. denied 424 U.S. 967 (1976). Because the minutes were neither verbatim nor recorded by professional note takers, because of the possibility that the discussions at the time of the requests by Agnew and Sangmeister were proceeding so rapidly that no scrivener was able to record the requests, and because of my conclusion that the testimony of Agnew and Sangmeister was not so improbable or unreliable that it should be discredited, I find that the demands for the information were, in fact, made as they related.[6]

C. Discussion

N.L.R.B. v. Acme Industrial Co., 385 U.S. 432 (1967), the Supreme Court held that the duty to bargain in good faith includes the obligation of an employer to disclose to its employees' collective-bargaining representative such material as is relevant and reasonably necessary to permit the representative to administer the terms and provisions of the agreement. See also Trustees of Boston University, 210 NLRB 330, 333 (1974); Montogmery Ward & Co., Incorporated, 234 NLRB 588, 589 (1978). In Acme, the material was requested to permit the representative to determine whether to pursue a grievance to arbitration, and Respondent would be hard pressed to argue that, if such were the purpose of the demand herein and this proceeding arose prior to the Union's demand for arbitration, it would not be obliged to submit to the Union such material as it had.

[4] See Communications Workers of America, AFL–CIO, Local 1051 v. N.L.R.B., 644 F.2d 923 (1st Cir. 1981).

[5] The arbitration provision provides for a tripartite arbitration panel; one arbitrator chosen by the Union; one, by Respondent; and the third, by the two parties' designated arbitrators.

[6] Respondent contends that grievances were always held "open" awaiting review of information not supplied by Respondent to the Union. That is accurate to a point, that is, when Respondent agreed to supply the requested information, which it has not done in the instant proceeding. That Sangmeister, when given documents by Respondent relating to the Henson grievance after arbitration had been filed for, did not protest Respondent's failure to produce the names of other employees similarly disciplined is not persuasive. Sangmeister had already been advised that his request would not be honored.

But Respondent's complaint, in essence, is that once arbitration was requested by the Union, the Union was no longer deciding whether the grievance was meritorious. Rather, it had already made that determination and was now seeking to use its demand to prove its case—that is, the Union's request is actually one for prearbitration discovery, which Respondent contends is permitted neither by law nor by logic nor by public policy. Prior decisions, however, do not support Respondent's claim. It has been held numerous times that the duty to supply information extends to a request for material to prepare a grievance for arbitration. The Fafnir Bearing Company, 146 NLRB 1582, 1586 (1964), enfd. 362 F.2d 716, 721 (2d Cir. 1966); St. Joseph's Hospital (Our Lady of Providence Unit), 233 NLRB 1116, 1119 (1977); Designcraft Jewel Industries, Inc., 254 NLRB 791 (1981); The Kroger Company, 226 NLRB 512 (1976); Fawcett Printing Corporation, 201 NLRB 964, 972-973 (1973); Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, 150 NLRB 1478, 1485-86 (1965); Cook Paint & Varnish Co. v. N.L.R.B., 648 F.2d 712, 712-716 (D.C. Cir. 1981).[7]

So many of the arguments made by Respondent are answered in one or more of these decisions that it is really unnecessary to proceed through the list of Respondent's claims. Suffice it to say, the list of the Union's grievance was that Henson, even if he did use an improper tone of voice, should not have been suspended for 2 days, because no other employee had been similarly disciplined, and that Henson's offense warranted at most a warning under Respondent's policy of progressive discipline.[8] Thus, whether other employees had not been suspended for a similar offense became critical to the Union. If the material requested by the Union had been produced prior to the Union's demand for arbitration, such documents may have supported the Union's claim of disparate treatment and could have been submitted to the arbitrator. In essence, any request by an employee's representative for information prior to the arbitration demand constitutes prearbitration discovery, albeit that the request is also motivated by the representative's desire to determine whether to proceed to arbitration.

The Union's requests for the same information after filing for arbitration attempt to fulfill the very same functions, enabling the Union to "decide what role it will seek to play," Florida Steel Corporation v. N.L.R.B., 601 F.2d 125, 128 (4th Cir. 1979); that is, whether arbitration is worthwhile if the Union cannot prove its claim of disparity. If it cannot, testified Union Attorney Murphy, the grievance might well have been withdrawn, as other of the Union's grievances have been withdrawn within several weeks of the scheduled arbitration hearing. Respondent argues that making it supply the requested material would destroy the ease and informality of arbitration proceedings, would unnecessarily delay the arbitration hearing, and would wrongly inject the Board into the arbitration process, in which it has no expertise. However, these contentions have essentially been answered by the Supreme Court in Acme Industrial Co., 355 U.S. at 438-489, as follows:

> Far from intruding upon the preserve of the arbitrator, [the production of the requested documents herein would be] in aid of the arbitral process. Arbitration can function properly only if the grievance procedures leading to it can sift out unmeritorious claims. For if all claims originally initiated as grievances had to be processed through to arbitration, the system would be woefully overburdened. Yet, that is precisely what the respondent's restrictive view would require. It would force the union to take a grievance all the way through arbitration without providing the opportunity to evaluate the merits of the claim.

"Arbitration," as used in the above quotation, means the "arbitration hearing." Until the hearing commences, the arbitrator's sole function is to schedule a time and date for the hearing. It is the hearing which the Supreme Court believed might be avoided by the exchange of information so that those grievances which had no merit might be withdrawn. Accordingly, I conclude that, unless Respondent's affirmative defenses are meritorious, Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by failing to comply with the Union's request for information.

[7] Both of the decisions on which Respondent places principal reliance are distinguishable. In Tool & Die Makers' Lodge 78, IAM [Square D. Company], 224 NLRB 111 (1976), the Board dismissed the 8(b)(3) complaint because there had been no showing that the requested documents were relevant. In Sinclair Refining Company, 145 NLRB 732 (1963), the complaint that the employer had refused to produce documents prior to arbitration was dismissed as moot since the arbitration had already been held and the employer produced the requested documents at the arbitration. The Board noted, nonetheless, that the employer had not met its bargaining obligations when it refused the union's request which was relevant to the union's responsibility "in policing or administering a contract, or adjusting a grievance . . . " (Id. at 733.)

[8] Respondent's personnel department guide G-805 (guide) provides that there are four distinct types of disciplinary measures of ascending degrees of severity: (1) reprimands; (2) warnings; (3) suspensions; and (4) dismissals. It is recommended, but not required, that discipline must follow that order and that, generally, employees should be suspended only after reprimand and warnings have been tried to no avail. Further, supervisors are advised that the discipline they mete out should be impartial, take into consideration all the facts and circumstances of the case, and "be consistent with the penalties assigned for similar behavior situations in the past. Data on previous, similar cases can be obtained from the Personnel Department-Labor Relations Staff." The fact that Respondent contends herein that its discipline of Henson did not follow a "cookie cutter" approach, but was based solely on the facts of Henson's offense is not to the point. Transport of New Jersey, 233 NLRB 694 (1977). The requested information was necessary to the union's case.

D. Respondent's Defenses

1. Past practice

Respondent contends that the past practice under its agreements with the Union mandates a finding that the complaint herein be dismissed. It cites a 1953 arbitration award, in which an arbitrator disposed of the Union's motion for Respondent's production of documents in advance of the hearing by noting that he had no right, prior to the opening of the hearing before him, to require such production; but he did require the production of certain requested material at the hearing which is the procedure which Respondent claims is the only proper course of action herein. Respondent further contends that it has never permitted prearbitration discovery, has not allowed for depositions of witnesses (although there does not appear from the record that the Union ever requested depositions), and has consistently rejected the Union's attempts to obtain interrogatories (no examples were given). Specifically, Respondent points to (1) a November 20, 1978, request by the Union for information concerning a grievance involving employees Lamp and Bragg, which request was rejected by Respondent on November 21, 1978; and (2) a union letter in early 1979 stating that it did not exchange witnesses' lists or engage in prearbitration discovery.[9]

The General Counsel and the Union rely, however, on Respondent's practice, at least from 1971, of supplying personnel files to the Union for its inspection (and sometimes copies thereof), a practice which since 1974 has been incorporated in the collective-bargaining agreements. Further, they note that, in four grievance proceedings, copies of documents other than personnel files have been supplied by Respondent. In 1973, in a grievance involving employee Critchfield, who was terminated as a result of making personal telephone calls from customers' telephones, Respondent's investiqation after the Union had requested arbitration revealed additional violations by the employee. It consulted with the Union's counsel, who had thought that the employee's offense had been his first, and it turned over the new material to union counsel, as a result of which the grievance was withdrawn from arbitration. In early 1979, in a grievance involving employee Shacreaw, who was terminated because she could not perform her work resulting from an on-the-job injury (according to the Union) or from a preexisting ailment (according to Respondent), the Union demanded, and Respondent supplied, a copy of Shacreaw's medical files. In that same grievance proceeding, Respondent also requested various documents from the Union and, when the Union did not comply, filed an unfair labor practice charge alleging that the Union violated Section 8(b)(3) of the Act by failing to supply "information relevant and necessary to [Respondent's] . . . preparations for the arbitration." In mid-1979, the Union demanded, and Respondent complied therewith, a copy of certain training material that employee Herbert had used in instructing other employees so that the Union could prove that she was entitled to a management differential. In November 1979, Respondent made available to the Union's attorney, prior to the scheduled arbitration, the personnel and medical files of Denise Thompson, so that "the parties can reach an understanding as to whether or not this will actually be heard."

Respondent contends generally that the production of material to the Union's attorneys has been merely a matter of "professional courtesy," but no explanation has been given why "professional courtesy" cannot constitute a past practice. If, in fact, counsel for Respondent and the Union have been regularly exchanging material, a practice which Respondent concedes in its orief was engaged in "in order to save time at the beginning of the hearing," that is as much of a practice affecting the rights of employees covered by the collective-bargaining agreement as any other practices concerning terms and conditions of employment.

Specifically, Respondent takes issue with the General Counsel's and the Union's contentions concerning Critchfield and Shacreaw.[10] As to the former, Respondent explains that the material consisted of after-acquired documents which had not heen discussed with Respondent during the three-step grievance procedure and that it felt it was necessary to disclose the material to the Union to avoid a claim of surprise. Curiously, it also argues in its brief that it supplied the information to the Union to persuade it to withdraw the grievance, a result which happily was accomplished. The upshot of Respondent's argument, therefore, is that it will supply information when it feels that it will lead to the avoidance of an arbitration hearing, but it will not comply with a union request, even though the Union's object may be the same.[11] Further, I find no logical distinction in the fact that the material turned over in the Critchfield grievance was acquired after the Union had filed for arbitration. The fact remains that Respondent furnished the material while a grievance was pending arbitration.

I similarly reject Respondent's contention regarding Shacreaw, as to whom it claims that Virginia law required it to exchange medical records regarding a workmen's compensation claim. Murphy testified that Shacreaw's compensation claim had heen disposed of and whatever state requirement had existed was no longer applicable.[12] Respondent's defense that there was a past practice forbidding the exchange of information after arbitration had been filed for must be rejected; it appears that the past practice was quite to the contrary.[13] Furthermore, Respondent's alleged reliance on the 1953 arbitration award is misplaced. The arbitrator there did not decide when the Union was entitled to obtain the requested documents, but whether the Union was entitled to them. Indeed, he stated that he was entitled to rule on the question only when the arbitration hearing formally commenced. The actual past practice of the parties is more persuasive than the almost 30-year-old award.

[9] Respondent's assistant vice president for personnel, Albert Sears, testified that Respondent has never honored any written request by the Union for records prior to an arbitration hearing. I discredit his testimony for two reasons: first, because there is documentary testimony to the contrary; second, because of the thoroughness of the presentation of Respondent's case, I am persuaded that all written evidence of past practice was submitted at the hearing, and there is no more.

[10] Respondent's compliance with the Union's requests in the Herbert and Thompson grievances is unexplained.

[11] In the Thompson grievance, Respondent's attorney suggested that he would continue to supply information to the Union in advance of the hearing "in order to facilitate the Union's preparation for an arbitration hearing [which procedures] . . . will obviate the need to involve arbitrators in pre-hearing matters."

[12] Respondent's brief also argues that "under established Bell System and C & P policy, employees are entitled to a release of their medical information upon signing the proper authorization form." Respondent's brief cites no page references, and I find no record support for this assertion.

2. Waiver

Respondent's position with respect to the Shacreaw grievance is also relevant to its claim of waiver, because, with respect to Shacreaw, Respondent's labor relations general counsel, Dworski, testified to "our contract was superseded by state law and we had a duty in fact to give the medical file to Shacreaw."[14] Why that duty was not waived, as Respondent contends in this proceeding, because the collective-bargaining agreement provides for the supply to the Union only of personnel records and for the conduct of arbitration hearings in accordance with the Voluntary Labor Arbitration Rules of the American Arbitration Association (AAA rules), is wholly unexplained. I conclude that the Act and the decisions of the Board and the courts interpreting the Act are at least as worthy of yielding to as is the Virginia statute, and that the Act was specifically incorporated in the agreement, by operation of the agreement itself.

In any event, assuming that Dworski's explanation of the Shacreaw incident was not definitive, Board law is clear that any waiver of the riqhts granted by the Act must be clear and unequivocal.[15] Westinghouse Electric Corporation, 239 NLRB 106, 110 (1978), enfd. as modified 648 F.2d 18 (D.C. Cir. 1980); California Portland Cement Company, 101 NLRB 1436, 1438–39 (1952); Hekman Furniture Company, 101 NLRB 631 (1952), enfd. 207 F.2d 561 (6th Cir. 1953). See also Florida Steel Corp. v. N.L.R.B., supra at 129–130; Timken Roller Bearing Co. v. N.L.R.B., 325 F.2d 746, 751 (6th Cir. 1963); Communications Workers, Local 1051 v. N.L.R.B., supra. I cannot find such a waiver herein. Although the procedural rights in the conduct of the arbitration hearing may be governed by the AAA rules, there is nothing therein which abolishes the rights for the production of material which the Union may find necessary to decide whether to pursue a grievance to arbitration. Nor does the inclusion of the Union's right to obtain copies of employees' personnel records exclude the Union's right to obtain other information necessary to make a judgment whether to proceed to arbitration. California Portland Cement Company, supra; Globe-Union, Inc., 233 NLRB 1458, 1460 (1977). Indeed, the impact of the AAA rules upon the rights of the Union to receive documents prior to an arbitration hearing was never discussed by the parties to the collective-bargaining agreement. Finally, Respondent's attempt in the Shacreaw grievance to obtain material from the Union prior to the arbitration, its filing of an unfair labor practice charge when the Union did not comply with its request, and its November 1979 letter to the Union in connection with the Thompson grievance that it would continue to afford the Union complete access to all relevant documents to facilitate the Union's preparation for arbitration hearings belie Respondent's argument that it thought that it was the written understanding of the parties to the collective agreement that the right to obtain material had been waived.[16]

3. Collateral estoppel

The Union's proceeding in the United States District Court does not have any binding collateral estoppel effect on the instant dispute. Read in the best light for Respondent, the court's decision held only that there was no right under the United States Uniform Arbitration Act to require the production of documents prior to the arbitration hearing. It is not clear, however, that this holding was anything more than dicta, because the court noted that it had no in personam jurisdiction because of the Union's failure to serve a summons, as required by rule 4 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. In no event can the court's decision be read as a finding that the Act does not permit the production of the supenaed material. That was neither relied on by the Union, nor raised by Respondent, nor adjudicated by the Court,[17] which has no jurisdiction under the Act to make a binding determination that Section 8(a)(5) has or has not been violated.[18]

[13] There is no evidence that the Union ever turned over material to Respondent; rather, the record indicates that the Union always refused to do so. Whether this is equitable, or what the effects of the Union's actions are, I withhold judgment because the matter is not before me. It should be restated that the right of grievances and arbitration is a unilateral one. Only the Union may grieve, and only as to specific matters. Only the Union is concerned with the ultimate decision of whether to process a grievance to arbitration.

[14] Art. 15 of the applicable collective-bargaining agreement provides in part as follows:

> Should any Federal or State law or the final determination of any court of competent jurisdiction or any proclamation or order having the force of law at any time affect the provisions of this Agreement, such provision shall be construed as having been changed to the extent necessary to conform to such law or decision.

[15] This assumes, arguendo, that the Union's right to information to enable it to fulfill its duties as a collective-bargaining representative may be waived. See N.L.R.B. v. Magnavox Company of Tennessee, 415 U.S. 322, 325 (1974).

[16] Respondent argues that, by reason of its past practice, the Union's right to information has also been waived. I have previously found that the past practice has been that Respondent has supplied such information. In any event, a waiver by virtue of past practice must be equally "clear and unmistakable." Native Textiles, 246 NLRB 228 (1979). Respondent also arques that the Union made no attempt, after the 1953 arbitration award, to change the arbitration clause of the collective-bargaining agreement, thus demonstrating that the award barred, and the Union understood that it barred, prearbitration discovery. Even if the Union had attempted to change the arbitral provision, and had been unsuccessful, Board law still would have found no waiver. The Proctor & Gamble Manufacturing Company, 237 NLRB 747, 751 (1978), enfd. 603 F.2d 1310 (8th Cir. 1979); The Timken Roller Bearing Company, 138 NLRB 15, 16 (1962).

[17] Collateral estoppel applies only to "situations where the matter raised in the second suit is identical in all respects with that decided in the first proceeding." Commissioner of Internal Revenue v. Sunnen, 333 U.S. 591, 597–598 (1948).

[18] In support of its position, Respondent cited N.L.R.B. v. Walter E. Heyman, d/b/a Stanwood Thriftmart, 541 F.2d 796 (9th Cir. 1976), for the proposition that "the grant of jurisdiction under Section 301 gives the district courts the powers necessary to enforce judgments and makes those judgments binding through the doctrines of res judicata and collat-

4. Bad faith

Nor may it fairly be said that the Union exhibited bad faith, as claimed by Respondent. It is true that, in one instance, the Union applied to the impartial arbitrator, ex parte, for a postponement of the arbitration hearing and that the Union attempted to delay the holding of the hearing until it was satisfied that it had a reasonable case to present. But that has no bearing on whether the Union was sincere in its efforts to obtain material which it believed relevant to prove Henson's claim that his suspension constituted disparate discipline, a claim which Respondent contends is made by the Union in 80 percent of the arbitration hearings and which appears, on the basis of this record, to be a relevant and material consideration for disposition by the arbitration panel.[19] Moreover, there are a number of expenses which the Union sought to avoid and which would appear to justify the Union's actions if it could not prove disparity—the expenses of the arbitration, the hearing room, attorney's fees, and the witnesses, not the least of whom was Henson, who at the time of the hearing was employed in California. The Fafnir Bearing Company, 146 NLRB at 1587.

I am persuaded that the Union desired to represent Henson and to pursue his grievance, if a reasonable claim could be made. I find no bad faith on its part.

5. Section 10(b)

Respondent claims that the Union's charges were untimely under Section 10(b) of the Act because the alleged violation arose in December 1978, at the second-step grievance meeting or, at the latest, on February 13, 1979, at the third-step grievance meeting; and the charge was filed more than a year later. However, within the 6 months prior to the charge, the Union had served its subpena request[20] for the same documents that it sought before, albeit for an additional reason. In the grievance step meetings, it requested the material in order to decide whether to pursue the grievance to arbitration. The object of the subpena request was the same and was to prepare for the arbitration if the information supplied by Respondent supported the Union's claim. The violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) found herein is a continuing violation, because Respondent has refused to bargain; that is, it has refused to give to the Union the documents necessary for the Union to make a judgment whether to proceed to the formal arbitration hearing and to prepare for that arbitration. Board law holds that each request for information and each denial by Respondent constitute a separate and independent violation of the Act. Ocean Systems, Inc., 227 NLRB 1593, 1594, fn. 5 (1977). Respondent's refusal to comply with the subpena request, standing alone, and without reference to any other refusal, was a denial to the Union of information necessary to enable it to decide whether to proceed to and prepare for the arbitration hearing. See N.L.R.B. v. Preston H. Haskell Company, 616 F.2d 136, 140–142 (5th Cir. 1980).

The Board's theory of "continuing violations" has been upheld by many circuit courts of appeals. International Union, United Automobile, Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers of America, AFL–CIO v. N.L.R.B., 363 F.2d 702, 706–707 (D.C. Cir. 1966); N.L.R.B. v. Joseph T. Strong, d/b/a Strong Roofing and Insulating Co., 386 F.2d 929, 930–931 (9th Cir. 1967), reversed on other grounds 393 U.S. 357 (1969); J. Ray McDermott & Co., Inc. v. N.L.R.B., 571 F.2d 850, 858 (5th Cir. 1978); N.L.R.B. v. Basic Wire Products, Inc., 516 F.2d 261, 267–268 (6th Cir. 1975). But its support has been far from universal. N.L.R.B. v. Serv-All Co., 491 F.2d 1273, 1275 (10th Cir. 1974); N.L.R.B. v. McCready and Sons, Inc., 482 F.2d 872, 875 (6th Cir. 1973); N.L.R.B. v. Field & Sons, Inc., 462 F.2d 748, 750–755 (1st Cir. 1972); (rationale questioned in McCready); General Marine Transport Corporation v. N.L.R.B., 619 F.2d 180, 186–188 (2d Cir. 1980). It is clear that, until this conflict is resolved by the Supreme Court, I must apply Board law and dismiss the instant defense. Capitol Foods, Inc. d/b/a Schulte's IGA Foodliner, 241 NLRB 855, 856 (1979).

6. Burden

Dworski testified that he was advised by his legal staff that compliance with the Union's demand would require going through the personnel records of all employees involved with customer handling to determine whether anyone had ever been disciplined for an offense similar to that which Henson had been accused of. He stated that there is no listing or central record of such offenses and that warnings might not show in files in any event, because oral final warnings are not necessarily recorded.

On the other hand, Respondent has a policy, in line with its progressive discipline standard, that if a supervisor desires to determine the type of disciplinary action required for a particular infraction, the supervisor is to call Respondent's labor relations department, which will advise it of the type of disciplinary action that has been administered in the past based on records the department keeps for similar instances. Respondent's guide requires that all warnings be recorded in detail. Further, in the third-step grievance procedure, Respondent's representative advised the Union that Respondent always gave a 2-day suspension for the offense Henson was accused of. And, just a week before the hearing herein, Sangmeister represented the Union in yet another grievance meeting where the issue presented was a suspension for a first offense. Respondent's representatives stated that they checked with the labor relations department and ascertained that other employees had been suspended for similar offenses. Finally, Dworski admitted that Respondent maintains a summary of discipline, with broad categories of dismissals and suspensions. There are, therefore, suffieral estoppel in such forums as the NLRB." The court there made clear, however, at 800, that: "Were the Board to have found unfair labor practices extrinsic to the collective bargaining agreement . . . the Board would properly be operating solely within its own jurisdictional authority," and no res judicata effect need apply.

[19] This finding is made solely for the purposes of this proceeding. The panel, if the Henson case is finally arbitrated, has full latitude to dispose of the disparity issue, which the panel may find is irrelevant.

[20] Respondent takes no issue with the fact that the request for documents was made by subpena, rather than in any other manner, noting that "there is no legitimate distinction" in the manner of making the request and that, in the words of Respondent's brief, "A rose by any other name is still a rose."

cient indicia that there are such records which may be easily gathered by Respondent.

I am not persuaded that the search for the records will be as difficult as Dworski contended. First, I find that his principal concern was with the general doctrine of prearbitration discovery and not with the burden thereof. Indeed, he related that it was not particularly the Union's demand for 5 years of records which primarily concerned him. It was the principle of discovery which was troublesome, and a demand for any shorter period of time would have been equally offensive. Second, his testimony concerning what was in Respondent's files was general, vague, secondhand, and contradictory, in that he also testified that Respondent also maintained a general discipline summary, which he thought did not include warnings, but contained broad categories of dismissals and suspensions. My impression is that, with the care exhibited in the hearing of this proceeding, Respondent possesses and maintains more easily accessible records than Dworski was willing to admit, especially in light of Respondent's documented policy. Third, this impression is further supported by Dworski's letter, dated July 25, 1980, in which he complained to the impartial arbitrator of the Union's request, noting, in part, that "some of [the information] is simply not available to" Respondent, which indicates that other of the information is available, without undue burden.

Finally, I reject Respondent's claim that the Union, by making inquires of its members and leaving messages on its telephone, may obtain the same information that Respondent is withholding. The Board has held that the union may not be subjected "to a burdensome procedure of obtaining desired information where the employer has the information available in a more convenient form." The Kroger Company, 226 NLRB at 513; Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company, 246 NLRB 327 (1979); N.L.R.B. v. Borden, Inc., 600 F.2d 313, 318 (1st Cir. 1979).

7. Other defenses

During the course of the hearing, Respondent raised other defenses which, by reason of their absence from its brief, have apparently been abandoned. Because Respondent is not restricted from pursuing these defenses, should exceptions be filed to this Decision, I note that I am singularly unpersuaded that, merely because the Union filed for arbitration the Henson grievance, the controversy lost its character as a grievance. There are too many references to "grievance" in the article of the agreement concerning arbitration to hold otherwise (i.e., "In any grievance arbitrated," "grievances which are arbitrable," and "The decision of the umpire will resolve the grievance"). Respondent knows this is so; for, when it filed an unfair labor practice charge against the Union in the Shacreaw matter, it complained that the documents it sought were "relevant and necessary to the Company's processing of the grievance and its preparations for the arbitration."

Respondent also impliedly contended that article 6 of the agreement, requiring Respondent to furnish monthly certain information pertaining to employees' names, addresses, job classifications, wages, and dues deductions, restricted the Union's right to other information. Notwithstanding that this defense was not specifically raised in Respondent's answer, it is clear that this information related to the Union's administration of its internal affairs and had nothing to do with either grievance matters or with documents which the Act requires to be furnished. Furthermore, this article was never referred to by Respondent in limiting the Union's right to information. In the Denise Thompson grievance proceeding, Respondent stated that it would review the Union's request for information utilizing the standards of the Act. In settling an 8(a)(5) charge arising out of Respondent's failure to supply copies of documents requested by the Union, Respondent agreed to furnish such documents "when such information is relevant to a pending grievance"—without any reference to article 6. Finally, Respondent's principal negotiator testified that the only provision of the agreement which had a bearing on the Union's right to information prior to an arbitration hearing was that concerning the AAA rules. I conclude that Respondent's contention has no merit.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

By virtue of the foregoing, I conclude that Respondent, by not furnishing the requested material, violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act. Respondent's activities set forth in this section II, occurring in connection with its operations described in section I, above, have a close, intimate, and substantial relationship to trade, traffic, and commerce among the several States and tend to lead to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow thereof.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in and is engaging in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act, I shall recommend that it cease and desist therefrom. I shall also recommend that Respondent, upon request, furnish the Union with a list of the names of each employee fired, suspended, or given a final warning solely for using an improper tone of voice toward a customer during the last 5 years. In this regard, the Union contends that all it is looking for is the same kind of information that Respondent would show to its own supervisor who was attempting to decide what kind of discipline should be imposed on an employee such as Henson. It is not the intention of this Decision to require Respondent to search through thousands of files. On the other hand, Respondent should make reasonable efforts to comply with the Union's request and, if there is still a claim of burden, attempt to reach some accommodation with the Union so that information is supplied. If there is still further dispute, that may be resolved in the compliance stage of this proceeding. Food Employer Council, Inc., et al., 197 NLRB 651 (1972).

The Union has requested the imposition of costs and attorney's fees, under Tiidee Products, Inc., 194 NLRB 1234 (1972), and Hecks, Inc., 215 NLRB 765 (1974). I find that Respondent's claims are not so frivolous and lacking in merit as to warrant this relief. Finally, the Union also requests that the recommended Order should direct Respondent to furnish copies of all relevant information requested concerning the processing of a grievance at any stage of the grievance and arbitration process. This requested relief in haec verba is obviously too broad and may well impinge upon the jurisdiction of the arbitrator at the actual hearing.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact, conclusions of law, and the entire record, and pursuant to Section 10(c) of the Act, I hereby issue the following recommended:

ORDER[21]

The Respondent, Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company, Washington, D.C., its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Refusing to bargain collectively with Communications Workers of America, AFL-CIO by refusing to furnish it with information that it requests which is relevant and reasonably necessary to the processing and evaluation of grievances and preparing them for arbitration.

(b) In any like or related manner engaging in conduct in derogation of its statutory duty to bargain in good faith with the Union, and in any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action which is necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Furnish the Union with a list of the names of each employee fired, suspended, or given a final warning solely for using an improper tone of voice toward a customer during the 5 years preceding and inclusive of October 10, 1979.

(b) Post at its Washington, D.C., facility copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[22] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 5, after being duly signed by Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by Respondent immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Notify the Regional Director for Region 5, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps Respondent has taken to comply herewith.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

WE WILL NOT refuse to bargain collectively with Communications Workers of America, AFL-CIO, by refusing to furnish it with information that it requests which is relevant and reasonably necessary to the processing and evaluation of grievances and preparing them for arbitration.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner engage in conduct in derogation of our statutory duty to bargain in good faith with the Union, and in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act.

WE WILL furnish the Union with a list of the names of each of our employees fired, suspended, or given a final warning solely for using an improper tone of voice toward a customer during the 5 years preceding and inclusive of October 10, 1979.

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On March 4, 1981, Administrative Law Judge Burton Litvack issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, Joseph C. Krivan, a Charging Party, filed exceptions.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge and hereby orders that the Respondent, Caffe Giovanni, Inc. d/b/a Giovanni's, Berkeley, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in said recommended Order, except that the attached notice is substituted for that of the Administrative Law Judge.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

After a hearing at which all sides had an opportunity to present evidence and state their positions, the National Labor Relations Board found that we have violated the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, and has ordered us to post this notice.

The Act gives employees the following rights:

To engage in self-organization

To form, join, or assist any union

To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice

To engage in activities together for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection

To refrain from the exercise of any or all such activities.

WE WILL NOT interrogate our employees concerning their union membership, activities, and desires and the union membership, activities, and desires of their fellow employees.

WE WILL NOT promise our employees economic and other benefits in order to dissuade them from joining or assisting a union.

WE WILL NOT threaten retaliation, deportation, or other unspecified reprisals against our employees to dissuade them from joining or assisting a union.

WE WILL NOT solicit grievances from employees and promise possible favorable resolution of them in order to induce them to refrain from joining or assisting a union.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them under Section 7 of the Act.

CAFFE GIOVANNI, INC. D/B/A GIOVANNI'S

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

BURTON LITVACK, Administrative Law Judge: This case was heard before me in Oakland, California, on May 28, 29, and 30 and June 3, 1980, pursuant to an amended consolidated complaint in Cases 32-CA-2000, 32-CA-2234, and 32-CA-2284, issued by the Regional Director for Region 32 of the National Labor Relations Board, on April 16, 1980, pursuant to an original and first amended charge in Case 32-CA-2000, filed by Local 28, Hotel and Restaurant Employees and Bartenders International Union, AFL-CIO, herein called the Union, on August 3 and September 6, 1979, respectively; a charge in Case 32-CA-2234, filed by Gail E. Wetzel, an individual, on November 1, 1979; and a charge in Case 32-CA-2284, filed by Joseph C. Krivan, an individual, on November 20, 1979. The amended consolidated complaint alleges, in substance, that Caffe Giovanni, Inc. d/b/a Giovanni's, herein called Respondent, violated Section 8(a)(4), (3), and (1) of the National Labor Relations Act, herein called the Act, by discharging employees Krivan and Erich Frisch and by assigning Krivan to less desirable work stations and Section 8(a)(1) of the

[1] Charging Party Joseph C. Krivan has excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Administrative Law Judge. It is the Board's established policy not to overrule an administrative law judge's resolutions with respect to credibility unless the clear preponderance of all of the relevant evidence convinces us that the resolutions are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, Inc., 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing his findings.

Act by interrogating employees as to their union membership, activities, and sympathies and the union membership, activities, and sympathies of their fellow employees; by threatening reprisals against employees because of their union activities; by offering a raise and permanent employment to an individual in order to weaken his support for the Union; by soliciting grievances and suggesting their favorable resolution in order to cause employees to abandon their support for the Union; by telling employees that it will pay for an outside arbitrator if employees agreed to the formation of an in-house union and abandoned support for the Union; by threatening employees with a warning letter; by offering to change the work schedules of employees in order to induce them to abandon support for the Union; by threatening unspecified harms if the Union was victorious in a representation election; and by condoning a pattern of employee harassment and denigration of union adherents. Respondent filed an answer, denying the commission of any unfair labor practices. All parties were afforded full opportunity to appear, to introduce evidence, and to examine and cross-examine witnesses. Extensive briefs were filed by counsel for the General Counsel and by Respondent, and both have been carefully considered. Upon the entire record in the case, and from my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and having carefully considered the post-hearing briefs of the parties, I make the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent, a California corporation, maintains an office and principal place of business in Berkeley, California, where it is engaged in the ownership and operation of a restaurant and bar. During the 12-month period immediately preceding the issuance of the amended consolidated complaint, Respondent, in the normal course and conduct of its business operations, derived gross revenues in excess of $500,000 and purchased and received goods or services valued in excess of $5,000, which goods or services originated outside the State of California. Respondent admits, and I find, that it is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. LABOR ORGANIZATION

Respondent admits and I find that the Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. ISSUES

1. Whether from on or about August 15, 1979,[1] until September 1, 1979, Respondent assigned employee Joseph Krivan to less desirable work stations in violation of Section 8(a)(4), (3), and (1) of the Act?

2. Whether on or about September 1, Respondent discharged or caused the termination of Krivan in violation of Section 8(a)(4), (3), and (1) of the Act?

3. Whether on or about September 5, Respondent discharged employee Erich Frisch in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act?

4. Whether from on or about July 8 until on or about September 5, Respondent engaged in the following acts and conduct violative of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act:

(a) Interrogating employees about their union membership, sympathies, and activities and the union membership, sympathies, and activities of their fellow employees?

(b) Threatening reprisals against employees because they engaged in union activities?

(c) Offering employees financial, employment, and other inducements in order to weaken support for the Union?

(d) Threatening a raid and potential deporting by the Immigration and Naturalization Service if employees vote for the Union?

(e) Soliciting grievances and promising their favorable resolution in order to cause employees to abandon support for the Union?

(f) Promising to pay for the services of an outside arbitrator if employees consented to the establishing of an in-house union in lieu of support for the Union?

(g) Threatening to give employees warning letters because of their union activities?

(h) Offering to change employee work schedules in order to induce them to abandon support for the Union?

(i) Condoning a pattern of general harassment and denigration of union adherents?

IV. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Facts

1. Events preceding August 15, 1979

Respondent is a corporation engaged in the operation of an Italian-style restaurant and bar in Berkeley, California. John Schipani owns all the outstanding shares of stock in the corporation and his wife, Anna Schipani, is a vice president and is on the board of directors. Both individuals are at the restaurant several times a week and, according to Anna, "While I'm there I help out and do what I can." Howard Pitter is the general manager of the restaurant and normally works during the evening shift. Pat Roberts is the manager during the day shift. Apparently, Pitter is responsible for the overall operations of the restaurant; however, during her shift, Roberts has authority to hire and fire and to direct the work. As part of his duties, Pitter prepares the daily work schedule for the employees, including the waiters. There are two head waiters at the restaurant—Chan Chaikow and George Loung. Chaikow testified that along with waiting on tables, he is responsible for assigning the waiters to the various work stations—or sections—in the restaurant each day,[2] ensuring that proper service is accorded to the restaurant customers, assigning breaktimes to the waiters, and checking that the waiters are performing the side work—i.e., stocking the salad bar—that goes along with the work station to which they are assigned.[3]

[1] Unless otherwise stated, all dates herein are in 1979.

[2] The work station assignments are made in conjunction with the waiters' work schedules. For example, if a waiter is scheduled to work on a particular night from 6 p.m. until 1 a.m., Chaikow will assign that individual to a work station which requires the waiter in that section to work until closing time—1 a.m.

The record discloses that the restaurant is approximately 90 feet deep and 40 to 45 feet in width. Entering the front of the facility, an open kitchen area is to the right and the cocktail lounge and bar is to the left. Continuing down the left side of the restaurant, between the bar and the main wait station is a raised area, called the "sidewalk," on which eight dinner tables are located. Opposite this area is a wine arbor. Continuing through the restaurant, one enters into the main body of the dining area. On the right side is a fireplace with dinner tables arranged around it. At the rear of the dining room is an area, called the "boathouse," containing 9 or 10 tables. Also located in the back area are two restrooms and another wait station. The central dining area has been artificially divided by Respondent into six waiter stations—with responsibility for an approximately equal number of tables of varying sizes. The corners are designated as sections A and D (on the left side) and B and E (on the right side). The center tables are divided into center right and center left. In the normal waiter configuration, one waiter is assigned to each station. The record further discloses that the facility has a second floor wherein the restaurant office and an employee lounge are situated.

The record reveals that union discussions amongst the restaurant employees commenced in late June as an alternative for solving perceived work problems. Eventually, waiters Joseph Krivan[4] and Bernard Cacho contacted the Union and arranged a meeting. Thereafter, the two waiters met with business agent Roger Cardenas outside another Berkeley restaurant. Cacho and Krivan related the employee problems, and Cardenas explained organizing procedures to them. Either then or at a subsequent meeting, Cardenas gave authorization—or pledge—cards to Krivan and Cacho and explained their use. During the next 2-week period, the two employees distributed and collected signed authorization cards from the waiters, cooks, and other employees. According to Krivan, he personally distributed and collected 12 signed cards during breaks at the restaurant or after work. Cacho and Krivan returned the signed cards to the Union, and on July 9, based upon the authorization cards, the Union filed a representation petition with Region 32 to represent certain of Respondent's employees, including the waiters and the cooks.

While there is no direct evidence that Respondent was aware of the activities of either Krivan or Cacho, the record establishes that Respondent was indeed aware of the incipient union organizing campaign prior to the filing of the election petition. Thus, Howard Pitter vaguely recalled that on the day before the Union notified Respondent of its representation status, he spoke to employee Peter Paccone,[5] who "asked me if I knew anything about unions . . . ." From this conversation, Pitter admittedly knew that some sort of union movement among the employees was ongoing. Further, Erich Frisch, who had been hired by Pitter on July 5 as a replacement for a vacationing cook, testified that on July 7 at approximately 4:30 p.m., Pitter called him into his office and asked, "Did you know that somebody's trying to bring a union into the house? Or have you heard any talk about the Union?" Frisch replied that he had heard some talk about it, and Pitter responded, "Well, somebody's trying to bring the union into the house." Later, after informing Frisch that union benefits were not as good as those paid by Respondent, Pitter said that he believed a waiter was trying to "make 500 easy bucks" by bringing in the Union and that something would happen to the "Mexicans in the dish room" if the Union came in.[6] Pitter denied the conversation. However, as between Pitter and Frisch, I generally credit the testimony of Frisch whose demeanor while testifying was, for the most part, that of an honest and candid witness.

The record further establishes that subsequent to the filing of the aforementioned representation petition, Pitter and Anna Schipani immediately embarked upon a course of conduct designed to uncover the identities of the primary union adherents and to quell the nascent campaign. Thus, Bernard Cacho testified that on July 10, 1 day after the filing of the petition, he overheard a conversation between Anna Schipani and a busboy-dishwasher, named Carlos ————, in the employee lounge. According to Cacho, the conversation lasted between 5 and 10 minutes, and "she asked Carlos if he knew anything about the union. He said not really. . . . and she said she would like to know who started it." After evading an answer for a few moments, Carlos mentioned employee Bill Francisco and a bartender named Mario ————. Anna ended the conversation by saying, ". . . don't you know if the union comes in here, the immigration is soon to follow. They'll take all the illegals away." Anna Schipani recalled a meeting among herself, Carlos and three or four other employees in the dishroom "after I heard that there was . . . cards being distributed or signed. . . ." While denying that Cacho was even present, that she asked who started the Union, or that she threatened a possible immigration raid, Anna testified, "I wanted to know if there was a problem with the people in the dishroom. . . . If they felt they weren't being paid enough or if they wanted more or expected more. . . . the thing I wanted to tell them was that they had to understand what they were getting involved in with the union. . . . If you had a union come into the restaurant, did these boys have to have green cards. . . ." As between Cacho and Anna Schipani, I credit the testimony of Cacho, who, unlike the latter, has no interest in the results of this proceeding and impressed me, for the most part, as being a forthright and credible witness.

[3] The complaint alleges and Respondent admits that John and Anna Schipani and Howard Pitter are supervisors within the meaning of Sec. 2(11) of the Act. It is not alleged that Chaikow is either a supervisor or an agent of Respondent.

[4] Krivan had been employed by Respondent as a waiter since October 1977.

[5] Peter Paccone is a college student who works as a cook for Respondent. He earns $4.75 per hour and is one of the lowest paid cooks. Paccone placed this conversation as occurring prior to the filing of the election petition and shortly after being asked by Krivan if he would support the Union. I was impressed by Paccone's demeanor while testifying and shall credit him herein.

[6] The record discloses that Respondent employs many individuals of Spanish descent as busboys and kitchen help and that several may have been in this country illegally.

Joseph Krivan testified that on July 11 he overheard a conversation between Pitter and a waiter, Jose Cruz, in the back of the dining room. As Krivan approached, "Howard was asking Jose if he had signed any pledge cards, and Jose denied it. . . . Howard then asked him if he had seen any pledge cards. Jose said no. Then Howard asked him did he know that the Union was trying to get into the restaurant?" Jose gave a vague reply, and "Howard asked him how did he feel about that?" Again, Jose gave a noncommittal response, and Pitter asked, "if there's an election, how do you think you'll vote?" After Cruz obligingly replied that he would probably vote "no," Pitter said, "'Well, if you have any gripes or complaints, let me know about them.'" That night or the next day, according to Krivan, he overheard a similar conversation between Pitter and waiter Pow Purgsaphakorn, at the main wait station. "I heard Howard asking Pow if he had signed a pledge card? Pow responded, 'No.'" Pitter then asked Pow if he had heard that the Union was organizing the restaurant. Pow again denied knowledge, and Pitter persistently asked how Pow felt about it. Pow replied that he did not support the campaign. Pitter then ended the conversation, asking if Pow had any complaints or problems and if so, to let him know about them.

Howard Pitter denied both the occurrence and the substance of the aforementioned conversations. According to Pitter, he never initiated any conversations with employees about the Union. Rather, he averred that he made himself available to "employees that wanted to know more about it. . . . I knew what my legal limitations were about . . . and I had the book . . . the green book, the book of Local 28's bylaws, wages, different specific things and I made that available to anyone. . . ." I note herein that Pitter and Krivan conflict in many testimonial aspects. I was not particularly impressed with the demeanor of either witness, believing that each was more than capable of fabricating responses in order to buttress his respective position. Accordingly, where they conflict, I have credited that testimony[7] which best harmonizes with the surrounding circumstances and which is internally consistent and not inconsistent with the testimony of others. Concerning the above conversations, inasmuch as the conduct of Pitter is consistent with his earlier credited interrogation of Frisch and as Anna Schipani engaged in similar conduct, I credit Krivan as to Pitter's conversations with Cruz and Purgsaphakorn.

One day in the last week of July, Krivan[8] and Cacho spoke to Day and Manager Pat Roberts, complaining about alleged harassment of employees by Pitter and seeking Roberts' help in arranging a meeting with John Schipani, who, they were aware, was scheduled to leave for a European vacation shortly thereafter. During their conversation, Roberts gave to the waiters a document, which purportedly was a copy of a financial report on the Union and which was in the files of the Department of Labor. The meeting ended with Roberts promising to contact Schipani. Later that day or the next day, Cacho and Krivan met with John Schipani at approximately 2 p.m. in the main dining room, and they spoke for approximately 30 minutes. According to Krivan, they told Schipani that "we were very concerned at the harassment . . . of the employees, and that we wanted an end to it; that we were concerned of anyone being fired while he was gone, at which point . . . we'd put up a picketline." Krivan named Pitter as the source of the harassment, detailing the latter's alleged interrogation of the employees regarding the Union. Schipani replied "that he didn't want to stand in the way of what a majority of employees wanted, but he didn't want a union there." At that point, Krivan referred to the Union's financial statement and expressed concerns about the Union "that perhaps they might not be able to support us . . . but we would still fight [and] . . . we wanted a fair expression of viewpoints so we could have the election, and may the best man win. John felt that was—well, he didn't disagree with that. He said while he was gone that if anything happened, to refer to Pat Roberts. She would be acting on his behalf to cool any kind of situations from exploding. However, Mr. Schipani did emphasize that he didn't want a union there; perhaps we might be interested in something like a house union or some kind of employees' grievance committee that would have an outside arbitrator to be paid by him to settle affairs that couldn't be settled between the two parties, instead of the union. I said I wasn't in a position to negotiate that kind of an offer; but I would certainly communicate it to the other employees." The meeting ended at that point.

During his testimony, Bernard Cacho gave a similar—but more complete—version of this conversation. According to Cacho, he and Krivan began the meeting by expressing doubts about the viability of the Union "but that [the Union] was who we started with and we had to stick with them." Schipani replied that local business friends told him that "the union, wasn't such a hot thing. . . ." Cacho replied that it would not be a good thing for Schipani but might be good for the waiters. Schipani replied that the Union would not help the employees and, at that point, raised the subject of an in-house union. "He said, I've had what they call an in house union . . . and it seems to work better for everybody involved." Schipani mentioned as an incentive that ". . . if we paid dues within our own in-house union, then the money would . . . stay within Giovanni's. . . ." Schipani added that he "would even be willing to pay for an outside arbitrator to come in and work out the differences and settle the matter and then we could have this in-house union. . . ." Krivan and Cacho agreed that what Schipani mentioned was a possibility but that since the employees had signed authorization cards for the Union, it was their decision whether or not to continue supporting the Union. Next, Krivan and Cacho raised the matter of Pitter's campaign conduct. Cacho said that he wanted such activities stopped, for Pitter's conduct was merely exacerbating an already tense situation. Schipani replied, "if anyone gets a hair up his ass, just go to Pat, she's my direct line and you talk to her and any problems you have, bring to her."

[8] Krivan made no real effort to hide his role as a strong union adherent. Thus, on July 16, he posted campaign literature on the employee bulletin board and on July 25 he posted a notice, advising employees of a union meeting at his home. Moreover, Pitter admitted, "It was common knowledge that John and Bernard were organizing a union."

Schipani testified that Roberts telephoned him on the morning of the day on which he was scheduled to fly to Monte Carlo and that without any idea why Krivan and Cacho wanted to speak to him, he postponed his flight reservations to meet with them. According to Schipani, the entire conversation lasted just 10 minutes, with Cacho doing most of the talking. He was very apologetic about starting the union, or trying to get a union in there. . . . they found out that Local 28 was not what they wanted, and they were just going to drop the whole thing. Cacho then told Schipani to go on vacation and don't worry "because there won't be a union." Schipani denied that anything was mentioned regarding the interrogation or harassment of employees and stated that Cacho initially raised the subject of other unions, including a possible in-house union. On the latter point, Schipani told the waiters that an in-house union, Avanti Popolo, had once represented Respondent's employees and that the former's collective-bargaining agreement with Respondent included an arbitration procedure.[9] Schipani concluded by advising Krivan and Cacho to speak to older employees as to how the in-house union operated.

I find Schipani's account of his conversation with Krivan and Cacho rather incredible, believing it extremely unlikely that Krivan and Cacho, both of whom had expended much effort in organizing and directing the union campaign, would abruptly renounce the Union—and, in effect, their efforts—to the restaurant owner or that Schipani would postpone a pending European vacation for an employee meeting about which he knew nothing. Accordingly, I credit Cacho's more complete account of this incident, as materially corroborated by Krivan.

Also in the last week of July, as predicted by Pitter and Anna Schipani, the Immigration and Naturalization Service conducted a raid on the restaurant, and two employees were taken away for possible deportation. According to Krivan, at approximately 11:30 p.m. on the day he and Cacho met with Schipani, Pitter approached him at his work station,[10] accused him of telling employees that Respondent was responsible for the raid, and stated that he was investigating the matter. Thereafter, the events of that evening are basically uncontroverted. Thus, 20 minutes later, Krivan observed all the Spanish-speaking busboys and kitchen help assembling in the boathouse area for a meeting with Pitter. Inasmuch as he did not speak Spanish but Cacho did and as he believed the meeting concerned the aforementioned raid, Krivan immediately left his area, used a pay telephone near the restrooms,[11] and called Cacho who was off work that night. Because Krivan did not know the subject matter of the meeting, Cacho asked to speak to Sergio, one of the restaurant busboys. Thereupon, Krivan walked over to the boathouse and, after initially failing, managed to communicate to Sergio that Sergio was wanted on the telephone. After Sergio picked up the receiver, Krivan resumed his waiter duties.

Meanwhile, Pitter, who intended to inform the Spanish workers that "we were sorry that something like this [had] happened," began the meeting by telling the assembled employees, through an employee-interpreter, that the meeting had nothing to do with the Union. At that point, Krivan interrupted the meeting by gesturing to and telling Sergio about the telephone call. While the latter was gone, Pitter said nothing to the employees but upon Sergio's return told the group how sorry he was that two of them had been taken away by the Immigration Service. Before he could say anything more, Cacho, whose residence is nearby the restaurant, came into the boathouse area and sat down in back of the assembled employees. Pitter looked at Cacho, told him the meeting would last only a few minutes, and asked him to wait outside. Cacho replied that he wanted to stay, hear what was said, and interpret if necessary. They then began to argue, with Pitter demanding that Cacho leave the area and Cacho refusing. Finally, with neither one conceding, Pitter threatened to call the police but abruptly changed his mind and just dismissed the meeting.[12] Cacho then walked away, and as Pitter passed by, Cacho either called him "a pig," as admitted by Cacho, or "asshole," as contended by Pitter.

The next afternoon, Krivan and Cacho spoke to Pat Roberts in the dining room and explained their version of the previous evening's events. At approximately 2 p.m., Pitter came downstairs from his office and gave to Krivan and Cacho disciplinary letters concerning the night before. The letter to Krivan accused him of generally disrupting the restaurant and stated that the letter would be placed in his personnel file; Cacho's letter stated that he was being suspended from work for a week "because of disruptive activities or disruptive behavior . . . and that . . . [if repeated] . . . I would be fired.[13] After reading the letters, Krivan and Cacho demanded that Pitter be more specific as to what exactly the waiters did to warrant discipline. Pitter agreed to do so, said that the new letters would be available that night, and went upstairs to his office. Shortly thereafter, Cacho and Krivan left the restaurant.[14]

[9] In 1970, the Board conducted a representation election involving Respondent, the Union and an employee labor organization, Avanti Popolo. The latter received a majority of the votes and ultimately negotiated a collective-bargaining agreement with Respondent. The record is unclear as to the demise of Avanti Popolo.

[10] That night, Krivan was working in sec. E, which is the waiter station at the right rear of the main dining room.

[11] Krivan reluctantly admitted that he was aware of a work rule prohibiting use of this telephone by employees. Krivan also denied that he was away from his work station while he telephoned Cacho. According to him, "the entire restaurant is my station. . . ."

[12] As he observed Cacho pass through the dining room and into the boathouse, Krivan walked over to the edge of the boathouse area, which is adjacent to section E, and stood watching. Krivan testified that he was able to keep his entire area in view and that just one table was occupied at the time. As to what he was doing while watching the boathouse confrontation, Krivan stated, "I was working," but he could not recall what he was doing—other than watching.

[13] Pitter maintained that he felt "intimidated" by the conduct of Krivan and Cacho the previous night and that they had been "trying to make something out that wasn't really anything." Further, Pitter attributed their conduct to believing that he was going to speak about the Union.

At approximately 7:30 p.m., Krivan and Cacho returned to the restaurant and met with Pitter in the dining room. The subject matter of this meeting is in dispute. According to Krivan, he began by asking Pitter for the revised warning letter, and Pitter responded that he had changed his mind and would forget the incident "out of the goodness of his heart." Not willing to let the matter rest, Krivan replied that what had occurred was a matter of employee rights and that Respondent had committed an unfair labor practice by calling a general employee meeting without giving the Union a chance to respond. Pitter repeated that he wanted to forget the entire incident and had decided to destroy the warnings. Krivan responded, stating that he was upset with the way Pitter was harassing and interrogating employees. Pitter did not answer that accusation but again responded that it would be a good idea to forget the entire matter. Refusing to do so, Krivan replied that the incident was a matter of employee rights and that he would not just forget what happened. The meeting ended with Krivan and Pitter agreeing "to let things cool down" and with Pitter agreeing to place a note in Krivan's file regarding what had transpired.[15]

According to Cacho, Pitter began stating that he would not discipline either Krivan or Cacho for the incident. Cacho said that he felt there was no reason for the letters, and Pitter responded that whatever the reason, he just wanted to forget the incident and to "sit down and work on the real problems and . . . what grievances we had. . . . we could resolve and come to some amenable ends." They then discussed a waiter, named Steve, regarding an assignment problem, and the conversation ended.

Pitter's recollection of this conversation was rather brief but more corroborative of that of Krivan than the testimony of Cacho. Thus, according to Pitter, "I told them I had thought about it and I had decided not to go ahead and give them the letters and, you know, can't we just . . . work together." Pitter did recall that the meeting ended amicably. Because Krivan and Cacho conflict, I do not credit Cacho's testimony that Pitter offered to adjust any problems or grievances; however, because his testimony was more complete about what apparently was a lengthy conversation, I credit Krivan's version of the meeting, specifically noting his rather belligerent attitude.

Krivan next testified during direct examination that on Sunday, August 12, he observed Pitter arrive at the restaurant at approximately 5 p.m. and, with his small, red schedule book, proceed "to ask all the employees for changes in their schedules." When asked to specify to which employees he overheard Pitter speaking, Krivan named three cooks—Dave Catlett, Carl Datz, and Peter Paccone—and two waiters—Don Jackson and one other. Finally, Krivan averred that the above had never before been done by Pitter.[16] During cross-examination, Krivan's testimony became inconsistent. Thus, when asked to repeat exactly what he overheard Pitter saying to the above-named individuals, Krivan admitted that "I didn't hear Howard say anything directly to anyone there" and that all he observed was Pitter approaching a number of employees, carrying the red schedule book. Later, Krivan testified that he observed Pitter walking throughout the kitchen, dining room, and main wait station, approaching "everyone in the kitchen and several wait people," and that he knew what Pitter asked each employee based upon reports to him. Further during cross-examination, Krivan reverted back to his original testimony saying, "I believe I did overhear [Pitter] asking one or two people about the changes in the schedule." Specifically as to Dave Catlett, Krivan suddenly recalled that Pitter asked whether he wanted any changes and that Catlett replied, not right then. The subject matter was dropped on cross-examination after Krivan claimed that he could recall none of the other conversations. Remarkably, however, on redirect examination, Krivan was able to remember two other employees to whom Pitter spoke regarding schedule changes and that to each, Karl Moeslieu, a kitchen aide, and Jose Cruz, Pitter asked if he wanted any schedule changes. Pitter specifically denied the aforementioned conduct and, based upon Krivan's utterly contradictory testimony, I credit the denial. Accordingly, I shall recommend that paragraph 6(m) of the amended consolidated complaint, which concerns the aforementioned alleged conduct, be dismissed.

As a result of the Union's petition, a representation election was scheduled for August 15. According to Cacho, he had a conversation with Anna Schipani at approximately 7 p.m. near the cashier's stand on the night before the election. Anna, who had never spoken to Cacho at length before, called him over and asked, "what do you think of the union . . . [and] I replied don't you know all Mexicans are union members. She said . . . if the union wins, I wouldn't want to be you. . . . Johnny's a nice guy and he really looks after his employees. He's such a good guy that I know if the union wins, God's going to get you in some way or another." Cacho, who took her comments "sort of in jest," responded in a flippant manner, "and she said, no I mean it. . . . I don't understand why you're doing this to him. I said, doing what? And she goes, this whole union thing." The conversation continued with Anna saying that she did not understand why Cacho, who had been employed for just a year and a half, would try to bring in a union. Cacho replied that if the employees believed her husband was "such a great guy," they would not vote for the Union. The meeting concluded with Anna reiterating "that if the union came in or even if Giovanni's lost or won by a slight margin, she wouldn't want to be in my shoes. . . ." The conversation ended on that note.

[14] Cacho testified that after he returned to his apartment, Pat Roberts telephoned and said that Pitter had decided against giving them warning letters and just wanted to discuss the issues with them that night.

[15] The note reads as follows: "Joe Krivan has had no letters of disciplinary action, and his file contains only employee related information."

[16] According to Krivan, in the past employees were never consulted about their hours; rather, employees were scheduled according to need. As to changes, waiters could ask for a change in writing and Respondent, in its discretion, could act thereon.

Anna Schipani admitted having such a conversation. Thus, she testified that she spoke first, calling Cacho a nice guy and asking, "How did you get involved in this?" Cacho responded that all Mexicans are union people. Anna then asked Cacho for his age; he replied that he was 24 years old and asked why she wanted to know. Anna responded that Cacho did not know what he was doing, that her husband had been in the restaurant business his entire life, and that the Union was a Hitler-like organization, which was only interested in taking over the restaurant. Then she asked why the employees had not gone to her husband first if there were problems. Finally, while denying warning that she did not want to be in Cacho's shoes if the Union won, Anna admitted saying, "It isn't fair to John and God is going to punish you, Bernard." As between Anna Schipani and Cacho, as previously mentioned, I found the latter to be a more candid and truthful witness and, therefore, I credit his version of the aforementioned conversation.

2. The alleged postelection harassment

The election was held as scheduled, with an apparent majority of employees voting against representation by the Union.[17] On August 22, the Union filed objections to the election with Region 32 and, when Respondent received a copy of said objections, Pitter immediately posted the document on the employee bulletin board. According to Krivan, he asked several employees if they would cooperate in the Board's investigation of the objections. He did this in the restaurant, and he also gave an affidavit regarding Respondent's preelection conduct. While Krivan testified that these activities were confidential, Pitter admitted that he believed the sources for the alleged objectionable conduct were Krivan and Cacho.

The amended consolidated complaint alleges that subsequent to the election, Respondent commenced a pattern of unlawful discrimination by assigning Krivan to less desirable work stations than he had previously been assigned. Echoing this allegation, Krivan asserts, "I was scheduled to a number of smaller sections than I had been accustomed to working." The record evidence is as follows. Krivan testified that some waiter stations are larger or otherwise more desirable than others and that these include sections A, B, D and the boathouse. He further identified the smaller, less desirable sections as E, C, and the sidewalk—if more than one person is waiting on tables. Regarding the more desirable sections, Krivan stated that Respondent's policy was to place the better waiters on "stronger sections because you need those people to take up the maximum volume of tables you're going to be having if it's going to be a busy night." As to those sections which he felt were slower and less desirable, Krivan bluntly testified that these "are the crap sections because you get stuck with all sorts of side work to do. You have less tables. Everybody knows that you are stuck when you get that kind of a section."

Krivan testified that assignments to the various waiter stations are made on a rotating basis. Notwithstanding this system, he asserted that since the spring of 1979 he had regularly been assigned to the larger, faster moving waiter stations[18] but that after the election, "every shift I worked, I was at a less active section." In Krivan's opinion, the less active sections had fewer tables and were not being seated as often by the restaurant hosts. Further, he testified that he began noticing that waiters, who ordinarily did not work in sections A, B, D, and the boathouse because of inexperience or ability, were working in those sections in place of himself and Cacho, who also should have been regularly assigned to those sections. As the situation became increasingly intolerable after the filing of the objections, Krivan allegedly complained to Pitter on the Wednesday following said filing—August 29. "I objected to the sections I was working. I said, 'I'm being assigned to the smaller sections. Why?' He had no answer to that." Also, according to Krivan, he complained to Chaikow on several occasions that day and on the following Friday, August 31; however, nothing was done to correct the situation.[19]

Cacho, who began working for Respondent in February 1978, testified that when he was first employed, he was normally assigned to the least-liked waiter stations—sidewalk, when more than one waiter, and E—but that as he gained experience and expertise, he began receiving assignments to the better sections—A, B, D, and the boathouse.[20] According to Cacho, this trend did not continue after the election; rather a reversal occurred, with Cacho again receiving mostly sidewalk, E, and C waiter assignments. Upset at the situation. Cacho assertedly complained once or twice a week to Chaikow, asking him why he was receiving such assignments. The latter merely responded that Cacho should not be so paranoid and that his assignments had nothing to do with the Union.

Regarding waiter assignments, head waiter Chaikow testified that he is solely responsible for such assignments, that these are prepared on a weekly basis on the Tuesday of the preceding week, and that Pitter neither plays any role in the assignment process nor orders or requests changes—unless a particular individual is sick and cannot work. As to his method of assigning waiters to particular sections, Chaikow testified that he keys the sections to the weekly work schedules which are prepared by Pitter. Thus, waiters normally work on certain days of a week, and for each day of work, Pitter assigns a shift (lunch or dinner) and the hours (5 p.m. until midnight, 6 p.m. until 1 a.m., etc.). According to Chaikow, "[P]eople who were going to be scheduled to leave early would be scheduled in the center and sidewalk sections. The people who are closing will be scheduled in . . . A, D, B, and E. They'll be staying till closing."[21] Essentially, then, Chaikow assigns the sections around the waiters' work schedules, choosing particular sections for particular waiters "on a rotating basis." On this latter point, Chaikow testified that he divides waiter assignments into what he termed "section weeks." Each week begins with the waiter's first shift in any particular week; section assignments are rotated within that week so that the waiter does not receive the same station on any two nights or days (but the same section may be given for separate lunch and dinner shifts); and assignments in 1 week have no relation to assignments in any other week.

[18] According to Krivan, he had a conversation with Pitter in April or early May in which the latter told Krivan that he was a "strong waiter" and that on weekends he would be needed in larger sections "to help turn over the tables. . . ."

[19] On cross-examination, Krivan contradicted himseif, stating that he complained to Chaikow on just two occasions after August 22. On the first occasion, Chaikow said he would do something; on the second occasion, Chaikow apologized, saying he could do nothing about Krivan's problems. Later during cross-examination, Krivan reversed himself again, testifying that I "complained to Chaikow several times after the 22nd."

[20] Corroborating Krivan, Cacho stated that most waiters did not like the center sections or E because of the amount of sidewalk involved, the size and composition of groups seated in those sections, and because customers just did not like those seating locations.

Regarding Krivan's work assignments from August 15 through September 1, the record establishes that he worked three separate weekly periods—August 17 through 19; August 22, 24, 25, and 26; and August 29 through September 1. While Krivan asserted that on "every shift" during this time period he worked the slower, less desirable sections (E, C, and sidewalk), the record does not support this contention. Rather, according to Chaikow's uncontroverted assignment records for this period, Krivan worked at the following stations:

Date	Assignment	Shift Hours
August 17	B	12—5
August 18	B	12—2
August 18	E	6—1
August 19	B	4—12
August 22	Cter Left	6—12
August 24	D	12—5
August 25	C	12—2
August 25	D	6—1
August 26	E	4—12
August 29	E	12—2
August 29	B	6—12
August 31	B	12—5
Sept. 1	D	12—2
Sept. 1	E	6—1

The most striking aspect of this chart is, of course, the number of times Krivan worked in sections B and D—sections which he and Cacho considered to be among the more desirable waiter stations. Also, one of his assignments to section D was the dinner shift on August 25. Of paramount significance is the fact that this date was a Saturday, which is the busiest night of the week in the restaurant and the night during which waiters earn the most tips. On his part, Chaikow's testimony was logical and lucid as to the various factors he considered in making the above-described assignments to Krivan. For example, the former testified that on September 1 he could have assigned either Krivan or Cacho to work in sections D and E and ultimately decided to assign section D to Cacho inasmuch as the latter was scheduled to start earlier and as the left side was normally seated first.[22] Moreover, as proof that Chaikow did, in fact, follow a rotation system in assigning sections is his notebook of assignments. Analysis thereof discloses that all waiters who were assigned to sections A, B, D, and the boathouse also worked in the undesirable sections—C and E. Finally, with regard to section A, Krivan maintains, and the record corroborates, that he was not assigned to that section after August 15. However, the record also discloses that he was not assigned to this section at any time from August 1 through August 15, a period during which no discriminatory pattern of job assignments is alleged. As to section A assignments in general, Chaikow credibly testified that it was Respondent's policy to only assign that section to head waiters or those with the most seniority and skill "because they have to perform a lot more work than anybody else."[23] Further, and specifically contradicting Krivan, Chaikow testified that Krivan was never assigned to section A during 1979 because he did not like to remain in the restaurant when there were no more occupied tables. Krivan did not deny this testimony.

Despite the above evidence to the contrary, Krivan asserted, as proof of his poor station assignments, that his tip income dramatically decreased—"It was about $20 or $30 an evening less." Explaining his statement, Krivan testified, "The amount of business varies each evening, and each weekend and each day. In different sections you are going to generally make less money, is what I mean. Just because E on one night might be more money than an E on another day doesn't mean that I didn't lose money. It's relative to what everybody else made in the restaurant in terms of how much business we had that day." However, the only evidence, which was offered to support Krivan's claim of reduced tips—his own daily diary of 1979 tip income—does not substantiate his testimony. Rather, comparison of his post-August 15 tip income with comparable 1979 workweeks establishes that his tips after August 15 were, at least, equal to, if not slightly higher than, other periods. Thus, while Krivan believed that he began receiving discriminatory assignments after August 22, his tips for 4 workdays during the week of August 22 totaled $200. In contrast, during 4 days of work in each of the weeks listed below Krivan earned tips as follows:

Week of	Tips (total)
6/28/79	$181
7/5/79	$166
7/12/79	$203

[21] Chaikow testified that waiters, who are scheduled to leave prior to closing, normally are given the centers or the sidewalk. While people may be seated in the center after the waiter has departed, said customers are picked up by the corner waiters.

[22] Examination of Cacho's work stations after August 15 also reveals several assignments to sections D and B. In particular, I note that on Sunday, August 26, Cacho worked in section B during the dinner shift and, of course, that he worked section D on the night of September 1, a Saturday.

[23] The section A job duties included keeping the main wait station stocked with all necessary supplies and staying until closing even if no tables were occupied.

7/26/79	$180
8/1/79	$182
8/15/79	$143

When confronted with these figures at the hearing, Krivan averred that he would have earned more during the week of August 22 if he had been assigned to strong areas.[24] What seems closer to reality—and the truth—is head waiter Chaikow's denial that tip income is dependent upon section assignment; rather, "it depends upon the individual's ability."

As another example of Respondent's unlawful conduct after—and as a result of—the filing of the objections, the amended consolidated complaint alleges that Respondent "condoned" a pattern of general harassment and denigration by employees of union adherents—namely, Krivan and Cacho. Krivan testified that, after the filing of the objections to the August 15 election, he began encountering problems with placing and receiving his food and drink orders. While not alleging instigation by Respondent in either instance, Krivan further testified that Pitter was aware of his problems, did nothing, and, in fact, may have encouraged said conduct by an overtly hostile attitude toward Krivan. As to his food orders, Krivan asserted that these were being prepared improperly, often delayed, and occasionally not prepared at all. As a result, according to Krivan, he faced hostility from his customers who often had to wait abnormally long periods for their food, or received incorrect orders, or would be forced to eat cold food. To protect himself, Krivan began specifying on the customers' checks what problems he encountered in serving them.

Krivan further testified that he was not reticent about complaining to the kitchen personnel about his difficulties, with most of his complaints directed to Peter Paccone, who, according to Krivan, worked at the order window, controlled the order tickets, and coordinated all food leaving the kitchen. Krivan states that over one 3- or 4-night period, he made 20 separate order complaints to Paccone and that the latter gave him no adequate response—"He would smile." On one occasion—August 28 or 29—with a customer waiting longer than normal for a steak order, Krivan complained directly to Pitter. The latter immediately went to the kitchen and instructed Paccone to cook Krivan's order. On another occasion, however, Krivan allegedly complained to Pitter about not receiving pasta orders; Pitter, according to Krivan, was "unresponsive." As to the reason for his problems with Paccone, Krivan contended that the former "was very vocal about his opposition" to the Union. During cross-examination, while reiterating that he complained to Paccone at least 20 times, Krivan recanted his earlier testimony that these were made over a 3- to 4-day period; rather, they were spread over two weekends. Also, Krivan admitted being extremely critical of Pitter's early job performance.

Cacho corroborated Krivan as to food problems, testifying that he often picked up orders with the food improperly prepared or with wrong side orders. As did Krivan, Cacho blamed most of these problems on Peter Paccone "because it seemed that he had a lot to do with the areas where the problems occurred." Cacho further testified that he complained to Pitter about his problems, showing him the customer checks or the badly prepared food. According to Cacho, Pitter would respond that cooks "are human, they make mistakes."

During his testimony, Peter Paccone did not deny—and, in fact, candidly admitted—that the above problems may have occurred. Thus, he testified that he had just been hired in late June and that, although hired as a saute cook, he had never previously done such work and encountered many performance problems. As a result, waiters, including Krivan, were constantly complaining about orders being delayed or misread and food being improperly prepared. While denying intentionally refusing to cook or sabotaging orders, Paccone admitted arguing with Krivan over food orders, losing orders in sauce pots, and being counseled by Pitter regarding his job performance.

Besides food order problems, Krivan asserted that he experienced difficulty having his bar orders filled after August 22. According to Krivan, the main source of these problems was bartender Eddie Dupont. Krivan testified that after the objections were filed and posted on the bulletin board, his customer drink orders would be returned half full, frozen, watery, or not filled at all and that these problems occurred "all the evenings I worked" after August 22. While not complaining to Pitter, Krivan allegedly did complain to Chaikow and Dupont with regard to his bar order problems. While, according to Krivan, Dupont made no response, Chaikow did speak to Dupont; however, the situation did not change. Finally, as to both his food and drink problems, Krivan admitted that on all occasions he eventually received the correct order "after a long period of time elapsed."

According to Cacho, he also experienced trouble with bartender Dupont. Contrary to Krivan, however, Cacho's problems with Dupont, which problems primarily concerned the latter regularly placing Cacho's bar orders behind those of other waiters, began prior to the election and originally were a joke between the two of them. Cacho further testified that Dupont once admitted to him that Cacho's union activities were the source of the friction between them. Dupont was not called as a witness by Respondent; consequently Krivan's and Cacho's bar order problems are uncontroverted.

As a last instance of alleged condoned conduct, Krivan asserted that unknown individuals wrote graffiti over union-related literature which he posted on the employee bulletin board and that someone inserted the epithet "asshole" across his work schedule for the week of [24] Cacho also asserted that his tip income suffered from the allegedly poor assignments. However, he contradicted Krivan as to the nature of the problem. While the latter argued, with no supporting evidence, that the scope of the discrimination could only be established by comparing his tip income to that of other waiters on any evening after August 22, Cacho would establish the discrimination by comparing his pre- and post-election tip totals. "[The discrimination] cut it down. It cut my tips down and my take home pay . . . close to 50-percent." Cacho later contradicted himself during cross-examination regarding this 50-percent figure, admitting it may be closer to 30 percent. Finally, as did Krivan, Cacho reverted to the unsupported contention that other waiters "were making substantially more than me."

August 27. Regarding the latter incident, Krivan testified that he first became aware of the defilement of his schedule on Tuesday, August 28; that he spoke to Pat Roberts about the problem the next day; that the latter promised to correct the matter; that Respondent's "solution" was to place a small piece of cardboard over the word; that anyone could peer under the cardboard strip and observe what was written on the schedule; and that the matter was not finally resolved until a new schedule was posted 4 days later. Regarding this incident, Pitter testified that as soon as he noticed Krivan's schedule covered by a piece of schedule paper and what was written, he tore it down, and "I made a new schedule."

As to the food and drink problems of both Krivan and Cacho and other alleged harassment, the General Counsel does not contend that either Peter Paccone or Eddie Dupont acted as agents of Respondent. Rather, it is contended that "employees would not have been so brazen in their harassment of Krivan and Cacho if such action was not being tacitly, and in some cases, overtly encouraged by Respondent." In support, counsel for the General Counsel offered testimony from Krivan that, on August 29, Pitter approached him and said, "You are taking this too far. You ought to see a doctor." Krivan next testified that on September 1, shortly after he reported for work that night, he walked past Pitter on his way into the kitchen. Pitter, who did not see Krivan approaching, was softly singing "Joe must go, Joe must go." According to Krivan, cooks, who apparently were listening, saw him approaching and began laughing. During cross-examination, Krivan identified the cooks as Datz and Holbert; however, in a pretrial affidavit, he identified one of the cooks as Paccone rather than Holbert. Pitter denied the incident. As between Pitter and Krivan and as there is no corroborative testimony, I credit the denial of Pitter that the incident ever occurred. Finally, Krivan testified that, also on September 1, he overheard Pitter speaking to employee Karen Ohme by the bar. As he approached, Ohme said, "It makes me sick that he's still making money." Pitter agreed, and Krivan cleared his throat as he passed by. In a pretrial affidavit, Krivan stated that this incident occurred on August 29 and, during cross-examination, Krivan admitted that Ohme did not mention Krivan by name, that he walked up behind Ohme, and that "she was making the comment before she saw me . . . ." Pitter failed to deny either the August 29 incident or the latter conversation.

During his testimony, Howard Pitter specifically denied knowledge of either Krivan's or Cacho's alleged food and drink problems or that he ever instructed Paccone or Dupont to engage in their attributed conduct.[25] However, the record does disclose that Pitter was acutely aware of overt employee hostility toward Krivan and Cacho after the August 15 election. Thus, while denying knowledge of specific acts other than the "asshole" epithet on Krivan's work schedule,[26] Pitter admitted that he sensed "in the air" after the election that employees were not as friendly toward Krivan and Cacho as before and overheard conversations to that effect; that employee resentment of them manifested itself in the "cold shoulder" treatment; and that he believed the sources of this attitude were Krivan's and Cacho's strong support of the Union and its loss of the election. The record further discloses that while aware of the friction, Pitter made absolutely no effort to stop it. Thus, he admitted, "There's not much you can do about a cold treatment." Also, while admitting that the problem concerned him, Pitter believed "everything would blow over." Finally, Pitter disavowed any sharing of, or support for, employee hostility toward Krivan or Cacho, averring that he, at all times, maintained a "professional attitude" toward the two union adherents.

3. The discharge of Joseph Krivan

Krivan's last day of work was Saturday, September 1. He was scheduled to work from 6 p.m. until closing and was assigned by Chaikow to work at section E. Krivan testified that he took his normal lunch break from 9 until 9:30 p.m. and that at approximately 11:50 p.m. Chaikow "cued"[27] him for his second break.[28] At the time, Krivan had two unfinished tables, and he walked over to the wine press to total the checks.[29] While doing so, he spoke to Cacho, and as they conversed, Peter Paccone approached Cacho from behind and poured spaghetti sauce down Cacho's back.[30] Cacho immediately walked over to the main wait station with Paccone in pursuit, picked up a soup ladle, dropped it, and just left the restaurant.

According to Krivan, the incident upset him. Thereafter, he returned to his work station and was taking excess bread back to the kitchen when the cashier yelled that he had a telephone call. Cacho was the caller, and he cautioned Krivan to just forget the above incident. However, as he was returning to section E, Krivan passed Chaikow and informed the latter that he was not sure he would work any more that day because he had had enough for the evening. Chaikow told Krivan to keep him informed so that he could assign someone else to section E.[31] At that point and inasmuch as his section was then empty, according to Krivan, he wandered over to the main wait station. A minute later Chaikow approached and informed Krivan that two tables had just been seated in his section and asked if Krivan would wait on them. The latter replied, "I don't know what I'm going to do. I think I want to leave and I think I want a break. But I had enough for the evening. So [Chaikow] said okay and walked away."[32] Immediately thereafter, Pitter approached Krivan and said, "'You've got two tables in your section. Are you going to wait on them?' Again I said, 'I had enough for the evening. I don't know what I'm going to do. I think I want a break. I don't know what I'm going to do.'" Pitter then stepped away, looked over toward section E, walked back to Krivan, and said, "Well, if you don't want to wait on the tables, you quit." Krivan denied that he was quitting and reiterated that he did not know what he was going to do but that he was not quitting. Pitter responded that Krivan had indeed "quit," took the latter's timecard, signed it, and ordered Krivan to "get lost." Pitter then walked away. Denying that any waiters approached and pleaded with him to stay and wait on his tables, Krivan remained at the restaurant for at least half an hour before leaving. Just before doing so, Pitter walked over to him, asked why he was still there, and ordered him to leave. Krivan responded that he had not quit; Pitter replied that he had; and, according to Krivan, he thereupon left the restaurant.

[25] Pitter credibly testified that waiter complaints about wrongly prepared food orders are commonplace in the restaurant.

[26] Pitter did not specifically deny that Krivan complained to him about problems with his food orders.

[27] In Respondent's system, "cueing" signifies that a waiter is to start preparing to take a break.

[28] Waiters normally are given two breaks during a shift—an unpaid half hour lunch break and a paid 15-minute break later in the shift.

[29] Krivan testified that the restaurant was "kind of emptying out" but that there were a few customers remaining.

[30] There is no dispute about this specific incident. The record discloses that earlier that evening Cacho and Paccone had some sort of an altercation near the kitchen.

[31] There were 11 waiters assigned to work that night with everyone scheduled to leave at midnight except Krivan, Cacho, Chaikow, Dave Jackson, and Pow Purgsaphakorn. Thus, after Cacho left, there were only three regular waiters to serve the entire facility. Pitter testified, "It was busy for four waiters. I mean not super busy . . . but busy for four waiters. I needed four waiters on."

The record establishes that Krivan has given contrary accounts of the events of that evening. Thus, in a pretrial affidavit dated November 14, Krivan stated that it was Pitter who first notified him that two new tables had been seated in section E, but in an affidavit dated November 19 and at the hearing, he identified Chaikow as that individual. Also in the November 19 affidavit, Krivan placed Pitter "a little ways behind" Chaikow when the latter spoke to him for the second time that night; however, during direct examination Krivan said nothing about Pitter's presence, leaving the impression that the latter was nowhere nearby. Finally, in the November 19 affidavit, Krivan quoted Pitter as asking "Was I leaving," while he failed to mention this question during his testimony.

Chaikow testified that after Cacho left that night, the restaurant was less than half full (16-17 active tables) but that just three waiters—besides himself—remained on duty. He further testified that he became aware that two new tables had been seated in Krivan's area but that the latter was not servicing them. Chaikow located Krivan near the wine arbor and instructed him to wait on the tables. Krivan replied, "I don't feel like staying. I'm not sure if I'm staying." Chaikow reminded Krivan that he was scheduled until 1 a.m. but Krivan again refused to wait on the tables. Chaikow then asked if Krivan was quitting, and after the latter said no, Chaikow went to find Pitter.

Finding Pitter, Chaikow told him what had just occurred and asked Pitter to speak to Krivan about waiting on the two new tables in his section. Thereafter, while he overheard nothing, Chaikow observed the following sequence of events: Pitter spoke to Krivan; waiters Dave Jackson and Pow Purgsaphakorn next spoke to Krivan; and Pitter again spoke to him. Chaikow concluded, denying that he cued Krivan for a second break that night.

Howard Pitter testified that he first became aware of any problem in the dining room when Peter Paccone entered his office and informed Pitter about the Cacho incident. Pitter immediately went downstairs and was standing near the kitchen when Chaikow approached, reporting that "[Krivan] says . . . he's probably going to be leaving." Thereupon, Pitter looked into the section E area, observed two new parties who apparently were awaiting service, and went looking for Krivan. Finding him near the main wait station, Pitter told Krivan that there were two new tables in his section, but Krivan replied, "I'm not going to take them. I'm leaving. I've had it for tonight, I'm leaving." Pitter asked what Krivan meant and said, "Don't be silly. You've got orders to take. We're short to begin with. . . . please take the orders."

Krivan failed to either move or make any sort of response. Leaving him, Pitter walked over to waiter Dave Jackson and, according to Pitter, asked him to persuade Krivan not to leave. Jackson agreed, and Pitter waited 5 minutes to determine if Jackson could succeed. However, after speaking to Jackson, Krivan remained standing at the wait station. Pitter then walked over, again requested that Krivan wait on the new tables in his section, and warned that if Krivan just stood there, he (Pitter) would clock Krivan out just as if he stopped work and quit. Krivan replied that he was leaving but was not quitting. Thereupon, Pitter signed Krivan out.

Careful analysis of the testimony concerning the events of September 1 convinces me that the corroborative versions of Pitter and Chaikow are more logical and consistent with the surrounding circumstances. Thus, I do not believe that Chaikow would have so readily—if one credits Krivan's testimony—permitted Krivan to leave when only three waiters were available to serve the entire restaurant for, at least, an hour more. Also, I note that Krivan gave contradictory accounts of what occurred that night. Accordingly, I credit Pitter and Chaikow as to the events of Saturday night, September 1.

Evidently in an effort to establish that he had not quit the previous night, Krivan reported for work on September 2 at his normal starting time. While he was speaking to headwaiter George Loung, Pitter came over and asked what Krivan was doing there and, after Krivan indicated that he was ready for work, told Krivan that the latter had quit and demanded he leave the restaurant. A verbal altercation ensued, finally ending when Pitter forced Krivan out the door.

4. The termination of Erich Frisch

Erich Frisch was first hired by Respondent in March 1978 as a saute chef and worked through December of that year. On a Saturday Frisch felt ill and telephoned the restaurant. A hostess answered the telephone and, according to Frisch, told him that no managers were on duty. Frisch asked her to leave a message for Pitter that he was ill and would not work that day. The next day when he reported for work, Frisch noticed that his timecard was missing. He asked Pitter why and the latter responded that Frisch had "quit yesterday." When Frisch protested and explained what he had done, Pitter responded that Frisch should have spoken to a manager.[33] For the next 6 months Frisch was unemployed, then, in June 1979, Frisch unexpectedly met Pitter at another Berkeley restaurant and inquired about working on a summer vacation relief basis. Pitter said he would think about it and subsequently telephoned Frisch at the end of the month. Pitter explained that a cook, named Tang, was going on vacation and said he could offer Frisch work on a temporary basis until August 2. Frisch accepted, and Pitter said, "Just kind of watch your step." Pitter told Frisch to start on July 6 and set his wage rate at $5.75 per hour.

[32] Krivan had no knowledge whether, in fact, new tables had just been seated in his section.

Frisch started working again as a cook on July 6. On that same day, Krivan gave him an authorization card; Frisch immediately signed and returned the card to Krivan. The next day, as described above, Pitter interrogated Frisch as to possible union activities at the restaurant. On July 10, the day following the filing of the petition, Pitter again asked Frisch to come into his office. They were alone, and Pitter said that as soon as Tang returned from vacation, another cook, Roy Chuck, was scheduled to go. Pitter continued, saying that he wanted Frisch to cover for Chuck while the latter was away "and he asked me if I wanted to stay on permanently, and said he thought he could work a raise for me, get a raise to $6.50 or $7.00 or $7.50 an hour." Frisch responded that it seemed good to him and told Pitter that he had received job offers from four other restaurants after he completed his summer relief work for Respondent.[34] Pitter ended the conversation, stating that he had "to talk to his lawyers about the raise because of all the union b—s—t that was going on." Frisch responded that he would contact those other restaurants and refuse their respective job offers.

In early August, Frisch sought to obtain a loan from Wells Fargo Bank. Pursuant thereto, on August 10, he spoke to Pitter in the latter's office. Frisch handed him a "Verification of Present Employment" form, explained its purpose, and asked Pitter to complete it. Pitter responded that he would read it "and see what I can do." Subsequently, Pitter did so and returned the document to Frisch the next day. In the space therein marked "Probability of Continued Employment," Pitter wrote "POSITIVE." According to Frisch, he and Pitter again spoke regarding a raise on the last Friday in August. They spoke at approximately 6 p.m. in the back of the kitchen, and Pitter said, "We've decided to cut out the [Sunday buffet]. . . . By the way, you have a raise to $6.25 an hour." Frisch thanked Pitter, and the conversation ended.

Frisch testified that on Sunday, September 2, his shift was scheduled to conclude at 5 p.m. At approximately 4:30 p.m., Frisch observed Krivan enter the restaurant, heard the latter and Pitter shouting at each other, and ultimately observed Pitter force Krivan out the front door of the restaurant. A few minutes later, Frisch observed police officers enter and speak to Pitter and George Loung. By that point his shift had ended, and Frisch walked outside. On the sidewalk in front of the restaurant, Frisch observed Krivan, Cacho, Cacho's girlfriend Leslie, and four or five others carrying signs and walking in front of the restaurant entrance. The signs read "Honk if you're with us" and "Giovanni's unfair to labor." Frisch approached Krivan and asked him what had happened inside the restaurant. Several of the pickets then asked Frisch to join them but he refused, saying that he did not wish to become involved and that he wanted to remain neutral. At that point, Leslie, Cacho's girlfriend, asked him to hold her sign while she left to buy something. Frisch agreed, and she leaned the picket sign against his leg. Just then, Anna Schipani's brother Mark opened the front door, saw Frisch standing with the picket sign against his knee, turned around and said to someone inside the restaurant, "Hey, Erich's picketing." According to Frisch, "A few seconds later [Pitter] peeked out the door and saw me, and just kind of shook his head."[35] Deciding that Respondent would obviously conclude that he was a union adherent, Frisch joined in the picketing for the remainder of the evening.

Frisch worked the next 2 days without incident. Notwithstanding that September 5 was his day off and inasmuch as it was payday, Frisch went to the restaurant with Krivan and Cacho to obtain his paycheck. Eddie Dupont was handing out the checks but did not have a check for Frisch. Anna Schipani's sister told Frisch that she would get Pitter, and a few moments later the latter came downstairs from his office. Pitter handed Frisch his regular paycheck, a check for the previous 2 days, and 2 free dinner passes and said, "Roy is back. Vacation time is up. We don't need you anymore."[36] Pitter turned and started back upstairs. Frisch asked the former to wait, but Pitter responded, "I don't have time for you right now. I'm interviewing somebody upstairs."[37]

Contrary to Frisch, Respondent denies that it ever intended to hire Frisch on a permanent basis in 1979. Rather, it is asserted that Frisch was a particularly sloppy and hazardous cook and that, aware of Frisch's deficiencies, Pitter intended to employ him until the two cooks, Tang and Roy Chuck, completed their vacations. Further, Respondent denies any knowledge that Frisch engaged in picketing after 5 p.m. on September 2. In support, Pitter testified that, during his employment in 1978, Frisch was sloppy and careless in his work and would not readily take orders.[38] Kirke Byers, one of Respondent's head cooks, testified that while he worked alongside Frisch in 1978, he observed the latter to be overbearing, unclean, dangerous, and a hazard to other employees while frying foods because of a propensity to splatter grease and, thus, cause burns. Despite this rather negative assessment of Frisch's performance, Byers could recall only a single instance of hazardous cooking—in which Frisch was cooking with too high a flame and while tossing food into the air, splattered grease onto two nearby cooks. Finally, contrast Byers' testimony with that of John Schipani, who admitted that he observed Frisch's work enough to form a conclusion:

[33] According to Pitter, Frisch's conduct was violative of Respondent's call-in policy—that employees must communicate directly with a manager with regard to absences. Pitter admitted treating Frisch's termination as a quit "because he had the choice to come to work and he didn't come to work and did not call."

[34] Regarding these job offers, Frisch credibly testified that he received them soon after he agreed to work for Respondent during the summer. Three of the restaurants were in Berkeley—Martino's, The Good Earth, and International Cafe—and the other, Washoe Zephyr, is located in Reno, Nevada.

[35] In his pretrial affidavit, while stating that Pitter peered out at him while he picketed, Frisch failed to mention that Pitter shook his head in a negative manner. Frisch attempted to explain this discrepancy, citing his nervous state at the time of the affidavit. However, he admitted having made other substantive changes in the affidavit before signing it.

[36] Frisch admitted that neither check reflected the raise allegedly promised by Pitter. Moreover, there is no evidence that Frisch was replaced by any other cook.

[37] Frisch testified that in August he saw an advertisement in the Sunday San Francisco Examiner/Chronicle by Respondent for various categories of employees, including cooks.

> JUDGE LITVACK: Well, Mr. Schipani, did you ever see Frisch's performance in the kitchen? Did you ever observe him working?
> THE WITNESS: Yes.
> Q. What type of cook was he?. . .
>
> A. I'd say he was talented.
> * * * * *
> Q. What do you mean by a talented cook?
> A. I'd say he has a feel for working in a restaurant. . . . He basically has the feel for cooking, but he's just about the sloppiest person you could ever see in the kitchen.
> Q. All right. Well, did you think he was dangerous to other employees in the manner and method by which he [would] saute food?
> A. No.

While not disputing the circumstances surrounding Frisch's rehiring in June 1979, Pitter contends that he did so because "I felt like I'd help him out." and that he would not have hired him but for Frisch's ability to cook saute. Pitter further asserts that there was no question but that Frisch was rehired solely as a summer replacement. Thus, according to both Byers and Pitter, the former informed Pitter that he would not assent to rehiring Frisch unless it was understood that such was only upon a temporary basis. In these circumstances, Pitter denied ever offering either permanent employment or a raise to Frisch during the summer of 1979. However, Pitter did recall a conversation in early August with Frisch during which the latter inquired about both permanent employment and a raise. According to Pitter, he evaded the questions by saying he would have to check with others. With regard to Frisch's performance during the summer, Pitter averred that he was "still old Erich," with the same type of complaints as in 1978. Despite this, Pitter admitted that in his aforementioned August conversation with Frisch, "I said, you're doing fine." Asked to explain, Pitter stated that he meant Frisch was doing better but was still below average. Finally, while admitting his answer on the Wells Fargo Bank loan document, Pitter testified that he was merely trying "to help Erich out . . . to help him get a loan." Pitter further testified that he had completed such documents in the past. Asked whether he had ever lied on such a document, Pitter responded, "I don't know. I could have."

As to Frisch's picketing, Pitter testified that he was unaware of Frisch's union adherence until he observed Frisch picketing on the day after he was terminated—September 6. As to the events of September 2, while freely admitting that he looked outside that evening and observed Krivan and others picketing, Pitter staunchly denied observing or even hearing from others that Frisch was also picketing the restaurant. While never waivering in this testimony, Pitter admitted that the picketing that night was an "upsetting factor"; that employees would peer outside at the picketing periodically throughout the evening; that the entire restaurant staff was worried and even scared by the picketing; that the picketing was a big thing; and that the restaurant had never before been picketed during his tenure there. Finally, Pitter testified that Frisch's termination had nothing whatsoever to do with the Union; rather, "Vacations were over."

B. Analysis

1. Joseph Krivan

The amended consolidated complaint alleges, and counsel for the General Counsel argues in his post-hearing brief, that subsequent to the August 15 representation election, which the Union lost, and objections to the conduct thereof, Respondent, directly and indirectly through condonation and encouragement of employee conduct, embarked upon a pattern and practice of unlawful discrimination, in violation of Section 8(a)(4), (3), and (1) of the Act, against employee Krivan, one of the two main union supporters, which campaign culminated in his discharge on September 1. More specifically, it is alleged that Krivan and Bernard Cacho were the only avowed union adherents among Respondent's employees; that General Manager Howard Pitter harbored unlawful animus toward Krivan and Cacho; that prior to the election, Pitter and Anna Schipani had engaged in a blatantly unlawful campaign to defeat the Union; that subsequent to the election, Respondent retaliated against Krivan and Cacho by consistently assigning them to less active—and financially unrewarding—waiter stations; that Pitter condoned and encouraged employee harassment of Krivan and Cacho because of their strong union support; that Pitter, bent upon retaliation against Krivan, precipitously terminated the latter for his "momentary indecision" about continuing to work after the Paccone-Cacho incident on September 1; and that, in the alternative, Krivan's alleged "quit" was, in reality, a "constructive discharge" based on the intolerable and onerous working conditions created by Respondent. Contrary to counsel for the General Counsel, Respondent contends that there exists no record evidence to warrant the conclusion or inference that Respondent either discriminatorily assigned Krivan to poor waiter stations as a result of his union activities and the filing of objections to the August 15 election or indirectly condoned employee harassment of Krivan, that Krivan refused to work and, indeed, quit work on September 1, that Respondent's working conditions did not justify such action, and that, if terminated, Krivan was terminated as a result of his refusal to work.

At the outset, I agree with the contention of counsel for the General Counsel that Krivan, rather than quitting Respondent's employ on September 1, was terminated by Howard Pitter. The record supports—and, indeed, warrants—the conclusion that Pitter rather loosely utilized the term "quit" to place the onus for the result of precipitating conduct squarely on the employee rather than on Respondent. Thus, in December 1978 what obviously was the termination of employee Erich Frisch for having violated Respondent's absence policy was treated by Pitter as a quit apparently because Frisch had a choice of reporting or not reporting for work. Likewise, if Krivan refused to work on the night of September 1, he was discharged for that reason, he did not quit merely because he had a "choice" of working or not working. Moreover, while Krivan may have engaged in conduct warranting discharge, it can hardly be said that his conduct that night evidenced any intent by Krivan to sever his employment relationship with Respondent. Accordingly, while Respondent may not have specifically stated that Krivan was discharged, the record does warrant that conclusion. Sentry Investigation Corp., 249 NLRB 926 (1980).

The primary question herein concerns Respondent's motivation in discharging Krivan—was Restaurant Manager Pitter bent upon revenge after the election for Krivan's acknowledged union adherence and for the subsequent filing of objections to the election? Analysis of the arguments of counsel for the General Counsel establishes the close linkage of Respondent's alleged conduct in assigning Krivan to less desirable work stations, in condoning blatant employee harassment of him, and in ultimately discharging him. The main point of said arguments is, of course, that each of the above acts evidences Respondent's—and Pitter's—unlawful animus toward Krivan. However, to accept this contention, one must also acknowledge the converse as true—that if the assigning of Krivan to less desirable work stations and the condoning of employee harassment did not occur or were not unlawfully motivated, then it cannot be said that the discharge of Krivan was Respondent's ultimate act of retaliation for his union and other protected concerted activities.

Analysis of the record, pertaining to the allegation of the amended consolidated complaint that Respondent discriminatorily assigned Krivan to less desirable work locations after August 15 because of his union activities, reveals that the only supporting evidence for said allegation are the assertions of Krivan and Cacho that such was, indeed, the case. There is not one scintilla of corroborative evidence in the record. Rather, the opposite appears to be true. Thus, headwaiter Chaikow's daily assignment diary for the month of August 1979 was unchallenged and uncontroverted by counsel for the General Counsel and clearly establishes that, contrary to the assertions of Krivan and Cacho, they were often assigned to the more desirable waiter stations—sections B and D—after August 15 and that said assignments were, even on weekends, the most lucrative time of the week. Moreover, while both employees contended that their respective tips were drastically reduced as a result of Respondent's conduct, analysis of Krivan's own tip records discloses that his tips for the week of August 22 were equal to, if not greater than, comparable weeks during calendar year 1979. Further, I specifically credit the logical and plausible testimony of Chaikow as to his method of assigning work stations in general and as to his rationale for the section assignments to Krivan and Cacho after August 15 in particular—rationale which is completely devoid of any unlawful motivation. Attempting to place the unsupported testimony of Krivan and that of Cacho in the best light possible, counsel for the General Counsel argues that neither the documentary evidence nor Chaikow's otherwise plausible testimony reflects or takes into consideration such assignment factors as the number of waiters working on any given night, the locations of other waiters, and the obvious "pecking order" of work locations and seating preferences. However, whatever merit there may be to utilizing these factors, the fact remains that the General Counsel just has not established that Krivan and Cacho were regularly assigned to more onerous or less desirable work stations after August 15, nothwithstanding Respondent's motivation or even that either suffered reduced tip income after that date. Accordingly, there has been no discriminatory conduct in that regard, and I shall recommend that paragraph 7(a) of the amended consolidated complaint be dismissed.

As to Respondent's condonation of employee harassment of Krivan and Cacho because of their union activities, the record establishes that the only specific acts of harassment involved are the problems of Krivan and Cacho in obtaining proper and prompt food-and-drink orders; the placing of graffiti upon Union-related literature, which was posted by Krivan; and the writing of the epithet "asshole" on Krivan's work schedule. As to their food order problems, both Krivan and Cacho point to Peter Paccone as the source and allege as the latter's motivation his vehement antiunion attitude. While denying any sort of deliberate sabotage of food orders, Paccone candidly admitted that, because of his inexperience in performing such work, he caused and was the source of many food order problems in the summer of 1979; that food orders were often lost or wrongly prepared; that many waiters, including Krivan, complained to him about his work; and that Howard Pitter also spoke to him about his performance. As between Krivan and Paccone, I credit the testimony of the latter as being more reliable. Moreover, there is no evidence that Pitter either instigated or condoned Paccone's behavior. Rather, even Krivan admitted that, after complaining to Pitter about Paccone on one occasion, Pitter walked into the kitchen and spoke to the cook. Finally, given the fact that he had just recently been hired, it is hardly conceivable that Paccone could have been as much in control over the kitchen affairs as contended by Krivan and Cacho.

Concerning their alleged bar order problems, Krivan and Cacho testified that the source of these was bartender Eddie Dupont, and Cacho asserted that Dupont's motivation was his (Cacho's) union activities. Respondent did not call Dupont as a witness; accordingly, the testimony of Krivan and Cacho is uncontroverted in this regard and credited. However, while Dupont may have unduly harassed the two union adherents, remaining unresolved is Respondent's knowledge and alleged condonation of this conduct. Initially, I note that there is no evidence that Howard Pitter was aware of Dupont's activities, and I credit his denial in this regard. Further, Krivan testified that what complaints he did register with regard to Dupont were made to Dupont himself, who did not respond, and to Chaikow, who, admitted Krivan, did speak to Dupont on the former's behalf. As to Cacho, he could not recall having complained to management about Dupont. Thus, there is simply no record evidence that Respondent condoned, encouraged, or even was aware of the conduct of Dupont toward Krivan and Cacho.

Krivan next asserted that unknown persons wrote graffiti over union-related information, which he posted on the employee bulletin board, and that someone inserted the word "asshole" on his work schedule. There is no evidence that Respondent was aware of the former; as to the latter, I credit the testimony of Pitter that he removed the schedule from the wall after he noticed Krivan's schedule and the piece of cardboard thereon, covering the epithet.

Counsel for the General Counsel next argues that through its "words and actions," Respondent transmitted a signal to nonunion employees that harassment of Krivan and Cacho would be tolerated and that employees would not have been so brazen in their conduct if it was not "tacitly" or "overtly encouraged" by Respondent. At the outset, I note that while counsel for the General Counsel speaks of a "whole panoply of anti-union conduct" by Respondent's employees against Krivan and Cacho, the record discloses only the conduct of Eddie Dupont, the writing of graffiti on union-related literature, and the word "asshole" on Krivan's schedule—of which Respondent was aware of just the latter. Nevertheless, counsel for the General Counsel points to the testimony of Howard Pitter and asserts that it is vague and contradictory with regard to knowledge of acts of harassment against Krivan and Cacho. I agree; however, the burden is on the General Counsel to establish Respondent's knowledge of specific acts of employee antiunion harassment. Other than Pitter's admitted knowledge of the "asshole" epithet, there is no such record evidence. Therefore, Pitter's testimony, that while he was aware of employee hostility toward Krivan and Cacho and believed its genesis was the union campaign and election result, the only apparent, to him, manifestation of this hostility was the overt "cold shoulder" treatment given to them, stands uncontroverted on the record and is credited. In support of its arguments, counsel for the General Counsel cites Becton-Dickinson Company, 189 NLRB 787 (1971), wherein the Board concluded that an employer knowingly acquiesced in and condoned antiunion harassment of union adherents by antiunion employees and held such to be violative of Sec. 8(a)(1) of the Act. However, close analysis of that decision reveals that employees informed supervisors of the specific nature of each antiunion act and that supervisors specifically advised that the employer would do nothing. Herein, as discussed above, no such knowledge or condonation can be attributed to Respondent.[39]

Finally, I have specifically discredited Krivan's assertion that he overheard Pitter singing "Joe must go, Joe must go" before other employees. Also, I note that while Pitter's alleged conversation with employee Karen Ohme, during which she said, "It makes me sick that he's still earning money," and he agreed, was uncontroverted, its meaning is ambiguous, Krivan's name was not mentioned, and Ohme was utterly unaware of Krivan's presence. Thus, while it is alleged that Respondent transmitted a signal to antiunion employees[40] that harassment of Krivan and Cacho would be tolerated, the record just does not permit such an inference to be drawn, and I will not do so. Further, it might be argued that Respondent was under some sort of duty or obligation to "put a stop" to employee hostility toward Krivan and Cacho and that, by admittedly not doing so, Respondent acted negligently and "condoned" said conduct and, therefore, violated the Act. However, given the state of the record, I fail to see how Respondent could be said to have condoned acts about which it was unaware. Also, I do not believe that acts of omission, in such circumstances, constitute a violation of the Act. Moreover, to have investigated the source and extent of its employees' antiunion hostility may have caused Respondent to commit the identical type of interrogation alleged to be unlawful herein—a result certainly not in accord with the purposes and policies of the Act. Accordingly, I shall recommend that paragraph 6(p) of the amended consolidated complaint be dismissed.

As to Krivan's discharge, it is my conclusion that such was not the direct result of, or the ultimate act in, any sort of campaign of retaliation by Respondent against Krivan for the latter's union activities. Based on my above analysis, I do not believe that the record would support any finding that such a campaign was ever undertaken by Respondent. However, such is not to say that the General Counsel has not arguably sustained its burden of proof under Wright Line, a Division of Wright Line, Inc., 251 NLRB 1083 (1980)—that it must "make a prima facie showing sufficient to support the inference that protected conduct was a 'motivating factor'" in Respondent's discharge decision. Thus, Pitter admitted that he was aware that Krivan was one of the two leading union adherents and that he believed Krivan was responsible for the evidence upon which the Union's election objections were based. Also, Pitter did not deny having commented to Krivan on August 29, "You are taking this too far. You ought to see a doctor."

[39] In Champagne Color, Inc., 234 NLRB 82 (1978), the Board found a violation of Sec. 8(a)(1) of the Act when a supervisor knowingly permitted an antiunion employee to harass a union adherent about a union and did nothing to stop it. Again, I note that a major factor in the Board's decision was the supervisor's knowledge of the content of the altercation—that it involved the union. As stated above, there is no evidence herein that Respondent was even aware of the alleged harassment.

Counsel for the General Counsel may argue that the Paccone-Cacho incident was similar in tone and effect to the incident in Champagne Color and, therefore, demonstrates that Respondent encouraged such conduct. However, there is nothing to indicate that any management officials observed the incident, that the incident concerned the Union, or that management believed it related to any antiunion harassment of Cacho.

[40] According to Krivan, he and Ohme, a relief waitress, had been friendly prior to the election; however, on the morning of the election, Ohme became rather distraught over the holding of the voting and blamed the entire matter on Krivan.

While I believe that a prima facie showing of unlawful motivation may have been made, I also believe that Respondent effectively met its burden, demonstrating "that the same action would have taken place even in the absence of the protected conduct." At the outset, I have credited the versions of what occurred at approximately midnight, September 1, as testified to by Pitter and Chaikow. Analysis thereof convinces me, contrary to the contention of counsel for the General Counsel, that Krivan, rather than exhibiting "momentary indecision about working" after the Paccone-Cacho incident, consciously determined to leave the restaurant and not work any longer that night, adhering to said decision even though unwaited-upon customers had been seated in his section and despite repeated entreaties—and instructions—from Chaikow, Pitter, and fellow waiters to remain at work and service the seated customers. That it could hardly be said that Krivan was, in any way, indecisive about refusing to work is clear from his own words—after telling Chaikow that he did not feel like staying and was thinking of leaving, Krivan told Pitter, "I'm not going to [wait on the customers]. I'm leaving. I've had it for tonight, I'm leaving."

Having concluded that Krivan did, indeed, refuse to work when ordered to do so, the question remains—was his presence necessary to Respondent's operations that night. The record is clear that, when Cacho abruptly departed slightly before midnight, the restaurant was approximately half full (at least 17 tables) and that it would be open for 1 more hour. Moreover, other than headwaiter Chaikow, Respondent had scheduled four waiters to work until closing time—Krivan, Cacho, Dave Jackson, and Pow Purgsaphakorn. After Cacho left and Krivan was discharged, just two waiters remained to cover the entire dining room until, at least, 1 a.m. Minimizing the situation, counsel for the General Counsel asserts the two newly seated parties in Krivan's section were not being given unsatisfactory service; however, such is a too restrictive focus. Rather, I believe that, faced with the above-described situation for the remainder of the dinner shift, Respondent justifiably could conclude—as it did—that it required Krivan to work the remainder of his shift and that as an experienced waiter Krivan must also have realized the necessity of his presence—whatever his state of mind at midnight.[41] Accordingly, I think that Respondent has established a valid, persuasive economic justification for the discharge of Krivan whatever the latter's protected activities and that he would have been terminated in any event. B. N. Beard Company, 248 NLRB 198, fn. 5 (1980); J. P. Stevens & Co., Inc., 243 NLRB 10 (1979); Computed Time Corporation, 228 NLRB 1243, 1250 (1977). Finally, assuming arguendo that evidence existed of discrimination against Krivan in the assigning of work stations and of Respondent's condonation of employee harassment of him, I still would find that Krivan's discharge was motivated by his own insubordination on the night of September 1. Jupiter 8, Inc., 242 NLRB 1093 (1979); Marsh Furniture Company, Inc., 230 NLRB 580 (1977).

Counsel for the General Counsel makes two other arguments against said findings. Initially, he asks why Respondent did not seek to determine Krivan's reason for refusing to work. Without regard to the relevancy of such an inquiry, I believe the conclusion is warranted that both Chaikow and Pitter undoubtedly assumed that Cacho's leaving was the cause of Krivan's conduct. In any event, the fact of his refusal rather than the reason behind it is the important consideration. Next, it is argued that Respondent imposed the "ultimate" penalty of termination rather than some lesser discipline and that such clearly reveals Respondent's true motivation—Krivan's union activities. However, it is gainsaid "while the discipline may seem extreme, it does not follow that the ascribed reason for the discharge is pretextual." J. Ray McDermott & Co., Inc., 233 NLRB 946, 952 (1977).

Based upon the above, and the record as a whole, I do not believe that counsel for the General Counsel has established by a preponderance of the evidence that Joseph Krivan was terminated by Respondent either because of his union activities or because he participated in the investigation of objections to the August 15 election and shall, therefore, recommend that these allegations of the amended consolidated complaint be dismissed.

2. Erich Frisch

Counsel for the General Counsel argues that, having offered permanent employment and a raise to him, Respondent discharged Erich Frisch only when Pitter became aware of his picketing activities on September 2 and, thus, because of Frisch's support for the Union. In so arguing, counsel for the General Counsel also contends that Respondent spuriously asserted that it had no knowledge of Frisch's picketing and that Frisch was not a permanent employee. On the other hand, Respondent argues that it had no knowledge of Frisch's support for the Union or picketing activities,[42] that, based upon his prior poor job performance, Frisch was hired—and continued to work—as a temporary replacement, and that he was discharged at the conclusion of the summer vacation period.

At the outset, I have previously concluded that, for the most part, Erich Frisch seemed to be a highly credible witness, and as between Frisch and Respondent's witnesses concerning the events of June through September 1979, with certain exceptions, I credit the testimony of Frisch. His version of the events of that period must be contrasted with aspects of Respondent's defense which seemed to be wholly illogical and hopelessly contrived. Thus, head cook Byers' description of Frisch's "hazardous" job performance was itself rather incredible, but when compared to the later, unwitting testimony of John Schipani, it appeared to be utterly exaggerated—if not fabricated. Likewise, Pitter's denial of knowledge that Frisch picketed outside the restaurant entrance on September 2 appears to be less than candid. Initially, I credit the latter's testimony[43] that he did engage in picketing that night and that Howard Pitter peered outside and observed his activities. Pitter admitted having observed the picketing and further admitted that the incident was an "upsetting factor," that the picketing caused great concern among the employees, and that the restaurant had never previously been picketed. In these circumstances, I believe that Pitter must have been aware that Frisch was picketing that night—especially since Frisch was the only employee-picket that night.

[41] Notwithstanding that he may have been "upset" over the Paccone-Cacho incident, one should not over-dramatize what occurred. Thus, other than the obvious damage to his clothing, Cacho was not physically injured, there was no shouting, no evidence that customers observed what happened, or that the restaurant operations were, in any way, disrupted. Further, nothing whatsoever happened to Krivan, and Cacho himself called and implored Krivan to forget the incident.

[42] There can be no doubt that Frisch engaged in protected concerted activities when he picketed outside the restaurant after the conclusion of his shift on September 2. Edir, Inc. d/b/a Wolfie's, 159 NLRB 687, 694 (1966).

Concerning the validity of Respondent's central defense—that Frisch was simply terminated at the conclusion of the summer vacation period as had been understood when he was hired, counsel for the General Counsel points to my aforesaid conclusions and argues that the "total weight" of the evidence, therefore, supports a finding that Frisch, in reality, was discharged because Respondent believed he had joined with Krivan and Cacho as a union adherent. However, in his post-hearing brief, counsel for the General Counsel recognized the underlying problem with his theory—that Frisch himself admitted that he had been hired by Respondent on a temporary summer relief basis. The core issue, then, is whether Frisch's status was ever converted to that of a permanent employee. Put another way, was he ever genuinely offered permanent employment by Respondent? Initially, I credit the testimony of Frisch that he was called into the restaurant office by Pitter on July 10 and that the latter uttered the words: "And he asked me if I wanted to stay on permanently, and he said he thought he could work a raise for me, get a raise to $6.50 or $7.00 or $7.50 an hour." The inquiry, however, does not end here. Rather, Pitter's intent in uttering these words is the determining factor—was he stating a genuine offer of employment, or was Pitter cleverly offering an inducement to a newly hired employee to forgo any support for the nascent union movement? If the latter is true, then it cannot be conclusively established that Frisch was a permanent employee, and his discharge on September 5 would have occurred in the ordinary course of events. Analysis of the record as a whole convinces me that at no time did Pitter intend to offer to Frisch permanent employment.

Initially, Frisch himself testified that he was hired on a summer vacation relief basis and that Pitter warned him to watch his step. I think that the inference is warranted that Pitter would never have made the latter statement if there had existed no problems with Frisch's prior job performance. Next, the timing of Pitter's July 10 offer is important. Thus, I note that this conversation occurred a scant 5 days after Frisch began working (hardly a sufficient period during which properly to evaluate Frisch's job performance), just 3 days after Pitter interrogated him as to his knowledge of the union campaign, and 1 day after the filing of the election petition, and that Pitter's offer was stated immediately after he asked Frisch also to work through Roy Chuck's vacation. It is highly unlikely that any sort of offer of permanent employment could genuinely have been intended in these circumstances.[44] Rather, given Pitter's penchant for similar conduct during this time period, the conclusion is warranted and, indeed, inescapable that Pitter was attempting to dissuade a hopefully gullible individual from supporting the Union.[45]

Counsel for the General Counsel asserts that Pitter's answer on Frisch's loan application document is proof to the contrary. However, Pitter's reply was simply the ambiguous word "POSITIVE." Moreover, Pitter's explanation, that he was trying to help Frisch obtain the loan, is not implausible and, indeed, a likely one. Also, I specifically discredit Frisch's testimony regarding Pitter's offer of a raise in late August. I do so, noting that no such raise ever appeared in a paycheck to Frisch. Further, Frisch's discharge occurred exactly as originally scheduled by Pitter during the July 10 conversation, coinciding precisely with the return of Roy Chuck from vacation. Finally, there exists no record evidence that any replacement for Frisch was hired subsequent to his discharge and no record evidence, other than the timing, of any unlawful animus toward Frisch.

In short, the above-stated factors, and the record as a whole, convince me that Frisch was discharged in the normal course of his temporary employment and that while Pitter's July 10 offer of permanent employment and a raise to Frisch may have constituted an unlawful inducement to forgo supporting the Union, such was not intended as a genuine offer. Accordingly, notwithstanding the obviously overly zealous and, in part, fabricated nature of Respondent's defense and despite the timing of the discharge and Pitter's knowledge of Frisch's activities on September 2, I do not believe that the General Counsel has met its burden of proof to establish that Erich Frisch was terminated by Respondent because of his union activities and I shall, therefore, recommend that this allegation of the amended consolidated complaint be dismissed.

[43] While crediting Frisch that Pitter looked outside and saw him picketing, I specifically do not credit his testimony that Pitter also shook his head from side to side in a negative manner. Thus, I note that in his pretrial affidavit, given 4 days after the incident, Frisch did not mention the foregoing. It is gainsaid that one's memory is fresher immediately after an event than 8 months later. Flatiron Paving Company d/b/a Flatiron Materials Company, 250 NLRB 554 (1980).

[44] In particular, why would Pitter offer permanent employment immediately after asking Frisch to work through Roy Chuck's vacation? Would he not, if a genuine offer was intended, have just offered permanent employment and not mentioned Chuck. I think the answer is obvious and believe Pitter was not serious. It is most unfortunate that Frisch believed Pitter and, accordingly, rejected other job offers.

[45] Counsel for the General Counsel points to Pitter's comment, regarding Frisch's job performance during the summer, that he was "doing fine" and asserts that such accurately portrays the latter's work. I view the statement in a different light, believing Pitter was attempting merely to satisfy Frisch while evading any specific response.

3. The alleged 8(a)(1) conduct

The amended consolidated complaint alleges several independent violations of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. Considering the incidents in chronological order, it is first alleged that, during his July 7 conversation with Frisch, Pitter interrogated him regarding the union activities at the restaurant and threatened reprisals against the "Mexicans" because of their support for the Union. I have previously credited Frisch on this conversation and, other than a denial, Pitter offered no explanation for his conduct. I, therefore, find that Pitter violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by the aforementioned conduct. Big Three Industries, 252 NLRB 963 (1980); B. E. & K., Inc., 252 NLRB 256 (1980); Ben Franklin Division of City Products Corporation, 251 NLRB 1512 (1980). Further, it is alleged that, during his July 10 conversation with Frisch, Pitter offered the former a raise and permanent employment in order to induce him not to support the Union. As previously stated, I credit Frisch as to this conversation. Further, while I do not believe that Pitter was transmitting a genuine offer of permanent employment, I do believe that his intent was to attempt to dissuade Frisch from supporting the Union. Accordingly, I believe Pitter's conduct was blatantly violative of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. Wm. Chalson & Co., Inc., 252 NLRB 25 (1980); Chester Valley, Inc., 251 NLRB 1435 (1980).

It is next alleged that during her July 10 conversation with employee Carlos, Anna Schipani interrogated him about the Union and threatened action by the Immigration and Naturalization Service against employees because of their union activities. I have credited Bernard Cacho as to this incident over the version of Schipani. Accordingly, I find that Anna Schipani's statements were violative of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. Big Three Industries, supra; B. E. & K., Inc., supra.

Next, the record establishes that during a July 11 conversation with employee Jose Cruz, Pitter interrogated him about the Union and solicited any "gripes or complaints" which the employee had. Likewise, the record further establishes that on the same day, or the next day, Pitter had a similar conversation with waiter Pow Purgsaphakorn during which Pitter asked the employee if he signed an authorization card and requested that Purgsaphakorn advise him of any complaints or problems which the employee might have. While denied by Pitter, I have credited the testimony of Joseph Krivan as to these incidents. Such conduct is, of course, violative of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. Ben Franklin Division of City Products Corporation, supra.[46]

It is next alleged that, during his conversation with employees Krivan and Cacho in the last week of July, John Schipani told them that he would pay for an arbitrator if the employees agreed to the establishment of an in-house union—in order to induce them to forgo their support for the Union. I have credited Cacho as to this conversation. He testified that, after disparaging the Union, Schipani raised the subject of an in-house union and offered to pay for the services of an outside arbitrator, who would settle the differences between Respondent and its employees. I find that such a promise of benefits is violative of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. Chester Valley, Inc., supra.

The next two allegations of the amended consolidated complaint concern Pitter's conduct the day after Cacho interrupted and allegedly interfered with the meeting between Pitter and the Spanish-speaking employees in the boathouse. It is uncontroverted that, while Pitter first issued warning letters to Krivan and Cacho regarding the previous night, he later rescinded the warnings and, attempting to ameliorate relations with Krivan, placed a note in the latter's personnel file, specifying the absence of disciplinary material therein. In fact, the record establishes that Krivan himself persisted in arguing about the warning even while Pitter insisted that he would forget the entire incident.

As to the warnings themselves, I do not believe the record supports a conclusion that these were related to the union activities of Krivan and Cacho. Initially, while the warnings may not have been well thought out or perhaps were an overreaction to the conduct of the two union adherents, such does not make them violative of Section 8(a)(1). Further, the simple fact is that neither Krivan nor Cacho had any legitimate business interjecting themselves into Pitter's meeting with the Spanish-speaking employees. Neither was invited to attend or had any Section 7 right to be present. Moreover, if Pitter intended to threaten the employees with further Immigration Service harassment because of the Union—as speculated about by counsel for the General Counsel—or if either union supporter objected to what Pitter said, Cacho and Krivan possessed ample opportunity to communicate with the employees at a later time.[47] Accordingly, I do not believe that the rescinded warnings were based upon union considerations and shall recommend that paragraph 6(k) of the amended consolidated complaint be dismissed. Finally, inasmuch as I have credited Krivan's version of the nighttime conversation with Pitter and as the former failed to mention anything regarding the solicitation of grievances by Pitter, I shall also recommend the dismissal of paragraph 6(l).

It is next alleged that, during her conversation with Cacho on the night before the election, Anna Schipani interrogated Cacho as to his union activities and threatened him with unspecified harm if the Union was victorious in the election. I have previously credited Cacho's version of this incident but also note that Schipani's own version of the conversation closely corroborates Cacho. Further, while, given their nature, Cacho may have taken her remarks in jest, I do think that Anna Schipani was quite sincere, meant what she said, and understood the seriousness of her comments. Therefore, I find that Schipani's conduct interfered with, coerced, and restrained Cacho in the exercise of his Section 7 rights and, thus, was violative of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. Big Three Industries, supra; B. E. & K., Inc., supra; Ben Franklin Division of City Products Corporation, supra.

[46] Regarding the solicitation of grievances, it is gainsaid that the essence of the violation is not the solicitation itself, but rather the inference that the employer will correct the problems. This promise is implicit in the solicitation and need not be expressly stated. Ben Franklin Division of City Products Corporation, supra; Madison Plant Mechanical Drives Division, Reliance Electric Company, Madison Plant Mechanical Drives Division, 191 NLRB 44 (1971).

[47] Arguing that Pitter intended once again to threaten the Spanish-speaking employees with deportation or other action, counsel for the General Counsel asks why else would Pitter preface his remarks by stating that the meeting had nothing to do with the Union? The answer, of course, is obvious—to assure the assembled employees that the meeting, indeed, did not concern the Union.

THE REMEDY

It having been found that Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, it will be recommended that Respondent cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. By interrogating its employees concerning their union membership, activities, and desires and the union membership, activities, and desires of their fellow employees; by promising its employees economic and other benefits in order to dissuade them from joining or assisting the Union; by threatening retaliation, deportation, or other unspecified reprisals against employees to dissuade them from joining or assisting the Union; and by soliciting grievances from employees and promising possible favorable resolution of them in order to induce them to refrain from joining or assisting the Union, Respondent has interfered with, restrained, and coerced its employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed them under Section 7 of the Act, thereby violating Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

4. The unfair labor practices enumerated above are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

5. Respondent has not engaged in any unfair labor practices not specifically found herein.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact, conclusions of law, and the entire record, and pursuant to Section 10(c) of the Act, I hereby make the following recommended:

ORDER[48]

The Respondent, Caffe Giovanni, Inc. d/b/a Giovanni's, Berkeley, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Interrogating its employees concerning their union membership, activities, and desires and the union membership, activities, and desires of their fellow employees.

(b) Promising its employees economic and other benefits in order to dissuade them from joining or assisting the Union.

(c) Threatening retaliation, deportation, or other, unspecified reprisals against employees to dissuade them from joining or assisting the Union.

(d) Soliciting grievances from employees and promising possible favorable resolution thereof in order to induce them to refrain from joining or assisting the Union.

(e) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed under Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Post at its Berkeley, California, restaurant copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[49] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 32, after being duly signed by Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by it immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(b) Notify the Regional Director for Region 32, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps Respondent has taken to comply herewith.

IT IS FURTHER RECOMMENDED that the complaint be dismissed in all other respects.

[48] In the event no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Rules and Regulations of the National Labor Relations Board, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order herein shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules and Regulations, be adopted by the Board and become its findings, conclusions, and Order, and all objections thereto shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[49] In the event that this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

Bartenders, Waiters, Waitresses, Cooks & Hotel Employees Union Local 332, AFL-CIO (Ogden Food Service Corporation) and Anita Podhrasky. Case 14-CB-5238

November 13, 1981

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On August 18, 1981, Administrative Law Judge Lawrence W. Cullen issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision[1] in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings,[2] and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge and hereby orders that the Respondent, Bartenders, Waiters, Waitresses, Cooks & Hotel Employees Union Local 332, AFL-CIO, Caseyville, Illinois, its officers, agents, and representatives, shall take the action set forth in the said recommended Order, except that the attached notice is substituted for that of the Administrative Law Judge.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

After a hearing at which all sides had an opportunity to present evidence and state their positions, the National Labor Relations Board found that we have violated the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, and has ordered us to post this notice.

WE WILL NOT cause or attempt to cause Ogden Food Service Corporation to discriminate against Anita Podhrasky or any other employee in violation of Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

WE WILL NOT in any other manner restrain or coerce employees of the above-named Employer in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL make whole Anita Podhrasky for any loss of earnings and benefits she may have suffered because of our discrimination against her, plus interest.

WE WILL notify Ogden Food Service Corporation, in writing, with a copy thereof furnished to Anita Podhrasky, that we are no longer requesting or contending that Podhrasky's job seniority be reduced.

BARTENDERS, WAITERS, WAITRESSES, COOKS & HOTEL EMPLOYEES UNION LOCAL 332, AFL-CIO

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

LAWRENCE W. CULLEN, Administrative Law Judge: This case was heard in St. Louis, Missouri, on June 8, 1981.[1] The charge was filed by the Charging Party on December 4, 1980, and the complaint issued on April 13, 1981. Respondent's answer was received on May 5, 1981. The primary issue presented is whether Bartenders, Waiters, Waitresses, Cooks & Hotel Employees Union Local 332, AFL-CIO (hereinafter referred to as Respondent or the Union), unlawfully caused or attempted to cause a reduction in Charging Party Anita Podhrasky's job seniority and scheduled hours of work with her employer, Ogden Food Service Corporation, in violation of Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended (hereinafter the Act), and caused or attempted to cause the employer to discriminate against Anita Podhrasky in violation of Section 8(a)(3) of the Act, and thereby violated Section 8(b)(2) of the Act.

Upon the entire record including observations of the demeanor of the witnesses, and after due consideration of the briefs filed by the General Counsel and Respondent, I make the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

Ogden Food Service Corporation (hereinafter the Employer), an Illinois corporation, is engaged in the retail food sales service business and maintains a place of business at Fairmont Park Race Track in Fairmont City, Illinois, as well as other places of business in several States. The complaint alleges, and Respondent stipulated at the hearing, that during the 12-month period ending March 31, 1981, which period is representative of the Employer's operation during all times material hereto, the Employer, in the course and conduct of its business operations, received gross revenues of $500,000 and purchased goods valued in excess of $50,000 which were transported and delivered to its place of business in Collinsville, Illinois, directly from points located outside the State of Illinois. On the basis of the foregoing stipulation, I find that the Employer is now and has been at all times material herein an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act. The complaint alleges, Respondent admits, and I find that Respondent is and has been at all times material herein a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

[1] In the next-to-last paragraph of the "Analysis" part of the Administrative Law Judge's Decision, he inadvertently stated that a seniority list was compiled by the waitresses in September 1979, whereas the record establishes, and the Administrative Law Judge correctly found earlier in his Decision, that this list was compiled in September 1980.

[2] Respondent has excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Administrative Law Judge. It is the Board's established policy not to overrule an administrative law judge's resolutions with respect to credibility unless the clear preponderance of all of the relevant evidence convinces us that the resolutions are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, Inc., 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing his findings.

The complaint as amended at the hearing alleges, Respondent stipulated, and I find that at all times material herein Respondent has been the exclusive representative for purposes of collective bargaining of the employees in the unit set forth in article III of the collective-bargaining agreements between Respondent and the Employer, in effect for the periods from January 1, 1978, through December 31, 1980, and from January 1, 1981, through December 31, 1983, as modified by the collective-bargaining history and practice of Respondent and the Employer. It was further stipulated that the unit described in article III of the collective-bargaining agreement constitutes an appropriate unit for purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act, and I so find.

II. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

Charging Party Anita Podhrasky has been employed as a waitress by the Employer at the Fairmont Park Race Track since 1971. Her normal work schedule is 4 to 5 days a week. She has worked at the Fairmont Park Race Track and been a member of the Union since 1965. She testified that her membership has been continuous during this period. In late October 1980 Podhrasky was requested by Barbara Maksudian Coleman (the secretary and business agent of Respondent) to stand for election as sergeant-at-arms of the Union Local.[2] Podhrasky agreed to do so and was nominated in October. Subsequently, there was another nomination on November 24 and Podhrasky was nominated for the position of secretary and business agent to run against Coleman in an election scheduled for December 1. Podhrasky accepted the nomination and withdrew from her nomination as sergeant-at-arms.

Podhrasky testified that 2 days after the nomination, November 26, she received a telephone call from Coleman who informed her that she, Podhrasky, had been suspended from the Union during 1977 and 1978 as a result of nonpayment of dues and that her seniority would be reduced as a result, and she would share the same seniority as Toni Jackson, another waitress. Podhrasky testified that she became upset, told Coleman the matter had been straightened out and that she would appeal it, and that Coleman told her to do whatever she was big enough to do. Podhrasky described the conversation as "very heated" and stated that it lasted approximately 45 minutes. Podhrasky was scheduled to work the following workweek commencing December 2. When she called in for her schedule, she was told to work only 2 days. When she went in to work on Friday she noticed that 2 days had been marked off her schedule. The following workweek commencing Tuesday, December 9, her work schedule was reduced to 3 days. However, early in the following week she received a telephone call from the Employer's lawyer who told her that they had found an error in her seniority and she would be restored to her regular workweek schedule of 4 to 5 days per week.

Coleman had been appointed business agent of the Union in June 1980. Podhrasky testified that in June or July 1980 a discussion arose between Podhrasky and Coleman as to whether Podhrasky had been suspended from the Union in 1977 and 1978 for nonpayment of dues. Podhrasky testified that "the records showed at the Union hall that I was suspended from the Union in 1977 and 1978 . . . ." Podhrasky testified that she told Coleman that she was off work on maternity leave and she had asked the Union's president, Michael Carhalis, for a sick status and he indicated there was none but she should not worry about it and he would "take care of it" after she came back and he, Carhalis, initialed her union book at the time. Podhrasky testified that she showed Coleman the book in June or July 1980.

The General Counsel also called Lew Apolon, the Employer's general manager at Fairmont Park Race Track who has overall responsibility for the work schedules of the waitresses. Apolon testified that approximately November 29, Coleman came into his office and informed him that there was a break in Podhrasky's seniority in 1977 or 1978 as there had been a lapse in her union dues payment and there was a termination in Podhrasky's file. Apolon told Coleman that the payment of union dues would have no effect on his decision, but that since Dining Room Manager Richard Salanardi's records also showed Podhrasky's seniority date was in 1978 he "would go along because Salanardi was in agreement with her [Coleman]." Apolon testified that he did not consider the union dues status of Coleman but only considered her employment status. Apolon thereupon reduced Podhrasky's seniority until an investigation was made. Apolon testified that Coleman was attempting to clarify the Union's seniority list which was in conflict with the Employer and that the Union was utilizing union seniority whereas he followed the Employer's seniority list based on job seniority.

The significance of the seniority is that a reduction in employment seniority may entail a reduction in the work hours of a waitress during slack periods. In fact, that occurred in this instance for a period of 2 weeks. On investigation, Apolon discovered that the alleged termination of Podhrasky was actually a leave of absence for maternity, whereupon Apolon restored Podhrasky's original service date.

[2] The complaint alleges, the answer of Respondent admits, and I find that at all times material herein Coleman was a business agent of Respondent and an agent of Respondent acting on its behalf, within the meaning of Sec. 2(13) of the Act.

According to Coleman, the Union was preparing for negotiations of a new contract with the Employer in the fall of 1980, and seniority was a matter of concern. Coleman testified that in September she met in the dining room with the waitresses on a Saturday evening, and gave them a typed list of the 24 waitresses listed in accordance with length of service on the job. This list showed Podhrasky as number 17 in seniority. The employees themselves penned in numbers beside the names on the list (Resp. Exh. 2) according to seniority. Coleman testified that the only question was whether waitresses Toni Jackson and Mona Hirsch were higher in seniority than Podhrasky. Podhrasky was not informed of the meeting and did not attend. Coleman explained that the waitresses are usually all present on a Saturday night and she thought it would be the best night to present the matter. Jackson and Hirsch contended they had greater seniority than Podhrasky. Hirsch has the number 14 placed beside her name and the number 15 is placed beside Jackson's name; 16 is placed beside Podhrasky's name on the list. Coleman testified that she did not herself dictate the order and that the list was an attempt to list seniority on the job and was not based on union seniority. Coleman testified that a reduction in work was imminent and the waitresses were concerned about it, and desired that seniority dates be resolved. Coleman testified that Jackson and the other waitress, Hirsch, were concerned about the seniority question and wanted it resolved. The Employer's dining room manager, Salanardi, informed her that Podhrasky's seniority should be 1978 as Podhrasky had worked on another job and lost her seniority.

Coleman testified that she went to see Apolon on November 24 to get the matter "straightened out" but did not ask him to take any action. Coleman testified that she did not have a discussion with Podhrasky in July 1980 about Podhrasky's maternity leave. Coleman testified that she talked with Podhrasky before her discussion with Apolon and informed her that the "records" showed she was suspended from the Union in 1978 and that Salanardi had informed Coleman that Podhrasky had worked another job in that period and that Podhrasky was going to see Apolon to get the matter settled.[3]

Analysis

As stated above, the General Counsel alleges that Respondent violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act by causing the Employer to reduce the number of days which the Charging Party was assigned to work. Section 8(b)(1)(A) of the Act provides that it is an unfair labor practice for a labor organization or its agents to restrain or coerce employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in Section 7. Section 8(b)(2) of the Act provides that it is an unfair labor practice for a labor organization or its agents to cause or attempt to cause an employer to discriminate against an employee in violation of Section 8(a)(3) of the Act. In Krambo Food Stores, Incorporated, 106 NLRB 870 (1953), the Board found that the union had violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act when it caused the employer to withhold vacation pay from certain of its members because of their failure to pay back dues to the union. The Board stated (at 877):

> It is clear that in Section 8(a)(3) and 8(b)(2) of the Act the Congress barred discriminatory treatment of employees based upon union membership because such treatment might discourage or encourage union affiliation—a matter which the Congress determined should in general be left to the employees' own uncoerced judgment. Except for the proviso to Section 8(a)(3), this prohibition was complete and all-inclusive and applied to all forms of discrimination and all employees, whether union members or not. In the proviso, which in effect is repeated in Section 8(b)(2), Congress permitted one exception to this all-inclusive ban, namely, employers and unions under certain circumstances were allowed to require that employees join or maintain their membership in a union as a condition of employment. Nothing in the Act or its legislative history persuades us that the union-shop provisos to Section 8(a)(3) and 8(b)(2) were designed to give employers and unions a license to use various discriminatory devices, short of discharge, to coerce an employee to join the union while still holding over his head the alternate threat of discharge which the statute sanctions.

In Pittsburg Press Company, 241 NLRB 666 (1979), the Board upheld the administrative law judge's finding that the union had violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act by causing the discharge of one of its members for failure to pay a union fine and by requesting the removal of his name from the work schedule. The only lawful recourse available to a union for nonpayment of periodic dues and initiation fees by an employee is to request that the employer discharge the employee. The union may not cause or attempt to cause the employer to impose any different or lesser sanction on the employee for the employee's nonpayment of union dues.

In the instant case, I find that Respondent by its business agent, Coleman, attempted to cause the Employer to discriminate against Podhrasky by reducing her seniority for nonpayment of union dues. Initially, I found Podhrasky to be a credible witness. She testified that there had been a prior question concerning her union status (seniority) by reason of her failure to pay union dues during a period of pregnancy when she was on leave from the Employer. I credit her testimony that she discussed this matter with Coleman in June or July 1980. I do not credit Coleman's testimony that she was merely attempting to resolve a longstanding seniority dispute between the waitresses when she initiated a meeting with Apolon in November. Coleman's testimony did not impress me as credible in view of her own testimony that the list was initially prepared (in the absence of Podhrasky) in September and Podhrasky's testimony that in

[3] The foregoing is a composite of the testimony in the case which is credited except to the extent that specific credibility determinations are hereinafter made.

June or July she had apprised Coleman of the question of her union seniority as a result of pregnancy, and in view of Apolon's testimony that Coleman was seeking a reduction in Podhrasky's seniority by reason of Podhrasky's lower union seniority (resulting from a period of nonpayment of dues) as well as by reason of Podhrasky's alleged prior termination of her job with the Employer. Podhrasky testified that the date of the union meeting at which she was nominated to run for business manager against Coleman was November 24 and that Coleman called her 2 days later (November 26) and told Podhrasky in a "heated" discussion that she was going to discuss Podhrasky's seniority with Apolon. Apolon testified that his meeting with Coleman occurred on November 29. Coleman testified that the meeting occurred on November 24, which she testified was the same day as the date of the nomination. I credit Podhrasky's testimony that the date of the nomination was November 24 and that Coleman called her 2 days later on November 26 to discuss Podhrasky's loss of seniority as a result of her nonpayment of dues in 1977 and 1978. I also credit Apolon's testimony that the meeting between Coleman and himself took place on November 29. This sequence of events appears logical. Moreover, I was impressed by Podhrasky's positive recall of the dates whereas Coleman's testimony to the effect that these events took place on November 24 was less than clear. Coleman answered in the affirmative in response to three leading questions by her counsel on direct examination which questions incorporated the date of November 24 as the date of her meeting with Apolon. However, she was unable to recall the date of the nomination night on further direct examination by her counsel, as follows:

> Q. When you went to talk to Mr. Apolon on the 24th, did you know that she was going to run against you for a union office?
> A. I have to recall the nomination night. I don't remember.
> Q. Was the nomination night the first you knew about it?
> A. Yes.
> Q. Was that, in fact, on that day, after you had been into the office?
> A. On or about that time.

Apolon's testimony that he met with Coleman on November 29 was also in response to a leading question on direct examination by the General Counsel and was also less than positive. However, I find that his recall of the date of their meeting was more positive than that of Coleman. November 29, as testified to by Apolon, appears logical as the actual date of the meeting between Coleman and Apolon, given the sequence of the November 24 nomination night as testified to by Podhrasky and as clarified by counsel for Respondent, and given Podhrasky's testimony that Coleman called her 2 days later on November 26 and told Podhrasky that she, Coleman, was going to discuss the matter with Apolon. Moreover, the General Counsel's Exhibit 2(a) shows the workweek commencing on Tuesday, December 2, 1980, as the first workweek wherein Podhrasky's workdays were reduced.

Under the above circumstances, I find that Respondent, by and through the actions of Business Agent Coleman, was attempting to cause the Employer to reduce Podhrasky's job seniority with the Employer as a result of Podhrasky's nonpayment of dues during 1977 and 1978. Further, although Coleman testified that she did not tell Apolon "to cut" it was known to her that a reduction in job seniority could entail a reduction in workdays, particularly in view of the upcoming anticipated yearend slow period and the concern of the other waitresses about seniority to which Coleman testified. Moreover, although Apolon testified that he rejected Coleman's attempt to utilize union seniority as opposed to job seniority, he agreed to "go along" with Coleman's insistence that Podhrasky's seniority should be reduced pending his own investigation of the Employer's records. The result of Coleman's attempt to seek a reduction in Podhrasky's job seniority was the actual reduction of Podhrasky's job seniority for a period of 2 weeks during which time she suffered a loss of workdays as a result. Accordingly, I find, by the preponderance of the credible evidence, that Respondent violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act by its actions as set out above by reason of attempting to cause the Employer to reduce Podhrasky's job seniority because of her nonpayment of union dues.

I also find, based on the credited testimony and evidence as set out above, that Coleman had knowledge that Podhrasky was to run against her for union office and that her actions in moving to seek to have the Employer reduce Podhrasky's job seniority were motivated by Podhrasky's having accepted the nomination to run against Coleman for union office. I find that under the circumstances the discriminatory motive of Coleman in pursuing Podhrasky's reduction of job seniority may properly be inferred. See Irwin County Electric Membership Cooperative, 247 NLRB 1357 (1980). Coleman made no move to seek a reduction in Podhrasky's job seniority until November 26, 2 days after the nomination of Podhrasky to oppose Coleman for union office although Coleman had been apprised in June or July 1980 by Podhrasky of Podhrasky's maternity leave in 1977 and 1978 and although the seniority list was made up by the waitresses in September 1979. I also find, by the preponderance of the credible evidence, that Respondent violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act by reason of its discrimination against Podhrasky by causing the Employer to reduce her job seniority.

See Local 138, International Union of Operating Engineers, AFL-CIO (Building Contractors' Association, Inc.), 233 NLRB 267 (1978), wherein the administrative law judge found that the union sought to punish a member for his criticism of the union president by reducing his industry seniority, and thereby impaired the member's opportunity for job referral with the consequent infliction of economic harm on the member in violation of Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act. In this case the administrative law judge rejected the union's defense that the reduction of the discriminatee's seniority was initiated by complaining members. The administrative law judge also found that the union had not obtained any information until 10 months after it reduced the discriminatee's seniority. The administrative law judge also noted that it was not until the discriminatee raised his complaint in 1975 that the union took action regarding his seniority status which had been resolved 2 years previously. See also Local Lodge Number 5, International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Iron Ship Builders, Blacksmiths, Forgers and Helpers, AFL-CIO (Regor Construction Company, Inc.), 249 NLRB 840 (1980), and Fruin-Colnon Corporation v. N.L.R.B., 571 F.2d 1017 (8th Cir. 1978), enfg. 227 NLRB 59 (1976).

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent Bartenders, Waiters, Waitresses, Cooks & Hotel Employees Union Local 332, AFL-CIO, is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

2. Ogden Food Service Corporation is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

3. By attempting to cause the Employer to reduce the job seniority of Charging Party Anita Podhrasky because of her nonpayment of dues in 1977 and 1978, the Respondent Union has engaged in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act.

4. By attempting to and by causing the Employer to reduce the job seniority of Charging Party Anita Podhrasky because she engaged in activities protected by Section 7 of the Act, Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act.[4]

5. The aforesaid unfair labor practices are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent Union violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act, I shall recommend that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

Since I have found that Respondent Union unlawfully caused the Employer to reduce the job seniority of Charging Party Anita Podhrasky, I shall recommend that Respondent Union be ordered to notify the Employer, in writing, with a copy thereof to be furnished to Anita Podhrasky, that it is no longer requesting that Podhrasky's job seniority be reduced.[5]

I shall further recommend that Respondent Union be ordered to make Anita Podhrasky whole for any loss of earnings and benefits she may have suffered as a result of the discrimination against her with interest computed thereon in the manner prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Company, 90 NLRB 289 (1950), and Florida Steel Corporation, 231 NLRB 651 (1977).[6] I shall also recommend that Respondent Union be required to post the appropriate informational notice to its members in appropriate places in its offices and meeting halls.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact, conclusions of law, and the entire record, and pursuant to Section 10(c) of the Act, I hereby issue the following recommended:

ORDER[7]

The Respondent, Bartenders, Waiters, Waitresses, Cooks & Hotel Employees Local Union 332, AFL-CIO, Caseyville, Illinois, its officers, agents, and representatives, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Causing or attempting to cause Ogden Food Service Corporation to discriminate against Anita Podhrasky or any other employee in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

(b) In any other manner restraining or coercing employees of Ogden Food Service Corporation in the exercise of rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act, except to the extent that such rights may be affected by an agreement requiring membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment as authorized by Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action designed to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Act:

(a) Notify the Employer, in writing, with a copy thereof to be furnished to Anita Podhrasky, that it is no longer requesting or contending that Podhrasky's job seniority be reduced.

(b) Make whole Anita Podhrasky for any loss of earnings and benefits suffered by her as a result of her reduction in seniority in December 1980, in the manner set forth in the section of this Decision entitled "The Remedy."

(c) Post in its offices and meeting halls copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix A" on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 14, after being duly signed by an official representative of Respondent Union. Said notices shall be posted immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained for a period of 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to members are customarily posted. Respondent Union and its agents shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.[8]

[4] Although the General Counsel did not argue in his brief that Business Agent Coleman's actions in seeking the reduction of Podhrasky's seniority were motivated by an unlawful discriminatory purpose, he asserted this position at the hearing and this issue is addressed by Respondent Union in its brief. I find the facts give rise to a finding of a violation on this ground also. The complaint adequately encompasses a violation on this basis and the evidence adduced at the hearing proves a violation on this basis. I find this issue to have been fully litigated. See Carbonex Coal Company, 248 NLRB 779 (1980).

[5] Anita Podhrasky's job seniority was restored to her by the Employer in December 1980.

[6] See, generally, Isis Plumbing & Heating Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

[7] In the event no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Rules and Regulations of the National Labor Relations Board, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order herein shall, as provided by Sec. 102.48 of the Rules and Regulations, be adopted by the Board and become its findings, conclusions, and Order, and all objections thereto shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[8] In the event that this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

(d) Notify the Regional Director for Region 14, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps Respondent Union has taken to comply herewith.

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On June 11, 1981, Administrative Law Judge Richard H. Beddow, Jr., issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings, and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge, to modify his remedy,[1] and to adopt his recommended Order,[2] as modified herein.[3]

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge, as modified below, and hereby orders that the Respondent, Rebel Coal Company, Inc., Auxier, Kentucky, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the said recommended Order, as so modified:

1. Insert the following as paragraph 2(a) and reletter the subsequent paragraphs accordingly:

"(a) Reopen and reestablish its auto repair shop operation."

2. Substitute the attached notice for that of the Administrative Law Judge.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

After a hearing at which all sides had an opportunity to present evidence and state their positions, the National Labor Relations Board found that we have violated the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, and has ordered us to post this notice.

> WE WILL NOT threaten our employees with loss of employment, or lay off employees, or otherwise discriminate against them, because of their activities in pursuit of union affiliation for purposes of collective-bargaining representation.
> WE WILL NOT in any other manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act.
> WE WILL reopen and reestablish our auto repair shop operation.
> WE WILL offer immediate and full reinstatement to Glen Allen, Mickey Lawson, Gary Ferguson, Robert Sturgill, Sam Amos, Eric Picklesimer, and Van G. Cope to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed, and WE WILL make them whole, with interest, for any losses they may have suffered as a result of the discrimination against them.

REBEL COAL COMPANY, INC.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

RICHARD H. BEDDOW, JR., Administrative Law Judge: This matter was heard before me in Prestonsburg, Kentucky, on March 12, 1981. The proceeding is based on a charge filed April 24, 1980, by the United Mine Workers of America, and a charge filed individually on January 19, 1981, by Van G. Cope. The General Counsel's complaint alleges that Respondent Rebel Coal Company, Inc. (herein called Respondent), Auxier, Kentucky, violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended (herein called the Act), through statements of supervisors and by its actions of closing an automotive repair shop and laying off certain employees.

[1] See Isis Plumbing & Heating Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962), for rationale on interest payments.

[2] Inasmuch as we have found that Respondent violated the Act by laying off employees through the discriminatory closing of its "auto" repair shop, we will require Respondent to reopen and reestablish the repair shop operation in order to restore the status quo ante existing prior to its commission of unfair labor practices. As noted by the Administrative Law Judge, while the record contains general testimony indicating that Respondent has experienced some overall financial difficulties, the record is devoid of evidence showing the actual financial condition of the "auto" repair shop operation at the time of its closing or its anticipated costs based on actual operating practices. We have long held that restoration of the status quo ante following an unfair labor practice is prima facie appropriate and that the burden rests with Respondent to demonstrate that it is not appropriate. N. C. Coastal Motor Lines, Inc., 219 NLRB 1009 (1975), enfd. 542 F.2d 637 (4th Cir. 1976). Since the record provides no basis to conclude that a normal status quo ante remedy would be unduly burdensome or endanger Respondent's continued viability, we find that such a remedy is appropriate herein. Accordingly, we have modified the Administrative Law Judge's recommended Order and will require Respondent to reopen and reestablish its "auto" repair shop operation. Cf. Capitol Chrysler-Plymouth of Montgomery, 242 NLRB 1274 (1979).

[3] In accordance with his partial dissent in Olympic Medical Corporation, 250 NLRB 146 (1980), Member Jenkins would award interest on the backpay due based on the formula set forth therein.

259 NLRB No. 33

Briefs were filed on or before April 16, 1981, by the General Counsel and Respondent. Upon a review of the entire record in this case and from my observations of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent's answer admits that it is a West Virginia corporation with an office and place of business at Auxier, Kentucky, where it is engaged primarily in the mining of coal and that during a representative 12-month period it purchased and received at its Auxier facility goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly from points outside the State of Kentucky. At all times material herein, Respondent is and has been an employer within the meaning of Section 2(2) of the Act, engaged in commerce and in operations affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

II. LABOR ORGANIZATION

Respondent also admits in its answer that the United Mine Workers of America (herin called the Union) is now and has been at all times material herein a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

Respondent operates a coal mine in the Prestonsburg and Paintsville, Kentucky, area. Prior to March 29, 1980, it operated an auto repair shop near Paintsville for the maintenance and repair of vehicles (primarily nondiesel powered), used in connection with its coal business. It also had another location known as the "farm" near Paintsville, where it repaired vehicles, primarily diesel powered, and which location served as a reporting area for employees who perform over-the-road truck driving work. The involved repair employees and drivers at these locations were not represented by the Union. However, Respondent's other production and maintenance employees were represented by the Union and covered by the National Bituminous Coal Wage Agreement of 1978.

Early in 1980, the United Mine Workers of America was contacted by certain nonunion employees of Respondent. The Union was of the opinion that the auto shop and farm operations and employees were not covered by the existing contract. Consequently, representatives of the Union met with employees Sam Amos and Doug Daniels, who signed cards for the Union and who were given additional authorization cards to be signed by the remainder of the approximate eight nonunion employees in the auto shop and four employees at the farm. The following day 12 signed authorization cards were returned, representing all of Respondent's nonunion employees in the auto shop and farm locations.

The Auto Shop

On February 21, 1980, the union representatives met with Odell Rogers, Respondent's president, and two or three supervisors, and advised him of the authorization cards. Rogers asked if the Union expected Respondent to sign the national contract and was told that the Union was willing to negotiate a contract that was tailored to the employees of Respondent's operation. Rogers replied by stating that ". . . before I'll sign a contract for those people, I'll shut the place down and farm the work out." At that point, a representative of the local coal association advised Rogers not to say anything further. At some point Rogers also said it would be cheaper to close the shop down. The Union advised Rogers of the employee's rights and that it would closely monitor the situation and the meeting ended.[1]

On March 10, the Union filed a petition to represent Respondent's employees at the auto shop and farm operatons. Shortly thereafter, Brad Walls, who ran the auto shop, was told by Respondent's superintendent, Charles Williams, that Respondent was "going to have to start farming work out, because they were going to be shutting the shop down on account of the Union." Walls also testified that during the previous summer Rogers told Walls to fire a new employee who had remarked about poor working conditions and something about the Union. Rogers said he did not want to hear any more about the Union and that he would close the auto shop before he let it go union.

On a Saturday morning, March 29, Respondent closed its auto shop operations. Two or three employees were at work when Williams and another of Respondent's officials, Terry McGaffee, arrived at the auto shop and Williams placed a sign which said "no work until further notice" on the windshield of the truck on which the employees were installing an engine. One of the employees asked whether they were fired or laid off. Williams responded that he really did not know. Later, Williams told him that he was laid off until further notice and, in response to a further question, that Respondent would prepare some layoff slips. The employees were not given any specific reason as to why they were being laid off; however, during the next week, the employees were given layoff slips which stated that they were being laid off for economic reasons. The employees were given their layoff slips by Williams, who did not otherwise explain the economic reasons for their layoff. Approximately 2 weeks after the layoff of the auto shop employees, laid-off employee Eric Picklesimer spoke with Dale Mosley, supervisor at the farm, at Respondent's office. Mosley told Picklesimer that the employees "shouldn't have done it," and that they "messed things up by what we had done."

The Farm

Van Cope was a truck driver and part-time mechanic who worked at the "farm." He along with other employees had signed authorization cards with the Union in January 1980. After Respondent had learned that the employees had signed cards for the Union, Supervisor Mosley asked the employees why they did not discuss the matter with him and Williams to try to work something out. Sometime in April 1980, Cope had a conversation with Mosley in the presence of other employees who worked at the farm. The employees were concerned about what might happen to their jobs in view of the recent auto shop layoff and their pending representation election. Cope acted as the spokesman for the group and began the conversation by asking Mosley what would happen to the employees at the farm. Mosley replied by saying that he had been told that the employees would all get their "DCM papers as soon as your name's been voted yes." It was understood that "DCM" stood for "Don't Come Back Monday." Cope persisted by asking Mosley if the employees were going to be fired, and Mosley responded that they would not be fired but would be shut down. Cope continued the conversation by asking Mosley if that was what happened at the auto shop. Mosley replied that he was not going to say that the Union did not have anything to do with it, but that a woman had been threatening a lawsuit against Respondent concerning trespassing or something. On a subsequent occasion, Cope discussed the Union with Mosley at which time he told Mosley he was in favor of the Union so that the employees could get the money and benefits that they deserved.

[1] The Charging Parties' testimony in this respect was not rebutted and Rogers was not called as a witness by Respondent.

An election was conducted on July 31, 1980. Three farm employees, James Pennington, David Griffith, and Cope, voted ballots which were known to be for the Union because of challenges to the other ballots.

Cope worked from Friday, Au9ust 22, until approximately 4 a.m. Saturday morning, driving a piece of equipment from one of Respondent's mines to another. Around 11 a.m. Saturday he went to the office to get his paycheck. Mosley gave Cope his paycheck with an attached layoff slip that stated that he would be terminated and placed on temporary layoff until further notice due to a reduction in the work force. Cope reacted angrily and made a statement about being worked all day and night before being laid off. In response, Mosley stated that Cope did not have to worry about the matter because he would never work there again. One other employee, Griffith, also was laid off on Auqust 23. However, Griffith was recalled about 2 or 3 weeks later. After his recall, Griffith performed work which Cope had performed. Employee Pennington, who performed the same type of work, was not laid off on August 23 even though he had less seniority with Respondent than Cope. Cope was never recalled.

Respondent's economic information

Respondent's financial vice president, Roy Debo, presented the Company's recent financial background which in 1979 was described as "unbelievable" due to a lack of records and a lack of fundamental financial organization. At that time, when Debo first joined the Company, Rebel was composed of 10 to 12 operating companies and a financial analysis revealed that: ". . . they were all losing money very, very rapidly."

In the fall of 1979, Debo closed the Company's West Virginia auto shop as well as a deep mine operation and one of its strip mine operations. Also, 15 percent of the Company's vehicles were eliminated over a 6-month period and the Company was put on a cash operating basis. During October 1979, an oral recommendation was made that the auto shop at Prestonsburg be closed; however, the owners apparently chose not to do so and instead, during December 1979, moved the facilities several miles to Paintsville. Although it was confronted with a $750,000 delinquent tax lien by the Internal Revenue Service, a number of lawsuits by creditors, and some equipment repossession, Respondent was able to obtain some refinancing and restructuring of its financial affairs. During the first 8 months of 1980, Rebel and its subsidiaries laid off employees as follows: 16 in January, 6 in February, 10 in March, 35 in May, 12 in June, and 133 in August.

In early February 1980, Jim Hoskins, the company accountant, was requested to analyze the cost of continuing to operate the Paintsville auto shop as opposed to contracting the work out to independent businesses. A written report purportedly was submitted in late February.[2] It concluded that a cost savings of approximately $58,000 a year could be obtained by closing the auto shop and contracting the repair work to outside sources. According to Hoskins, this savings would be further increased by savings on insurance, and overhead in addition to utilities, telephone, and rent. The study assumed weekly union wages for 480 hours (eight workers at 40 regular hours, $10.50 an hour, and 20 overtime hours $15.75 an hour, plus union benefit cost) compared to 400 hours a week for outside sources at $18.50 an hour. No analysis was made of actual auto shop cost nor was any recognition made of the fact that the employees were not paid union wages and in fact were paid on straight salary for a 6-day workweek which regularly exceeded 60 hours a week with no additional compensation for hours worked beyond 40 hours a week or 8 hours a day.

Discussion

Upon a review of the briefs and the entire record, I am satisfied that the evidence presented by the General Counsel has established by a preponderance of the evidence that Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices in violating Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

Respondent, through its president, expressed intentions to avoid collective-bargaining obligations to its repair shop employees by the threatened closing of the auto shop facilities. Respondent knew of the union interest of the involved employees and Respondent's supervisors knew of and expressed the Company's union animus regarding the repair shop employees. There is no real dispute regarding the factuality of the statements made by Respondent's officials, and, when such statements are read in the context of the prounion interest and activities of the auto shop employees, the conclusion properly may be reached that the statements constituted threats of job loss designed to influence the votes and union activities of the employees. Accordingly, I conclude that Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(1) as alleged.

Respondent's principal defense is directed at the 8(a)(3) allegation. This defense is based on a claim that the closing of the auto shop and resulting layoff of employees was due to economic necessity, uninfluenced by any union animus. Although Respondent has supplied general testimony indicating that the Company (including its component operations) had financial difficulties in 1979, there is no specific showing of the actual financial condition of the Company or of the auto shop operation. Respondent did present a theoretical analysis of operation at union wage levels; however, no attempt was made to show actual or computed cost based on the facilities' actual operating practices. The use of union scale for the theoretical calculation was not called for in light of the Union's expression of willingness to negotiate a contract separate from the National Bituminous Coal Wage Agreement. Moreover, the study was not completed until after the union petition had been filed and after Respondent clearly was aware of the employees' union interest. I conclude that Respondent's cost analysis actually is indicative of a predisposition regarding unionization of the auto shop; that the analysis was made because of the union campaign; and that the resulting conclusions drawn by the Respondent are not reliable or believable indications that would support Respondent's assertions that the auto shop operations were closed due to economic necessity.

[2] The report, Resp. Exh. 2, is undated.

The record otherwise shows that Respondent felt economically justified in moving the repair shop and keeping it in operation as long as it could continue to pay its employees a flat salary for a regular 60-hour plus workweek. And, despite Respondent's recognition of the Union for its mining production and maintenance workers, the record otherwise shows that it held an antiunion attitude regarding its repair shop operations during the general period of time prior to the closing of the auto shop.[3] The record persuasively shows that Respondent would have kept the auto shop in operation as long as it could have continued nonunion operations and that the reason for closing was to avoid collective bargaining with the Union which might result in anticipated higher cost of operation. Under these circumstances, I conclude that there existed specific union animus which was the motivating factor for the closing of the auto repair shop and the resulting layoff of the involved employees; that Respondent has not shown good cause for the closing of the auto repair shop; and that the employees would not have been discharged, despite possible overall company financial problems, except for their prounion activities. Accordingly, I further conclude that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) as alleged.

With respect to the discharge of employee Cope, I conclude that Cope was known by his supervisor, Mosley, to be a union advocate at least since April 1980 and that Cope acted as spokesman for the "farm" employees at such time. Cope was laid off without warning after a period of heavy work, only 3 weeks after his July 1980 vote in favor of union representation. A less senior employee was not laid off and another employee was laid off but recalled 3 weeks later to perform work Cope had performed. Although both of these other employees also had voted for the Union, they had not been active spokesmen.

Respondent asserts that Cope's layoff was for economic reasons and that it was consistent with a large number of other layoffs during the same general time period; however, Cope was treated differently than the other employees who shared a similar background, and the main distinguishing factor was his outspokenness on behalf of the Union.[4] Respondent, through remarks made to Cope by his supervisor and as otherwise indicated above, is shown to have held negative feeling regarding union representation for its nonunion operations. Accordingly, I conclude that the predominant reasons for Cope's layoff (and lack of recall) were his union sympathies and activities and I conclude that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) as alleged.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. By threatening to close the auto repair shop before it would sign a union contract and by telling employees at the farm location that they would, in effect, be fired if they voted for the Union in the scheduled election, Respondent interfered with, restrained, and coerced employees in the exercise of their Section 7 rights and engaged in unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

4. By laying off employees Glen Allen, Mickey Lawson, Gary Ferguson, Robert Sturgill, Sam Amos, Eric Picklesimer, and Van G. Cope because of their activities in support of the Union, Respondent discriminated in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having concluded that Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I shall recommend that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and that it take certain affirmative action as set forth below to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Act.

Under circumstances involving the unlawful shutdown of a specific operation and termination of the personnel therein, it may be considered to be desirable that a respondent be required to restore the status quo ante. The remedy can be an order requiring the reopening of a facility as well as making employees whole for any loss of earnings or other benefits. See Capitol Chrysler-Plymouth of Montgomery, 242 NLRB 1274 (1979). Here it is considered necessary to require that Respondent offer immediate and full reinstatement to Glen Allen, Mickey Lawson, Gary Ferguson, Robert Sturgill, Sam Amos, Eric Picklesimer, and Van G. Cope to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions of employment, and make them whole for any losses they may have suffered as a result of the discrimination against them in accordance with the method set forth in F. W. Woolworth Company, 90 NLRB 289 (1950), with interest as prescribed in Florida Steel Corporation, 231 NLRB 651 (1977).

[3] This attitude also was apparent early in 1979 at a point in time prior to the Respondent's financial vice president's recommendation that the shop be closed.

[4] On cross-examination of Cope, questions were asked regarding certain accidents; however, there is no evidence to indicate that any cause existed for termination because of these occurrences or that they in fact played any part in the termination. No complaints were made about his work and he was given a pay increase a few weeks before his discharge.

Based upon the entire record, findings of fact, conclusions of law, and pursuant to Section 10(c) of the Act, I hereby issue the following recommended Order:

ORDER[5]

The Respondent, Rebel Coal Company, Inc., Auxier, Kentucky, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Threatening employees with loss of future employment if they pursue union affiliation for purposes of collective-bargaining representation.

(b) Laying off employees or otherwise discriminating against them because of their actions in pursuing union affiliation for purposes of collective- bargaining representation.

(c) In any other manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Offer Glen Allen, Mickey Lawson, Gary Ferguson, Robert Sturgill, Sam Amos, Eric Picklesimer, and Van G. Cope immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions of employment, without prejudice to their seniority or other rights and privileges previously enjoyed, and to make them whole for any loss of earnings they may have suffered as a result of the discrimination against them in the manner set forth in the section of this Decision entitled "The Remedy."

(b) Preserve and, upon request, make available to the Board or its agents, for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(c) Post at its Auxier, Kentucky, and "farm" facilities, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[6] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 9, after being duly signed by an authorized representative of Respondent, shall be posted by Respondent immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(d) Notify the Regional Director for Region 9, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps Respondent has taken to comply herewith.

[5] In the event no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Rules and Regulations of the National Labor Relations Board, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order herein shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules and Regulations, be adopted by the Board and become its findings, conclusions, and Order, and all objections thereto shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[6] In the event that this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

November 16, 1981

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On August 14, 1980, Administrative Law Judge Irwin H. Socoloff issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, the General Counsel filed limited exceptions and a supporting brief, the Charging Party filed a statement adopting the position of the General Counsel, and Respondent filed a brief in answer to the General Counsel's exceptions.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions, briefs, and the statement of position and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings, and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge and hereby orders that the Respondent, Parker Hannifin Corporation, Huntsville, Alabama, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the said recommended Order.

MEMBER JENKINS, dissenting:

I agree with the majority that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by interrogating employees concerning their union activities and by threatening an employee with discharge if he cooperated with a Board investigation. Contrary to my colleagues, however, I believe that Respondent's reasons for issuing a written warning to employee Barbara Blanchard and for discharging her were pretextual, and that Respondent discriminated against Blanchard because of her union activities, in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

The Administrative Law Judge found, and I agree, that the General Counsel established a prima facie case that Blanchard's discharge was unlawful. The background facts are as follows.

An election was held at Respondent's Huntsville, Alabama, plant on September 12, 1979.[1] The Union[2] lost the election, but did not file objections, and the Regional Director for Region 10 issued a Certification of Results of the Election in that case.

Barbara Blanchard was a leading union adherent during the election campaign, and Respondent knew of this leadership role. Blanchard arranged and attended union meetings, distributed and collected authorization cards, and wore union paraphernalia during the election campaign.[3] Indeed, Respondent interrogated Blanchard concerning her union activities. Supervisor Carter questioned her about how many signed authorization cards the Union had obtained, and why she wanted a union in the plant. Blanchard testified that Carter interrogated her every few days until the date of the election. It was this testimony of Blanchard's that the Administrative Law Judge credited as "crisp, detailed and convincing," and based on it he found Respondent unlawfully interrogated Blanchard as alleged.

Respondent did not terminate Blanchard until after the September election. On October 13, Plant Manager Still gave Blanchard a "final warning notice," which stated that "any further instances like this will result in termination." The "further instances" mentioned in the notice referred to an attachment, which recited two separate events, on October 11 and 12, respectively, when Supervisor Thomas observed Blanchard at employee Bishop's machine, and requested her to return to her work area. The attachment also noted that, although in her two previous performance reviews Blanchard had been warned about spending too much time away from her work station, her supervisor was still required to remind her to remain at her work station.[4] Almost 2 weeks later, on October 25, Supervisor Carter told Blanchard on three separate occasions to leave Bishop's machine and said to her, "Let's go." Blanchard remained for a moment to continue the conversation, at which time Carter told her she was terminated. Carter made a report of the incident, which he gave to Still who then met with Blanchard and Carter, and discharged Blanchard for continually staying away from her machine.

[3] Respondent suggests that Blanchard's union leanings were confusing because, near the end of the campaign, she wore "vote no" buttons. However, Blanchard continued to wear prounion stickers and buttons, even while wearing the "vote no" buttons.

[4] The two incidents mentioned in the final warning notice were reported by Thomas, who was not Blanchard's usual supervisor. The "previous reviews" noted in the warning will be discussed below.

259 NLRB No. 23

These facts show, as the Administrative Law Judge found, that Respondent knew of Blanchard's activities and harbored union animus which was particularly directed toward Blanchard through Respondent's repeated interrogations of her. These findings notwithstanding, the Administrative Law Judge concluded that Respondent rebutted the General Counsel's prima facie case by showing that Blanchard was not discharged for union activity, but because of her refusal to stay at her post and her defiance of supervisory orders to return to work. In so doing the Administrative Law Judge found no evidence of disparate treatment or pretextual reasoning for the warning or her discharge. Analysis of the relevant facts leads me to the conclusion that the Administrative Law Judge incorrectly decided this issue.

Blanchard worked for Respondent from January 1977 until her discharge at the end of October 1979. She worked under Jack Pruitt in the chucker department as a machine operator until April 1979, when she became an automatic bar machine operator under Carter's supervision. It was in April that Blanchard contacted the Union and shortly thereafter in May that Carter began interrogating her on a regular basis. The evidence reflects that Blanchard was generally a good employee, save for one deficiency. Thus, in various performance reviews in 1978 and 1979, Blanchard's supervisors noted that she needed to stay in her work area more. However, these reviews also indicate that if Blanchard's "problem" was longstanding, it was also long tolerated. Pruitt verbally warned Blanchard when she was in the chucker department about being away from her machine. Carter also warned her when she became an employee in the automatic department. And both supervisors spoke to her on other occasions to remind her to return to her machine. Yet no discipline was ever instituted against her. Indeed, Respondent had a very liberal policy on breaks; whatever the rule Respondent had on the issue, the practice was for employees to take frequent breaks as long as they were of short duration; i.e., 5 or 10 minutes. Furthermore, there was never any discipline imposed on any employee for breaking any company rule on breaks or other matters. Indeed, the only warning notices besides the one issued to Blanchard also were issued in October 1979. Both of these were for employees in the chucker department and indicated "production" as the problem area. Each employee had been warned on August 24 about production and staying at his machine on that date, and the two notices issued thereafter indicated the same problem existed and, if there were no improvement, "disciplinary action will be taken." These notices contrast sharply with Blanchard's "final warning" notice, which checked off "personal conduct" and "indifference," not "production" as the problem, and which was labeled a "final" warning notice.[5]

Blanchard was singled out in more ways than one. Thus, although Blanchard was timed by Thomas to see how long she remained away from her station, no other employee had ever been timed.[6] Further, Blanchard was not the only employee to report back to her position after lunch on the date of discharge. The Administrative Law Judge himself found that at least five or six employees were still away from their work station some 7 minutes after the break bell had rung. Yet not one other employee was warned or otherwise disciplined for such absence.

These facts clearly indicate that Respondent has seized on these October incidents as a pretext to rid itself of an outspoken union adherent. Its long tolerance of Blanchard's behavior prior to the union campaign[7] and its disparate treatment of Blanchard indicate that its proffered reasons for issuing the warning and for discharging Blanchard were not the real ones. In addition, Respondent's union animus can hardly be overlooked. Respondent interrogated Blanchard about her union activities and the sympathies of other employees. Particularly telling is Respondent's naked threat to employee Howard, whom Blanchard had requested to give a statement to the Board, that he would be discharged if he cooperated with the Board's investigation. Respondent's knowledge of Blanchard's union activities, and the above course of conduct, establishes the General Counsel's prima facie case. As demonstrated, Respondent's defense is clearly pretextual. Accordingly, I would find that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

[5] It should be noted these three notices are the only ones issued by Respondent from September 1978 to October 1979. A termination notice was issued to an employee in October 1978, but this was for a probationary employee who had been previously terminated and rehired. He was discharged for being away from his work station and producing 1,760 scrap parts. This situation is quite different from that of Blanchard.

[6] Pruitt stated that he had trouble in his department in February 1979 with employees' being away from their machines too long. He stated that he told them to stay closer to their machines, but there is no indication that employees received warnings or that they were timed. Carter also testified that he had ordered employees to return to their jobs, and that only Blanchard gave him arguments.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

IRWIN H. SOCOLOFF, Administrative Law Judge: Upon a charge filed on October 31, 1979, by United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO-CLC, herein called the Union, against Parker Hannifin Corporation, herein called Respondent, the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, by the Regional Director for Region 10, issued a complaint dated December 10, 1979, alleging violations by Respondent of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) and Section 2(6) and (7) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, herein called the Act. Respondent, by its answer, denied the commission of any unfair labor practices.

Pursuant to notice, hearing was held before me in Huntsville, Alabama, on June 2 and 5, 1980, at which the General Counsel and Respondent were represented by counsel and were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to introduce evidence. Thereafter, the parties filed briefs which have been duly considered.

Upon the entire record[1] in this case and from my observations of the witnesses, I make the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent, an Ohio corporation, has an office and place of business in Huntsville, Alabama, where it is engaged in the manufacture and sale of steel fittings. During the year ending December 31, 1978, a representative period, Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business operations, sold and shipped from its Huntsville, Alabama, facility finished products valued in excess of $50,000 directly to customers located outside the State of Alabama. I find that Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. LABOR ORGANIZATION

United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO-CLC, is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Background

On July 18, 1979, the Union filed a petition with the Board, seeking an election among Respondent's Huntsville, Alabama, plant employees (Case 10-RC-11835). Thereafter, the Board, on September 13, 1979, conducted an election which was lost by the Union by a vote of 230-to-84. Postelection objections were not filed and, accordingly, on September 21, the Regional Director for Region 10 issued a Certification of Results in that case.

Some 6 weeks after the election, on October 25, 1979, Respondent discharged employee Barbara Blanchard, one of the principal supporters of the Union during the preelection period. In this proceeding, the General Counsel contends that Blanchard was fired because of her union activities, which were well known to Respondent, in violation of Section 8(a)(3) of the Act. Respondent asserts that it discharged Blanchard solely because of her proclivity to leave her work area for lengthy periods of time and her defiance of the instructions of her supervisors to return to work. Also at issue is whether Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by interrogating Blanchard concerning her union membership, activities, and desires and the union membership, activities, and desires of her fellow employees; threatening Blanchard that it would move its facility if the employees opted for union representation and threatening employee Stanley Howard that he would be discharged if he cooperated with the Board's investigation of the Blanchard discharge. The General Counsel further contends, and Respondent denies that when, on October 13, 1979, Respondent issued a written warning notice to Blanchard, some 12 days before her discharge, it did so for unlawful antiunion reasons.

B. Facts[2] and Conclusions

1. The 8(a)(1) allegations

Barbara Blanchard was employed by Respondent from January 1977 to October 1979 when, as noted, she was discharged. Until March 1979, she worked as a machine operator in the chucker department under the supervision of Jack Pruitt. Thereafter, Blanchard performed as a machine operator in Respondent's automatic department where Billy Carter served as her supervisor.[3]

In April 1979, Blanchard and her brother contacted a representative of the Union and they scheduled employee meetings. During the course of the ensuing representation campaign, Blanchard attended union meetings and distributed authorization cards to her fellow employees. In all, she collected 50 to 100 signed cards. At work, she wore some six or seven union buttons, for a period of months, on her shirt and attached to her purse. She also wore a Steelworkers bumper sticker across her rear.[4]

Blanchard testified that, early in May 1979, Carter asked her how many signed cards she had obtained. He further inquired as to why she wanted a union in the plant. According to Blanchard, Carter, thereafter, and until the election, asked her those same questions every few days. Carter, in his testimony, denied that he ever questioned Blanchard with respect to her union activities or desires.

According to Blanchard's further testimony, in early October, following the election, she visited General Manager Don Gerosa to protest the contents of her most recent employee review. When Gerosa refused to discuss that matter before first speaking to her supervisor, Blanchard stated that that was one reason a union was needed in the plant, so that employees who had complaints would be heard. At that point, Blanchard testified, Gerosa stated "something to the effect of, 'I've been wanting to talk to you about why you've been wanting a union in here.'" After further discussion, "He went on to remind me of the large plot of land down in Jacksonville, Alabama, that Parker-Hannifin had just bought and was building a plant on and told me it was three times the size of the place that we have here in Huntsville, and finally ended by saying that Parker-Hannifin in Huntsville wouldn't ever become union." Gerosa, in his testimony, confirmed the fact of the foregoing meeting with Blanchard but denied making the remarks attributed to him by Blanchard. Thus, he testified that he did not ask Blanchard why she supported the Union or stated or implied that the Huntsville plant would be moved if the Union gained representation rights. Gerosa explained that construction of the new Jacksonville plant had begun in the fall of 1978 and completed by August 1979, when that plant became operational. Further, according to Gerosa's uncontradicted testimony, during that entire period, and during the election campaign itself, he repeatedly assured the unit employees that, while certain equipment would be moved from Huntsville to Jacksonville, not a single job would be lost at Huntsville.

[1] Respondent's post-hearing motion to amend, in certain respects, the transcript of proceedings, is hereby granted.

[2] The factfindings contained herein are based on a composite of the documentary and testimonial evidence presented at the hearing. Where necessary to do so in order to resolve specific testimonial conflict, credibility resolutions have been set forth supra.

[3] The complaint alleges, and the answer admits, that Pruitt, Carter, and Respondent's general manager, Don Gerosa, were, at all times material herein, supervisors within the meaning of Sec. 2(11) of the Act.

[4] For the final 2 weeks of the campaign, in addition to the union insignia, Blanchard wore a "Vote No" button.

Employee Stanley Howard testified that on November 8 he informed Supervisor Pruitt that Blanchard had requested that he, Howard, provide a statement to the National Labor Relations Board. Howard asked Pruitt if he thought it would be wise to do so. According to Howard, Pruitt stated "that if it was him, he wouldn't volunteer any information. He'd wait until I got subpoenaed because I'd get fired." Pruitt's version of the conversation was quite different. He testified that, when Howard first approached him about the matter, he told the employee that he, Pruitt, could not get involved in it. Pruitt then sought guidance from Gerosa and he testified that 10 minutes after his first conversation with Howard he approached the employee and told him that if he, Howard, volunteered to sign a statement chances were he "might have to go to court." Pruitt denied issuing a threat to Howard but, rather, claimed that he told him that it was "up to him to do what he wanted."

As Blanchard, Howard, Carter, Pruitt, and Gerosa all appeared to me to be testifying in a truthful manner, I am unable to resolve the foregoing conflicts in testimony by resort to demeanor findings. Blanchard's testimony concerning the alleged interrogations by Carter was crisp, detailed, and convincing and I credit it over the general denial of Carter. On the other hand, Blanchard testified in much more vague fashion concerning her meeting with Gerosa. In light of Gerosa's uncontradicted explanation of the context of the conversation, his denial that, during this postelection meeting, he stated or implied that the plant would be moved has the ring of truth. I likewise credit his testimony denying that he questioned Blanchard concerning her reasons for having supported the Union. Finally, I credit Howard, an apparently disinterested witness, with respect to his testimony concerning the November 8 incident. Thus, I find Howard's version of that event clearer and more convincing than the vaguer narration of Pruitt.

Based on the foregoing, I find that Respondent, by its supervisor, Carter, violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by interrogating Blanchard concerning her union activities and sympathies and those of her fellow employees. Respondent further violated that section of the Act by threatening employee Howard, through Supervisor Pruitt, with discharge if he cooperated with a Board investigation.

2. The Blanchard discharge

In light of Blanchard's activities on behalf of the Union, as detailed, infra; Carter's repeated interrogations of her concerning those activities and the testimony of several of Respondent's officials that they knew, during the course of the campaign, that Blanchard was a leading union adherent, I conclude that the General Counsel has established a prima facie case of unlawful discharge under the Act. However, as I am entirely persuaded by the evidence offered by Respondent in defense, as set forth below, that Blanchard was discharged for job related, and not union related, reasons, I further conclude that her firing was not violative of the statute.

Respondent permits its machine operators to take work breaks as they wish, for purposes of visiting the bathroom, the soda and candy machines, or to say "hello" to another worker. Several of Respondent's witnesses testified that the employees have been instructed to limit such breaks to a duration of 5 minutes. Blanchard herself described the time limitation as "a reasonable period" and "maybe about five minutes." Yet, numerous employee and supervisory witnesses in this case testified that, not only did Blanchard take many more breaks than the other employees but that those breaks often lasted for periods of 30 minutes and longer. Employee Curtis Blackwell, who frequently was required to oversee Blanchard's machines while she was "on break," credibly testified that "there's been days where she was gone four hours out of eight." Thus, in the months preceeding the discharge, Blackwell complained to his supervisor, Billy Carter, that he, Blackwell, was spending so much time keeping watch over Blanchard's machines, while she was away "on break," that he did not have time to adequately perform his own duties.[5]

Performance reviews of Blanchard for the years 1978 and 1979, issued by her supervisors, uniformly contained a notation that the employee was not spending sufficient time in her work area. Early in 1979, while she still worked in the chucker department, Blanchard received a verbal warning from her then supervisor, Pruitt, for failure to stay at her machine. In the spring of that year, after transferring to the automatic department, she received a verbal warning from Supervisor Carter for being out of her work area for long periods of time. In addition, according to the credited testimony of Pruitt and Carter, they found it necessary frequently to speak to Blanchard concerning her proclivity to stay away from her work area and to instruct her to return to her job duties. Carter further testified that Blanchard often refused to accept such directives. Blanchard, in her testimony, conceded that there were occasions when she would not, when so instructed, return to her work station, but would, instead, "ask to finish my business."

[5] Although machines in the automatic department are not hand-fed, the presence of the operators is essential as they are required to check the finished products for defective parts. If the machine is running such parts, the operator must sharpen the tools or make other adjustments. Operators must also watch the machines to prevent damage to same as they may, among other things, catch on fire.

Carter credibly testified that in the months preceding her discharge Blanchard exhibited a heightened tendency to remain away from her job duties. Thus, in September, Carter had to speak to Blanchard as many as two or three times in a day about this subject. That month, he gave her another verbal warning for the same offense. Employee Mark Bishop, a machine operator in the chucker department, testified that, during this period, Blanchard would visit him, at his work station four or five times per night, and stay for periods of up to 20 minutes, or until instructed by a supervisor to return to her machine. This practice continued until the night she was discharged.

On October 13, Blanchard received a "final warning notice" from Plant Manager Jack Stall after Stall was informed, by substitute Supervisor James Thomas, that Blanchard was staying away from her work station, at Bishop's machine, thus causing employee Blackwell to spend his time performing her job functions. On October 25, during the first half of the shift, Carter instructed Blanchard on three separate occasions to leave Bishop's machine and return to her work area. Immediately after the lunchbreak, when Carter, for the fourth time that day, found Blanchard at Bishop's machine, he approached her and said, "let's go." She, nonetheless, continued her conversation with Bishop, at which point, Carter told her that she was terminated.[6] The supervisor made notes of the occurrences of that day and delivered same to Stall. At 10 p.m. that night, Stall met with Blanchard and Carter, read to Blanchard the notes that Carter had prepared, and discharged the employee for continually staying away from her machine.

In light of the above, I conclude that the General Counsel's prima facie case has been rebutted and that Blanchard was warned, and then discharged not because of her union activities, but because, as Stall testified, of her consistent refusal to stay at her work area and do her job and her defiance of the instructions of her supervisors to return to work.[7] Contrary to the contentions of the General Counsel, the record does not contain evidence showing that Blanchard was treated differently than other, similarly situated, employees. Nor does the nature of Blanchard's dereliction, or the manner in which Respondent chose to deal with same, suggest that it was merely seized upon as a pretext. The discharge was, thus, not violative of the Act.

IV. THE EFFECTS OF THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES UPON COMMERCE

The activities of Respondent set forth in section III, above, occurring in connection with its operations described in section I, above, have a close, intimate, and substantial relationship to trade, traffic, and commerce among the several States and tend to lead to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow of commerce.

V. THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, I shall recommend that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and to take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent Parker Hannifin Corporation is an employer engaged in commerce, and in operations affecting commerce, within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. United Steelworkers of America, AFL-CIO-CLC, is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. By interrogating an employee concerning her union membership, activities, and desires, and the union membership, activities, and desires of other employees, Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

4. By threatening to discharge an employee if he cooperated with a Board investigation, Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

5. The aforesaid unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

6. Respondent has not otherwise violated the Act, as alleged in the complaint.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact, and conclusions of law, and upon the entire record, pursuant to Section 10(c) of the Act, I hereby issue the following recommended:

ORDER[8]

The Respondent, Parker Hannifin Corporation, Huntsville, Alabama, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Interrogating its employees concerning their union membership, activities, and desires, and the union membership, activities, and desires of other employees.

(b) Threatening to discharge employees if they cooperate with a Board investigation.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights under Section 7 of the Act to engage in concerted activities for their mutual aid and protection, or to refrain from such activity.

2. Take the following affirmative action deemed necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act:

[6] At that time, about 7 minutes after the bell had rung, signifying the end of the lunchbreak, some five or six employees had not yet returned to their work stations.

[7] In reaching this conclusion, I do not credit Blanchard's assertion that, after receiving her final warning notice, she "tightened up considerably" on her practice of leaving her work area, prompting Carter to tell her that she had made improvement.

[8] In the event no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Rules and Regulations of the National Labor Relations Board, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order herein shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules and Regulations, be adopted by the Board and become its findings, conclusions, and Order, and all objections thereto shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

(a) Post at its facility located in Huntsville, Alabama, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[9] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 10, after being duly signed by Respondent's representative, shall be posted by it immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by Respondent for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(b) Notify the Regional Director for Region 10, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps Respondent has taken to comply herewith.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

WE WILL NOT interrogate our employees concerning their union membership, activities, or desires, or the union membership, activities, or desires of other employees.

WE WILL NOT threaten to discharge our employees if they cooperate with a Board investigation.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

PARKER HANNIFIN CORPORATION

[9] In the event that this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

Bricklayers and Masons Union, Local No. 2, International Union Bricklayers and Allied Craftsmen, AFL-CIO and Jerome Ferretti, and MacFarlane & Hays Co. Case 7-CB-4726

November 16, 1981

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On June 1, 1981, Administrative Law Judge Jerry B. Stone issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings, and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order as modified herein.[1]

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge, as modified below, and hereby orders that the Respondent, Bricklayers and Masons Union, Local No. 2, International Union Bricklayers and Allied Craftsmen, AFL-CIO, Farmington, Michigan, its officers, agents, and representatives, shall take the action set forth in the said recommended Order, as so modified:

Substitute the following for paragraph 1(b):

"(b) In any like or related manner restraining or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act, except to the extent that such rights may be affected by lawful agreements in accord with Section 8(a)(3) of the Act."

---

[1] In par. 1(b) of his recommended Order, the Administrative Law Judge used the broad injunctive language "in any other manner." Respondent herein has neither demonstrated a proclivity to violate the Act, nor engaged in conduct so widespread as to demonstrate a general disregard for the employees' fundamental statutory rights. Thus, in our opinion the broad injunctive language is not appropriate, and we have modified the recommended Order accordingly. Hickmott Foods, Inc., 242 NLRB 1357 (1979).

Member Jenkins would compute the interest due on backpay in accordance with his partial dissent in Olympic Medical Corporation, 250 NLRB 146 (1980).

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

JERRY B. STONE, Administrative Law Judge: This proceeding, under Section 10(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, was heard pursuant to due notice on October 29, 1980, in Detroit, Michigan.

The charge was filed on March 19, 1980. The complaint in this matter was issued on May 2, 1980. The issues concern whether Respondent violated Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act by causing or attempting to cause MacFarlane & Hays Co. to terminate the employment of Jerome Ferretti because he was not a journeyman member of the Union.

All parties were afforded full opportunity to participate in the proceeding. Briefs have been filed by the General Counsel and Respondent and have been considered.

Upon the entire record in the case and from my observation of witnesses, I hereby make the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. THE BUSINESS OF THE EMPLOYER

The facts herein are based on the pleadings and admissions therein.

MacFarlane & Hays Co. is, and has been at all times material herein, a corporation duly organized under, and existing by virtue of, the laws of the State of Michigan.

At all times material herein, MacFarlane & Hays Co. has maintained its principal office and place of business at 25155 Haggerty Road, Farmington, Michigan, herein called the Farmington place of business. MacFarlane & Hays Co. is, and has been at all times material herein, engaged in general construction business at various jobsites throughout the United States.

During a 1-year representative period, MacFarlane & Hays Co., in the course and conduct of its business operations, performed services valued in excess of $500,000 of which services valued in excess of $50,000 were performed in and for various enterprises located in States other than the State of Michigan.

As conceded by Respondent and based on the foregoing, it is concluded and found that MacFarlane & Hays Co. is, and has been at all times material herein, an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED[1]

Bricklayers and Masons Union, Local No. 2, International Union Bricklayers and Allied Craftsmen, AFL-CIO, herein called Respondent, is, and has been at all times material herein, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

---

[1] The facts are based on the pleadings and admissions therein.

III. THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Preliminary Issues and Agency Status[2]

At all times material herein, Joseph Chadwick, president,[3] and Dennis Bouchard, steward, have been and are now agents of Respondent, acting on its behalf, within the meaning of Section 2(13) of the Act.

The General Counsel alleges and Respondent denies that Donald LeMarbe, the apprentice coordinator for the Joint Apprenticeship Committee, a committee set up by contractual agreement between the Detroit Mason Contractors' Association and other associations and the Union, is an agent for Respondent Local 2. Neither the General Counsel's brief nor Respondent's brief address the issue of Respondent Local 2's responsibility for acts of Donald LeMarbe. Nor did the evidence presented appear to squarely touch the elements of such issue.

As I view the overall facts, it is not really necessary to determine if LeMarbe is an agent of Respondent Local 2. The facts reveal that President Chadwick's views as to the usage of apprentices on firebrick work were well known. Respondent Local 2's actions as regards Ferretti's employment on firebrick work on March 12-14, 1980, was of such a nature that it would be reasonably foreseen that LeMarbe would be contacted and respond as he did. As indicated later, herein, the overall facts clearly reveal that Respondent Local 2, by Chadwick and Bouchard, attempted to cause and caused the termination of Ferretti by MacFarlane & Hays Co.

I do not find that the facts establish that LeMarbe is an agent of Respondent Local 2. The facts reveal that the Joint Apprenticeship Committee is composed of trustees of equal number from employers and the Union and that the apprenticeship coordinator is employed by said committee. His responsibilities, duties, and directions flow from the "Bricklayers' Apprenticeship Committee Standards" and from such trustees. This would not constitute him as an agent for Respondent Local 2. I note that LeMarbe, in his testimony, indicated that he construed that his assignment of or permitting of apprentices to work in the geographical jurisdiction of a local was based on consideration of prerogatives of the local's business agent and that such agents were in effect his bosses. This may indicate that LeMarbe considered himself in effect bound by the views of the Local's business agent. It does not establish that said Local had made him an agent. Accordingly, the allegation that LeMarbe was an agent of Respondent Local 2 is recommended to be dismissed.

B. The Union-Employer Relationship[4]

During the time relevant to this proceeding there existed a collective-bargaining agreement negotiated by the Detroit Mason Contractors' Association on behalf of its members with the Metropolitan Detroit Bricklayers District Council, International Union of Bricklayers and Allied Craftsmen, AFL-CIO. Such agreement was effective under its terms from July 1, 1977, to May 31, 1980. The above council was referred to as the Union and was composed of Locals 2, 26, 29, and 35 of said referred to International union.

Briefly summarized, said agreement provided in effect that the Association was to keep the Union advised of its membership and of the location and addresses of its member-employers. Said agreement provided that foremen would be responsible for the hiring and firing of bricklayers; that there would be a steward selected by the Union and on each job that such steward would be a member of the local union having geographic jurisdiction over the jobsite, and that such steward have the duty to enforce the terms of the agreement.

The agreement provided that:

> Section 2. In the employment of workmen to perform the various classifications of labor covered by this Agreement, the Employer shall give preference to those workmen who have previously worked for him within the geographic area of the Union, those who have either completed or are currently part of an approved apprenticeship training program, those who possess equivalent ability and are competent workmen, and those who have been previously employed in the Metropolitan Area for a period in excess of two years as brick masons.
> Section 3. The Employer agrees to notify the Union before starting any job within the geographic jurisdiction of the Union. All opportunities for employment shall be referred to the local having jurisdiction.

The agreement also provided that it would be administered by the Union's constituent locals and that neither the Union nor its locals would hinder any employer in transferring employees from job to job within the metropolitan area.

Further, the agreement provided for implementation of an apprentice program, for contributions thereto, for a reduced pay scale for apprentices, that the employers be permitted to employ as many apprentices as the Joint Apprenticeship Committee determines, and that the employer shall employ one apprentice for each 10 journeymen bricklayers on his payroll unless there were no apprentices indentured to the Joint Apprenticeship Committee unemployed, or unless there were no apprentices unemployed.

The apprenticeship program, binding upon the employers by the above agreement, was based on a further agreement referred to as "Bricklayers' Apprenticeship Committee Standards." Thus, the joint apprenticeship committee consisted of five members each from the "Association" and from the "Union." Said standards further set forth that the committee and the apprentice coordinator had certain duties, including the following:

[2] The facts are based on the pleadings and admissions therein, unless otherwise indicated.

[3] The facts establish that Chadwick is also business manager of Bricklayers and Masons Union, Local No. 2, International Union Bricklayers and Allied Craftsmen, AFL-CIO (herein sometimes called Respondent Local 2).

[4] The facts relating to the union-employer relationship and to the events of March 12-14, 1980, are based on a composite of exhibits, stipulations, and credited testimony of all witnesses. Where testimony of any witness is inconsistent with the facts found, it is discredited as specifically indicated or upon a consideration of logical consistency of all of the facts.

ARTICLE III

Duties of the Committee and the Apprentice Coordinator

> To survey and determine the need for bricklaying and stone masonry apprentices in the Detroit Metropolitan Area, along with potential and existing employment opportunities affording on-the-job training opportunities, as well as need for school training facilities, with a view to practical correlation of these factors.
> To establish training objectives with respect to both in-school and on-the-job training of bricklaying and stonemasonry apprentices; and to develop and maintain a school curriculum, and to scrutinize instructional processes on the job and in the school in such a way as to determine that established training objectives are realized.
> To place apprentices under agreement to a contractor and to the Committee and to supervise the employment and on-the-job training of bricklaying and stonemasonry apprentices in order to insure that they are afforded reasonably continuous employment and such diversity of work in the various phases of the trade as may be possible.
> * * * * *

The 1977-80 collective-bargaining agreement supra, contained a listing of employers who were members of the Detroit Mason Contractors' Association. Such listing revealed that Monte Costella & Co. was a member of said Association. Such listing does not reveal MacFarlane & Hays Co. to be a member of the Detroit Mason Contractors' Association. Considering statements by counsel at the hearing relating to the introduction into evidence of the collective-bargaining agreement, the sense of testimony of Brewer, superintendent for MacFarlane & Hays Co., as regards conversations with President Chadwick of Local 2, and the positions taken by the parties in their respective briefs, it appears to be without dispute and clear that at least MacFarlane & Hays Co. had agreed, impliedly or otherwise, to operate in the Detroit area in accordance with such agreement.

C. The Constitution; "Runaway Apprentice"

The constitution of the International Union of Bricklayers and Allied Craftsmen, AFL-CIO, had the following provision:

ARTICLE V

> F. An apprentice shall serve his complete term of apprenticeship as provided by the Joint Committee. Any apprentice who leaves employment covered by the terms of any affiliate's collective bargaining agreement without the approval of the Joint Committee, or violates the rules and regulations established by the Joint Committee, shall be subject to discipline by the Local Union, pursuant to the Code of Trials and Appeals promulgated under Article XVI, Section E. If any apprentice refuses to return to work for an employer as assigned or approved by the Joint Committee and accepts employment in any other job or work classification covered in any affiliate's agreement, his Local Union shall forward his name to the International Union on its Monthly Report form and he shall be listed on the IU's records as a "Runaway Apprentice."

Chadwick, Respondent Local 2's president, testified credibly to the effect that the constitution for Local 2 contained a similar provision relating to "Runaway Apprentice."

D. Implementation of the Apprentice Program

Donald LeMarbe credibly testified that he served as apprentice coordinator for the Detroit Metropolitan Joint Apprenticeship Committee and Training Program. His credited testimony and the facts as a whole reveal that he implemented said program, excepting as indicated later herein, in accordance with the guidelines of the "Bricklayers' Apprenticeship Committee Standards." Thus, agreements were made whereby certain employers sponsored apprentices, and the apprentices were indentured to said employers. In addition to supervising and checking on the training of apprentices, LeMarbe had the duty to secure new sponsors if needed or to aid in securing employment on a temporary basis for apprentices if the sponsoring employer was temporarily out of work for the apprentices. It is noted that the sponsoring letter approved by the apprentice committee for a bricklayer apprentice (to be completed by sponsoring company) sets forth in such letter a statement whereby said sponsoring company asserted, "If we should run out of work, we will notify your committee at once, and request he be placed with another contractor temporarily."

As indicated, LeMarbe generally carried out his duties in accordance with the guidelines of the "Bricklayers' Apprenticeship Committee Standards." The exception to such standards appears to lie in the fact that he construed that the business agents for the several locals had prerogatives. President Chadwick of Local 2 apparently had been a business agent in the past. LeMarbe, in his testimony, revealed that he construed Chadwick to have prerogatives. Despite the fact that LeMarbe construed that the business agents or President Chadwick had prerogatives concerning the apprentice program, Respondent Local 2, by President Chadwick, was the only local union which asserted such prerogatives.

Respondent Local 2's or President Chadwick's prerogative may be said to have been as follows: Apprentices could not work on firebrick unless working for their sponsoring employer. In such regard, it is clear that Chadwick, acting for Local 2, despite his status as a trustee on the joint apprenticeship committee, disregarded the guidelines set forth for said apprentice training program.[5]

E. Jerome Ferretti's Background, Employment, and Termination

This proceeding involves the issue of whether Respondent Local 2 attempted to cause or caused the termination of Jerome Ferretti, an apprentice bricklayer, by MacFarlane & Hays Co. on March 12 and 14, 1980.

Jerome Ferretti is the son of Emmit Ferretti, the business agent for Local 35, International Union of Bricklayers and Allied Craftsmen, AFL-CIO, one of the four locals composing the Metropolitan Detroit Bricklayers District Council, International Union of Bricklayers and Allied Craftsmen, AFL-CIO. As noted, Respondent Local 2 is also one of the four locals composing such Council.

Jerome Ferretti, in the spring of 1979, had worked as a laborer for MacFarlane & Hays Co. At such time Sam Brewer, who later became a superintendent for MacFarlane & Hays Co., was working as a bricklayer. Brewer was a member of Local 35, International Union of Bricklayers and Allied Craftsmen, AFL-CIO.

It appears that Jerome Ferretti was either a member of or became a member of Local 35, International Union of Bricklayers and Allied Craftsmen, AFL-CIO, in August or September 1979. In any event, Jerome Ferretti filed an application with Local 35 to become an apprentice, later was interviewed by members of or the committee composing the Detroit Metropolitan Masonry J.A.T.C. Bricklayers' Apprenticeship Committee and was accepted as an apprentice for training.

Thus, on or about September 18, 1979, Jerome Ferretti commenced an apprenticeship as a bricklayer. Around such time, Jerome Ferretti signed an apprenticeship agreement with the Detroit Metropolitan Masonry J.A.T.C. Bricklayers' Apprenticeship Committee. It further appears that Jerome Ferretti commenced working at such time for Monte Costella & Co., a member of the Detroit Mason Contractors' Association. On September 24, 1979, Paul VilleMonte, vice president of Monte Costella & Co., executed a letter, approved by the referred to Joint Apprenticeship Committee, reflecting that said employer was sponsoring Jerome Ferretti as an apprentice and that his starting date as an apprentice was on September 18, 1979.

Jerome Ferretti worked for Monte Costella & Co. from around September 18, 1979, until around or sometime in January 1980. At such time around or in January 1980, Monte Costella & Co. laid Jerome Ferretti off from work. Said employer indicated to Ferretti that it would probably call him back to work later but to find other employment in the meantime if he could.

It is noted that at some point of time between September 18, 1979, and January 1980, Monte Costella & Co. performed work and employed Jerome Ferretti within the geographical jurisdiction of Local 2. Consistent with Local 2's and Chadwick's policy that an apprentice could work for a sponsoring employer, no problems ensued with Local 2.

At some point of time in January 1980 Jerome Ferretti telephoned Sam Brewer and asked if there were any work for bricklayers.[6] The record does not reveal whether or not Brewer made a reply or what such reply was if made. In January 1980, Brewer was a bricklayer and not a supervisor. He may or may not have known of an oncoming job to be performed by MacFarlane & Hays Co. at the Ford Rouge plant or of his oncoming status as superintendent on such oncoming job.

In any event, in February 1980, apparently around February 15, 1980, MacFarlane & Hays Co. made Brewer a superintendent, over bricklayers, for a job at the Ford Rouge plant. This job may be described as a "firebrick" job (concerning a furnace).

Around March 12, 1980, MacFarlane & Hays Co.[7] had 15 to 20 journeymen bricklayers assigned to work at the Ford Rouge plant. Michael DeBerry, a member of Local 2, was the bricklayer foreman. Dennis Bouchard, a member of Local 2, was the steward on the MacFarlane Ford Rouge plant job.

All of the 15 to 20 journeymen bricklayers had previously been employed by MacFarlane; three-fourths of such bricklayers were members of Local 2. The rest were members of Local 35. Most of the journeymen bricklayers worked on a steady basis for MacFarlane. After the MacFarlane Ford Rouge plant job had been reported to the Union and Bouchard appointed as steward by the Union and hired, other employees had been hired by MacFarlane by usage of telephone calls.

After Bouchard had been appointed steward, Foreman DeBerry had told him the day before he hired bricklayers that he was doing so.

On March 12, 1980, before 8:30 a.m., MacFarlane needed to hire some more bricklayers.[8] At such time Superintendent Brewer discussed such need with Foreman DeBerry. Brewer apparently remembered Jerome Ferretti's inquiry about work and suggested to Foreman DeBerry that he hire Ferretti because he had formerly worked as a laborer for MacFarlane. Foreman DeBerry agreed to hire Ferretti. Superintendent Brewer telephoned Emmit Ferretti, Jerome's father and business agent for Local 35. Brewer inquired as to whether Jerome Ferretti was still unemployed. Emmit Ferretti told Brewer that Jerome Ferretti was still unemployed, that Brewer should check with LeMarbe of the joint apprenticeship committee.

On March 12, 1980, around 8:30 a.m., Superintendent Brewer telephoned LeMarbe, apprentice coordinator for the joint apprenticeship committee. Brewer explained that Jerome Ferretti had worked as a laborer for MacFarlane, was unemployed, and that MacFarlane would like to hire Jerome Ferretti. LeMarbe agreed that MacFarlane could hire Jerome Ferretti with the understanding that when his sponsoring employer called him back to work that he would be released to return to such employer.

[5] As later found, Respondent Local 2 violated Sec. 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) by attempting to cause and causing the termination of employment of apprentice Ferretti. If Local 2's disregard of the guidelines of the apprentice program jeopardizes the governmental sanction of said program, it is believed that compliance with the remedial order provided in this case will be sufficient to correct the cause for such jeopardy.

[6] At some point of time, either in the spring of 1979 or around August 1979, Brewer had learned of Jerome Ferretti's intentions to become a bricklayer apprentice and had promised to help him if he could.

[7] MacFarlane & Hays Co. sometimes hereinafter simply referred to as MacFarlane.

[8] The job involved consisted of "firebrick" work.

Thereafter, Foreman DeBerry telephoned Jerome Ferretti, hired him, and told him to report to work. Following this, Jerome Ferretti reported to work on March 12, 1980, around 10 a.m., at the MacFarlane Ford Rouge plant jobsite. Ferretti reported to work as an apprentice bricklayer.

It is noted that steward Bouchard credibly testified that the foreman told him the day before when bricklayers were going to be hired. His testimony and the overall evidence do not indicate that the foreman told him of the names of the bricklayers who were going to be hired. A composite of all of the credited testimony reveals that Respondent hired bricklayers, notified the steward that bricklayers were being hired, and Bouchard checked out the individuals when hired.

On March 12, 1980, around 10 a.m., Bouchard saw Jerome Ferretti appear on the MacFarlane Ford Rouge plant job with Superintendent Brewer and Foreman DeBerry. Bouchard saw Jerome Ferretti go into the furnace room. Bouchard then followed Ferretti into the furnace room. Bouchard introduced himself to Jerome Ferretti and told him that he was the steward on the job. During the conversation it is clear that Jerome Ferretti also told Bouchard his name. Bouchard asked Ferretti to accompany him to the shanty so that he could get him signed up. At the shanty, Bouchard asked Ferretti to show him his union book. Ferretti told Bouchard that he did not have his book with him. Bouchard asked Ferretti if he were an apprentice and Bouchard said he was. Bouchard asked Ferretti how long he had been in the trade and learned that Ferretti had been in the (bricklayers) trade for 6 months. Bouchard also ascertained that Ferretti was a member of Local 35.[9] Bouchard knew that Emmit Ferretti was the business agent for Local 35 and recognized the name.

Bouchard told Jerome Ferretti that he had to call Chadwick, president and business manager of Local 2, that he wanted to make sure that it was all right for him to work on the job. At the time Bouchard was not sure that apprentices would be allowed to work on the job, a firebrick job, because he knew that Chadwick had a policy of not wanting apprentices working on firebrick unless they had a couple of years in the trade.

At this time Bouchard telephoned Local 2's office, spoke to Business Agent James McNeilly and asked if Jerry Ferretti, the apprentice, could work on the MacFarlane Ford Rouge plant (firebrick) job. McNeilly said that he would check, left the telephone briefly, returned, and stated, "We don't want any apprentices working on fire brick."

Bouchard told Jerome Ferretti that he could not allow the employer to hire him, that he would have to go home, that "We weren't gonna put any apprentices on the job." Ferretti appeared disappointed, and Bouchard apologized to him for what had transpired.

Bouchard then spoke to Superintendent Brewer. Bouchard told Brewer in effect that there could not be any apprentices on the job. Bouchard also told Foreman DeBerry that there could not be any apprentices on firebrick because the Union was not putting apprentices on firebrick at the present time who had less than 2-1/2 years in the trade. Bouchard also told DeBerry that Ferretti was entitled to 2 hours' "show up time." Apparently Bouchard returned to Ferretti and told him about his "show up" time. At such point in time Jerome Ferretti left the jobsite.

On March 12, 1980, shortly after Bouchard had telephoned Local 2's office and inquired as to whether Jerome Ferretti, the apprentice, could be employed on the Ford Rouge plant job, President Chadwick telephoned Francis Costella of Monte Costella & Co. Chadwick asked why Jerome Ferretti was not working. Costella told Chadwick that Jerome Ferretti had been temporarily laid off. Chadwick asked Costella, as a favor, to call Ferretti back to work. Costella told Chadwick that he would do so as soon as he could.[10]

On March 12, 1980, Chadwick also contacted Robert Conway, chairman of the District Council, and told him that Jerome Ferretti was on the MacFarlane Ford Rouge plant job, that Ferretti was an apprentice sponsored by Monte Costella, and that Local 2 did not intend to let him work on the job. Chadwick asked Conway to call MacFarlane and tell them that if they wanted to sponsor an apprentice bricklayer that he (Chadwick) would be willing to have the apprentice committee take the apprentice who had been out of work the longest and have such apprentice responsored by MacFarlane, and, if so, let MacFarlane employ such apprentice.

DeBerry credibly testified to the effect that either he telephoned Chadwick or Chadwick telephoned him sometime after 11:30 a.m. In such conversation Chadwick told DeBerry that he wanted to clarify that if the employer wanted apprentices that it had to go through proper channels, that there were apprentices who had been off from work longer than Ferretti.

DeBerry's testimony was of such a nature that it did not appear to reliably reveal the conversation between him and Chadwick in total effect. Considering the totality of the facts and consistency thereof, I find it proper to infer that Chadwick conveyed the same message to DeBerry as he conveyed to Conway for relation to MacFarlane.

On March 12, 1980, around 5 to 5:30 p.m., Superintendent Brewer telephoned Jerome Ferretti and asked Ferretti why he had left the jobsite. Jerome Ferretti told Brewer that he had done so because he had been advised by union steward Bouchard to leave. Brewer told Ferretti that there must be some misunderstanding, that he was going to call Ferretti's father, the business agent for the local[11] Brewer belonged to and make sure that he was abiding by union regulations. Brewer then telephoned Emmit Ferretti and explained what had occurred. Emmit Ferretti told Brewer that he was justified in having Jerome Ferretti on the job.

[9] All of the locals referred to herein are locals of the same International and a part of the Bricklayers District Council previously referred to.

[10] Apparently referring to when work picked up.

[11] Local 35.

On March 13, 1980, Jerome Ferretti reported to work at 8 a.m. at the MacFarlane Ford Rouge plant jobsite. Ferretti worked the entire shift on March 13, 1980.

Apparently on March 13, 1980, shortly after 8 a.m., steward Bouchard saw Jerome Ferretti at the Ford Rouge plant jobsite. Bouchard went to the office, spoke to Superintendent Brewer, and asked why Ferretti was back on the job. Brewer told Bouchard that he had telephoned Ferretti's father and cleared the matter with him. Bouchard told Superintendent Brewer that he had to call Chadwick to make sure that everything was all right. Bouchard telephoned Local 2's office and spoke to President Chadwick. Bouchard asked if it were all right for "the apprentice" to come on the job, and if the matter was all straightened out. Chadwick told Bouchard to let him talk to Superintendent Brewer. Bouchard turned the telephone over to Brewer. Bouchard heard at least one end of the conversation between Brewer and Chadwick. Bouchard believed that everything was straightened out, that Jerome Ferretti could go to work. Bouchard returned to his duties. Ferretti either continued to work in the furnace or returned to work in the furnace.

The conversation between Chadwick and Brewer was to the following effect. President Chadwick told Brewer that Jerome Ferretti could not work on the job because of "the agreement that apprentices with less than one year experience in the trade could not work on a fire brick job." Brewer told Chadwick that he had never heard of such an agreement. President Chadwick told Brewer that he would shut the job down if the apprentice was not removed. During the conversation Brewer told Chadwick that he had received permission from LeMarbe (apprentice coordinator on the Joint Apprenticeship Committee) to hire Ferretti.

At some point of time on March 13, 1980, Conway, the District Council chairman, reported back to Chadwick that MacFarlane did not want to sponsor an apprentice.

On March 14, 1980, Jerome Ferretti again reported to work at the MacFarlane Ford Rouge plant job at 8 a.m. He worked thereafter without incident until around 1 p.m.

Around 1 p.m., President Chadwick telephoned Superintendent Brewer and informed of MacFarlane. Chadwick asked Brewer again if he were going to remove the apprentice from the jobsite. Brewer told Chadwick that he had no reason to dismiss the man (Jerome Ferretti). Brewer told Chadwick that if he (Chadwick) wanted him off the job, he (Chadwick) would have to remove him. Chadwick told Brewer that he was going to call the bricklayers off the job. Brewer told Chadwick that he (Chadwick) knew more about union business than he did, that if this was what he thought was right, he should do it. Chadwick then asked to speak to steward Bouchard. Brewer made arrangements for Bouchard to use the telephone.

When Bouchard spoke on the telephone, the party that he spoke to first was Business Agent McNeilly. McNeilly told Bouchard that there was no way that apprentices were supposed to work on the Ford Rouge plant job. Bouchard then spoke to Chadwick. Chadwick told Bouchard that he had spoken to Monte Costella, that Jerome Ferretti was sponsored by Monte Costella, that Ferretti was going to go back to work with Monte Costella, and that, as far as he was concerned, Jerome Ferretti was a runaway apprentice and that any journeyman that worked with Ferretti was subject to disciplinary action. Bouchard asked if he should pull the men off the job. Chadwick stated that he did not want the men working with Ferretti because they were subject to fine because, as far as he was concerned, Ferretti was a runaway apprentice and was not in the Union. After the telephone call concluded, Bouchard told Brewer that Chadwick had told him to call the bricklayers off the job. Bouchard returned to the furnace where the bricklayers were working and indicated to each that he wanted them to get their tools and go to the bricklayers shanty. The bricklayers did so.

In the shanty Bouchard told the bricklayers that Jerome Ferretti was a runaway apprentice and that his dues were not paid up, that the bricklayers were not to work with him on the job. Chapman, a bricklayer, asked Bouchard who said this, and Bouchard replied that this was what President Chadwick had told him. Chapman asked Ferretti if he had a card. Ferretti said that he had his dues paid up and showed a receipt to such effect. Bouchard remarked that this was fine but that he was still a runaway apprentice in the eyes of Chadwick.

Following the above, Jerome Ferretti and Bouchard went to Superintendent Brewer's office. Brewer telephoned LeMarbe.[12] Brewer asked LeMarbe if anything could be done. LeMarbe in effect told Brewer that Jerome Ferretti would have to leave the jobsite, that he would take responsibility for Ferretti's leaving,[13] and that if anything came of this problem that "they" could have his job. Brewer told LeMarbe that he would remove Jerome Ferretti from the job and that he hoped that this would not harm Ferretti's future as a bricklayer apprentice. Apparently, Jerome Ferretti asked to speak to LeMarbe on the telephone at that time and was allowed to do so. LeMarbe told Jerome Ferretti that there was nothing that could be done on his part, that the unions had to work it out. LeMarbe told Jerome Ferretti that the best thing he could do was to leave the jobsite.

Jerome Ferretti then telephoned President Chadwick at Local 2's office. Ferretti asked if there were anything that could be done to clear the matter up. Chadwick told Jerome Ferretti that there was nothing to be cleared up, that no apprentice was going to work firebrick in his area because he had too many men out of work in his local.

Following the above, MacFarlane & Hays Co. prepared Jerome Ferretti's pay, gave him his check, and thereby in effect terminated him. Ferretti then left the jobsite. The bricklayers then went back to work.

[12] Brewer testified to the effect that he received a telephone call from LeMarbe. Ferretti testified that Brewer telephoned LeMarbe. Bouchard testified that he thought a telephone call was made to LeMarbe. Although a close question exists and a different finding would not affect the overall results, considering the logical consistency of facts, I credit Ferretti's testimony that Brewer made the telephone call to LeMarbe. I discredit testimony inconsistent with the facts found.

[13] Apparently referring to problems with either Chadwick or Emmit Ferretti. It is clear that LeMarbe viewed himself in the middle of a possible conflict between two union leaders.

F. Miscellaneous

In addition to the foregoing facts, evidence was adduced to reveal that apprentices had a different status as members in the Union than did journeymen, that apprentices were allowed to vote with respect to establishment of dues but not as to the election of officers.

Chadwick also credibly testified to the effect that he did not consider that firebrick work was the type of work for an apprentice to learn how to be a bricklayer. I do not credit, however, his testimony to the effect that his refusal to allow apprentices to perform firebrick work for nonsponsoring employers was based on his belief that such work was not valuable as learning type work. It is obvious that on many occasions apprentices simply need to work as a matter of economic survival. Further. Chadwick's attitude as to allowing an apprentice to do firebrick work for a sponsoring employer and not as to nonsponsoring employers is somewhat inconsistent as regards the academic idea of learning.[14]

The facts reveal that Respondent Local 2 prohibited apprentices, even those who were members of Local 2 or related to officials or agents of Local 2, from working on "fire brick" jobs for employers who were not the sponsors of the apprentices.

The facts clearly reveal that either journeymen or apprentices can perform "fire brick" work and that Local 2's actions by Chadwick were not motivated because of lack of skill or ability by apprentices to perform firebrick work.

G. Contentions and Conclusions

The General Counsel contends that Respondent, by Chadwick, attempted to cause and did cause the discriminatory removal from employment of Jerome Ferretti by MacFarlane & Hays Co., that Respondent's motivation for such action was based on a consideration of Ferretti's membership status and upon arbitrary and capricious reasons, and that such conduct was violative of Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act. Respondent contends that its actions were not based on consideration of Ferretti's lack of status in Local 2, arbitrary and capricious reasons.

Considering all of the facts, I find merit in the General Counsel's contentions that Respondent attempted to cause and did cause the discriminatory removal of Ferretti from employment on March 12 and 14, 1980. The facts overwhelmingly reveal that Respondent Local 2, by statements by Chadwick and by statements by Bouchard, attempted to cause and did cause the removal of Jerome Ferretti from employment by MacFarlane & Hays Co. on March 12, 1980, and by statements by Chadwick on March 13, 1980, attempted to cause the removal of Jerome Ferretti from employment by MacFarlane & Hays Co., and by statements by Chadwick and Bouchard, and by action by Bouchard directed to bricklayers on the job, attempted to cause and did cause the removal from employment of Jerome Ferretti by MacFarlane & Hays Co. on March 14, 1980. The facts are overwhelming that Respondent Local 2's actions were because Jerome Ferretti had the status of an apprentice member rather than the status of a journeyman member of the Union, and that the said difference in membership status in the Union had no realistic bearing on the ability of Ferretti to perform the work, firebrick work, to which he was assigned. It is clear that Respondent Local 2, by Chadwick (because of his desire to prevent apprentices being hired or used for firebrick work, excepting for sponsoring employers), placed Jerome Ferretti into a status of member out of favor with the Union and one for which other members were told that they were subject to charges and potential fines if they worked with such member. Respondent Local 2 accomplished this by Chadwick's designating Jerome Ferretti as a runaway apprentice member within the meaning of the Union's constitution. It is clear from a reading of the relevant constitutional provisions, the collective-bargaining agreement, and the evidence relating to the apprentice program that Jerome Ferretti was not a runaway apprentice member. Respondent Local 2's actions, by Chadwick, of designating Jerome Ferretti as a runaway apprentice clearly constituted arbitrary and capricious conduct. It is not necessary to reach such determination however. The overall facts clearly reveal that Respondent's actions were based on discriminatory considerations that Jerome Ferretti lacked good-standing status in the Union as compared to good-standing status of journeymen members.[15] By such conduct Respondent Local 2 clearly attempted to cause and did cause the removal of Jerome Ferretti from employment on March 12 and 14, 1980, and did attempt to cause his removal on March 13, 1980. Such conduct is clearly violative of Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act. It is so concluded and found.

IV. THE EFFECT OF THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES UPON COMMERCE

The activities of Respondent set forth in section III, above, occurring in connection with Respondent's operations described in section I, above, have a close, intimate, and substantial relationship to trade, traffic, and commerce among the several States and tend to lead to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow of commerce.

[14] In any event, it is not really necessary to determine whether Chadwick was motivated in his attitude toward use of apprentices because he sought to further work opportunities for those who could vote for his reelection, or because he believed apprentices should only work on meaningful learning jobs. The ultimate facts reveal that Chadwick construed that Ferretti was a "runaway" apprentice, construed that such "runaway apprentice" was a person out of favor with the Union, characterized Ferretti as such, and caused the bricklayers to cease working with Ferretti because of this "out of favor" union status.

[15] I am not persuaded that the evidence is sufficient to reveal that Chadwick was motivated in his attitude toward apprentices by the fact that they could not vote in elections concerning officers. Rather, I am persuaded he simply wanted full-time journeymen members to be employed, and if there were a conflict that journeymen members should prevail over apprentice members.

V. THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices, it will be recommended that Respondent cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action to effectuate the policies of the Act.

It having been found that Respondent caused MacFarlane & Hays Co. to discharge Jerome Ferretti, in violation of Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act, the recommended Order will provide that Respondent will notify MacFarlane & Hays Co. and Jerome Ferretti that it no longer objects to Jerome Ferretti's employment with the employer. Second, Respondent will be required to affirmatively request MacFarlane & Hays Co. to employ Jerome Ferretti. Finally, Respondent will be required to make Jerome Ferretti whole[16] for all losses of wages and benefits suffered by him as a result of its discrimination against him until he is either employed by MacFarlane & Hays Co. in his former or substantially equivalent position or until he obtains substantially equivalent employment elsewhere.

Because of the character of the unfair labor practices herein found, the recommenced Order will provide that Respondent cease and desist from in any other manner restraining and coercing employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed by Section 7 of the Act.

Upon the basis of the above findings of fact and upon the entire record in the case, I make the following:

Conclusions of Law

1. MacFarlane & Hays Co. is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. Bricklayers and Masons Union, Local No. 2, International Union Bricklayers and Allied Craftsmen, AFL-CIO, Respondent, is, and has been at all times material herein, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. By causing or attempting to cause MacFarlane & Hays Co. to terminate the employment of Jerome Ferretti, Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(b)(1)(A) and (2) of the Act.

4. The aforesaid unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact, conclusions of law, and the entire record, and pursuant to Section 10(c) of the Act, I hereby issue the following recommended:

ORDER[17]

The Respondent, Bricklayers and Masons Union, Local No. 2, International Union Bricklayers and Allied Craftsmen, AFL-CIO, its officers, agents, and representatives, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Causing or attempting to cause MacFarlane & Hays Co. to discriminate against employees in regard to hire or tenure of employment, or any term or condition of employment because of their union status or protected concerted activities.

(b) In any other manner restraining or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act except to the extent that such rights may be affected by lawful agreements in accord with Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action which it is found will effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Make Jerome Ferretti whole for any loss of wages and benefits suffered by reason of the discrimination against him on March 12, 1980, and from the date of his discharge to the date of his reemployment by MacFarlane & Hays Co. to his former or substantially equivalent job or to the date he secures substantially equivalent employment with some other employer, less his net earnings during this period. The loss of earnings shall be computed in the manner prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Company, 90 NLRB 289 (1950), with interest on the backpay due computed in accordance with Board policy set out in Isis Plumbing & Heating Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962), and Florida Steel Corporation, 231 NLRB 651 (1977).

(b) Notify MacFarlane & Hays Co. and Jerome Ferretti that it no longer objects to the employment of Jerome Ferretti by MacFarlane & Hays Co., and that it requests that said Company employ Jerome Ferretti.

(c) Post at Respondent's business offices copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[18] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 7, after being duly signed by Respondent's representatives, shall be posted by it immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by Respondent for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(d) Notify the Regional Director for Region 7, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps Respondent has taken to comply herewith.

[16] Respondent will make Ferretti whole for any loss of earnings within the meaning and in accord with the Board's decisions in F. W. Woolworth Company, 90 NLRB 289 (1950); Isis Plumbing & Heating Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962), except as specifically modified by the wording of such recommended Order. Specifically, Ferretti's loss of work on March 12, 1980, and loss of work on and after March 14, 1980, is included in the period of discrimination for which he is to be made whole. The fact that he later returned to work as an apprentice for Monte Costella is a matter for consideration in compliance.

[17] In the event no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Rules and Regulations of the National Labor Relations Board, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order herein shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules and Regulations, be adopted by the Board and become its findings, conclusions, and Order, and all objections thereto shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES AND MEMBERS
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

WE WILL NOT cause or attempt to cause MacFarlane & Hays Co. to discriminate against Jerome Ferretti or any other employee in violation of Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner restrain or coerce employees of MacFarlane & Hays Co. in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act, except to the extent that such rights may be affected by an agreement requiring membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment as authorized by Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

WE WILL notify MacFarlane & Hays Co. and Jerome Ferretti that we do not object to the employment of Jerome Ferretti by MacFarlane & Hays Co., and that we request that Jerome Ferretti be employed.

WE WILL make Jerome Ferretti whole, with interest, for any loss of wages and benefits suffered by reason of the discrimination against him on March 12, 1980, and from the date of his discharge to the date of his reinstatement by MacFarlane & Hays Co. to his former or substantially equivalent job or to the date that he secures employment with some other employer substantially equal to that which he formerly had with MacFarlane & Hays Co.

BRICKLAYERS AND MASONS UNION, LOCAL
NO. 2, INTERNATIONAL UNION BRICKLAYERS AND ALLIED CRAFTSMEN, AFL-CIO

Aunt Millie's Sauces, Inc. and Aunt Millie's Sauces Division of Specialty Brands, Inc. and United Food and Commercial Workers Union, Local 464A, United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, AFL-CIO, CLC, Petitioner. Case 2-RC-18899

November 16, 1981

DECISION ON REVIEW AND CERTIFICATION OF RESULTS OF ELECTION

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS AND ZIMMERMAN

On May 7, 1981,[1] the Acting Regional Director for Region 2 issued his Supplemental Decision and Direction of Second Election in the above-entitled proceeding, in which he sustained Petitioner's Objections 1 and 3, set aside the election held on March 4,[2] and directed a second election. Thereafter, pursuant to the National Labor Relations Board Rules and Regulations, Series 8, as amended, the Employer filed a timely request for review in which it contended that a substantial question of law or policy is raised because of the absence of, or a departure from, officially reported Board precedent.

By mailgram dated June 10, the National Labor Relations Board granted the Employer's request for review[3] and stayed a second election pending decision on review. Neither party submitted a brief on review.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the entire record in this case with regard to the issues under review and makes the following findings:

On January 12, Specialty Brands, Inc., agreed to purchase Aunt Millie's Sauces, Inc. On February 13, these companies entered into a contract of sale, with closing set for February 27, less than a week before the March 4 election in this proceeding. On February 17, Specialty Brands advised the Aunt Millie's employees of the pending sale, gave each employee a formal written offer of employment with Specialty Brands, and advised these employees that they would be given wages and benefits in accordance with the standards and job classifications established and utilized by Specialty Brands throughout its corporatewide operations. On March 2, Aunt Millie's Sauces Division of Specialty Brands, Inc., commenced operation with the new—and generally better—wages and benefits in effect.

In sustaining Objection 1,[4] the Acting Regional Director found that Specialty Brands had interfered with the free exercise of employee voting rights when, on February 17, 2 weeks before the election, it announced to employees of Aunt Millie's its proposed wage and benefits package as the terms under which it sought their application for employment. The Acting Regional Director found that Specialty Brands had failed to provide a valid business reason for announcing the new wage and benefits package when it did and that such failure made it "reasonable to assume that the announcement was timed to influence the employees in their choice of bargaining representative." The Employer contends that its conduct was not objectionable under well-established Board precedent, noting that the purpose of the wage and benefit changes announced at the time of the offers of employment was to bring the Aunt Millie's employees into line with the wages and benefits in effect at Specialty Brands' facilities everywhere else; that similar offers were made to nonunit employees; that the offers were in no way excessive; that the Union was not mentioned at the time the offers were made; and that the offers were implemented at the outset of Specialty Brands' takeover as part of a more general overhaul of Aunt Millie's entire business. We find merit in the Employer's contentions and agree that it is unreasonable to presume that the announcement of wage and benefit changes, which was clearly timed to the Employer's takeover schedule and conditioned upon acceptance of the Employer's offer of employment, was intended to influence the employees in their choice of bargaining representative.

Contrary to the Acting Regional Director, we find that there was a valid business reason for the initial terms of employment which the Employer selected here. Thus, the facts before us clearly show that the Employer's announced plan to conform wages and benefits at its Aunt Millie's facility with the existing arrangements at its other operations is consistent with normal business practices. This conclusion is further buttressed by the Employer having scheduled implementation of the wage and benefit adjustments in strict accordance with its purchase time table; and, although that implementation occurred 2 days prior to the election, there is no evidence that such implementation was for any unlawful purpose. Indeed, there was no mention of the Union or of the pending election at the time the initial terms of employment were announced. Nor was there any evidence that the Employer was influenced in its action by the pendency of the question concerning representation, or that the Employer acted in any way inconsistent with usual practices during the acquisition of Aunt Millie's.[5] Accordingly, we overrule Objection 1.[6]

[2] The tally of ballots showed that, of approximately 31 eligible voters, 32 ballots were cast, of which 12 were for, and 16 against, Petitioner and 4 ballots were challenged. The challenges were insufficient in number to affect the results of the election.

[3] In granting review, the Board implicitly denied Employer's alternative request for a hearing on the Employer's purpose in making the wage offer discussed below.

[4] Objection 1 alleged: "During the critical period, the employer on numerous occasions unlawfully promised wage increases, implying that if the Union was voted in there would be no raise, or for the purpose of discouraging employees from voting for Petitioner."

In sustaining Objection 3,[7] the Acting Regional Director considered the comments of Specialty Brands' executive, Bob Mech, who had described the collective-bargaining process and admittedly used the phrase "bargaining starts from scratch," in the general context of the above-discussed February 17 announcement of future benefits. As we have overruled Objection 1, we have eliminated the basis upon which the Acting Regional Director concluded that the phrase as used here carried with it the seed of a threat. Moreover, the Employer's election bulletin correctly stated the law as to "The Facts About Collective Bargaining." Accordingly, we overrule Objection 3.[8] As we have overruled Petitioner's objections and, since Petitioner did not receive a majority of the valid votes, we shall certify the results of the election held on March 4.

CERTIFICATION OF RESULTS OF ELECTION

It is hereby certified that a majority of the valid ballots have not been cast for United Food and Commercial Workers Union, Local 464A, United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, AFL-CIO, CLC, and that said labor organization is not the exclusive representative of all the employees in the unit herein involved, within the meaning of Section 9(a) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended.

Montgomery Ward & Co., Incorporated and Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers Local No. 542 of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, Petitioner. Case 21-RC-16651

DECISION ON REVIEW AND DIRECTION OF ELECTION

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On March 25, 1981, the Regional Director for Region 21 issued a Decision and Direction of Election in the above-entitled proceeding in which he found appropriate a unit of various warehouse and other clerical employees[1] at the Employer's Big Ticket Distribution Center located in El Cajon, California. Thereafter, in accordance with Section 102.67 of the National Labor Relations Board Rules and Regulations, Series 8, as amended, the Employer filed a timely request for review of the Regional Director's decision on the ground, inter alia, that he departed from officially reported precedent by excluding the sales and maintenance employees from the unit sought.

By telegraphic order dated April 23, 1981, the request for review was granted.[2] Neither party submitted a brief on review, but the Petitioner filed a brief in opposition to the Employer's request for review.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record in this case, including the brief in opposition to the request for review, and makes the following findings:

The Employer is an Illinois corporation engaged in the business of the retail sale of general merchandise throughout the United States. Employer's Big Ticket Distribution Center, involved herein, is comprised of a warehouse area, a repair service center, and a credit service department. Additionally, the facility contains two bargain sales areas, a furniture repair area, and personnel and merchandise offices.

The Petitioner currently represents the general warehousemen and merchandise prep warehouse employees at the distribution center. These employees, who perform traditional warehouse functions, are supervised by the warehouse manager. In the instant proceeding, the Petitioner sought a unit of all warehouse clerical employees. Included among the employees sought by the Petitioner are unit stock control clerks who take calls from the Employer's four San Diego stores serviced by the distribution center, and who record all merchandise in the distribution center on stock status cards. Additionally, they write purchase orders on merchandise shipped out of the distribution center and handle delivery sales checks. The invoice records clerk maintains the Employer's book inventory and is responsible for registering freight and damage claims as well as invoices. The trucking and delivery clericals enter sales check information on trip sheets for merchandise delivery to customers. The merchandise prep clerical takes calls from customers requesting the repair of merchandise and schedules merchandise repair by the outside prep employee. The PBX operators handle all incoming calls to the distribution center. All the employees sought by the Petitioner report to the warehouse manager.

The Employer, contrary to the Petitioner, would have included in the unit all of the remaining warehouse operations employees who report to the warehouse manager, including the two personnel office employees, the four salespersons, and the two maintenance employees. The Regional Director included the personnel office clericals but, as indicated, excluded the salespersons and maintenance employees.[3]

The unit found by the Regional Director is comprised of various classifications of employees performing clerical and other support functions related to warehouse operations. The Regional Director's exclusion of the salespersons and maintenance employees was based on his finding that they lacked a community of interest with the other unrepresented warehouse employees. We disagree.

The salespersons are inside rather than outside salespersons. They report to the warehouse manager and are physically located in the two bargain sales areas of the distribution center where discontinued or damaged merchandise is sold at retail. Sales checks generated by the salespersons necessarily flow to clerical personnel included in the unit. Further, if a customer requests delivery, the salespersons will take the sales check to the deliv-

[1] The unit was described as: All warehouse clerical employees, including all truck and delivery clericals, PBX operators, unit stock office clericals, merchandise preparation clericals, invoice records clericals, personnel office clericals and lead clericals employed by the Employer at its facility located at 1166 Fesler Street, El Cajon, California, excluding all other employees, confidential employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

[2] In accordance with normal procedure, the directed election was held and the ballots were impounded, pending decision on review.

[3] The parties agreed to exclude two merchandisers who purchase merchandise for the warehouse.

259 NLRB No. 41

ery clerical to schedule the delivery. The salespersons are paid on a commission basis but otherwise share the same benefits as unit employees.

The two maintenance employees perform their cleaning functions in the warehouse facilities after the center is closed. They, too, report to the warehouse manager and receive common benefits with other unrepresented warehouse employees. Although the maintenance employees lack contact with others included in the unit, they perform a maintenance function at the warehouse facility.

The unit found appropriate by the Regional Director is, as indicated, a mixed group of warehouse clericals and some office clericals. To exclude the salespersons and maintenance employees from the mixed unit comprised essentially of the other remaining warehouse operations employees would unduly fragmentize the work complement and, in these circumstances, be unwarranted.[4]

Accordingly, we find that the salespersons and maintenance employees share a sufficient community of interest with the other included employees that they should be included in the voting group hereinafter described.

As the Petitioner presently represents the traditional warehouse employees, and no other labor organization seeks to separately represent the various clerical, sales, and maintenance employees here involved who essentially constitute the remaining unrepresented warehouse operations personnel, this group of employees may be represented only as part of the existing unit after a self-determination election.[5] Therefore, the election directed by the Regional Director is hereby vacated and we shall direct a self-determination election herein in the voting group described below to determine whether such employees wish to be included as part of the existing unit represented by the Petitioner:

> All warehouse clerical employees, including all truck and delivery clericals, PBX operators, unit stock control clericals, invoice records clerks, merchandise preparation clericals, personnel office clericals, lead clericals, salespersons, and maintenance employees employed by the Employer in its warehouse operation at its facility located at 1166 Felser Street, El Cajon, California, excluding all other employees, confidential employees, professional employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

If a majority of employees in the above voting group vote for the Petitioner, they will be taken to have indicated their desire to constitute part of the existing unit currently represented by the Petitioner, and the Regional Director shall issue a certification of results to that effect.[6]

Direction of Election omitted from publication.]

MEMBER JENKINS, dissenting:

Unlike the majority, I believe the Regional Director was correct in finding appropriate a unit consisting of the unrepresented clerical employees at the Employer's El Cajon, California, warehouse. The majority characterizes the unit as a "mixed group of warehouse clericals and some office clericals." However, there is no showing that the PBX operators and the personnel office clericals, those most traditionally classified as office clericals, have an essentially different community of interest from the other clericals. In fact, the parties stipulated to the inclusion of the PBX operators, and there is no exception to the Regional Director's finding that the personnel office clericals share a substantial community of interests with the other clerical employees. The Regional Director's uncontested finding is that the personnel office clericals "work the same basic hours as do the employees in the stipulated classifications, and are likewise paid an hourly wage, use the same type of clerical skills in the performance of their duties, and come into frequent daily contact with the included employees during the course of their work." Therefore, the majority's characterization of the unit as "mixed" promises more significance than it can deliver.

Presumably, the majority finds the other clericals—truck and delivery clericals, unit stock office clericals, merchandise preparation clericals, and invoice records clericals—to be plant clericals. However, their functions, as well as their skills (as found by the Regional Director), are compatible with those of office clericals. See, e.g., Nuturn Corp., 235 NLRB 1139 (1978). In the absence of a distinct difference between them, there is no valid basis on which to deny the existence of a sufficient separated community of interest among all the warehouse clerical employees to warrant such a grouping as an appropriate bargaining unit. Cf. Wickes Furniture, a Division of the Wickes Corporation, 255 NLRB 545 (1981) ("will-call" clericals and office clerical employees excluded from a unit of warehouse employees because of separate community of interest). See also my dissenting opinion in Gustave Fischer, Inc., 256 NLRB 1069 (1981).[7]

[4] Although the Board does not normally include office clericals in a unit of warehouse clericals, no review of the Regional Director's action in this regard was sought. Rather, review was limited to the exclusion of salesmen and janitors from the unit. In these circumstances, we conclude that the unit presented to us is, in effect, a residual warehouse unit in which it would be improper to exclude any segment or classification.

---

[7] Because I find that all the warehouse clerical employees have a separate community of interest, I find Lorillard, a Division of Lowes Theatres, Inc., 219 NLRB 590, to be inapplicable and would direct a standard election, not a self-determination election. Inasmuch as the majority has constructed a voting group that, unlike the unit found appropriate by the Regional Director, is truly heterogeneous, I have some doubt of Lorillard's applicability even if the majority is correct in finding the Regional Director's unit inappropriate.

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On May 28, 1981, Administrative Law Judge Robert M. Schwarzbart issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions[2] of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order.[3]

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge and hereby orders that the Respondent, Technical Careers Institutes, Inc., New York, New York, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the said recommended Order, except that the attached notice is substituted for that of the Administrative Law Judge.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

After a hearing at which all sides had an opportunity to present evidence and state their positions, the National Labor Relations Board found that we have violated the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, and has ordered us to post this notice.

WE WILL NOT refuse to bargain with District 65, affiliated with United Automobile, Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers of America, by unilaterally altering terms and conditions of employment of the employees in the bargaining unit, set forth below, for which this Union is the exclusive bargaining representative.

WE WILL NOT threaten to discharge our employees if they work for, or support, the above-named Union, or any other labor organization.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act.

WE WILL recognize and, upon request, bargain in good faith with the above-named labor organization as the exclusive representative of our employees in the appropriate bargaining unit described below, with respect to hours of work, lunchbreaks, and other terms and conditions of employment, and embody any understanding reached in a written, signed agreement. The appropriate bargaining unit is:

> All full-time and regular part-time office clerical employees employed by Technical Careers Institutes, Inc., at 320 West 31st Street, New York, New York, but excluding all other employees, teachers, maintenance and custodial employees, technical employees, managerial employees, confidential employees, head bookkeeper, guards, and supervisors as defined in the Act.

WE WILL rescind the unilateral changes made in February 1980 regarding the length of the workweek, the workday, and the daily lunchbreak, and WE WILL make our employees

[1] Respondent has excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Administrative Law Judge. It is the Board's established policy not to overrule an administrative law judge's resolutions with respect to credibility unless the clear preponderance of all of the relevant evidence convinces us that the resolutions are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, Inc., 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing his findings.

[2] The Administrative Law Judge failed to address that portion of the complaint which alleges that Respondent's unilateral increase in the length of the workday and the workweek and its unilateral change of working conditions by reducing the daily lunchbreak period were additionally violative of Sec. 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act. We specifically do not pass on this issue since the General Counsel has not excepted to the Administrative Law Judge's failure to discuss it.

[3] Member Jenkins would provide interest on the backpay awards due to Respondent's unlawful increase in the length of the workday and the workweek and its unlawful reduction of the daily lunchbreak period in accordance with his partial dissent in Olympic Medical Corporation, 250 NLRB 146 (1980).

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

ROBERT M. SCHWARZBART, Administrative Law Judge: This case was heard in New York, New York, on October 22-24 and November 20-21, 1980,[1] upon a complaint issued on May 22, based on a charge filed on March 3 by District 65, affiliated with United Automobile, Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers of America, herein called the Union. The complaint alleges that Technical Careers Institutes, Inc., herein called the Respondent, violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, herein called the Act, by unilaterally increasing the number of hours employees are required to work each day and week, and by unilaterally reducing the length of the lunch period, without bargaining on these matters with the Union as the certified bargaining representative of the Respondent's office clerical employees. The Respondent, in answering the complaint, denied committing any unfair labor practices.

All parties were given full opportunity to participate, to produce relevant evidence, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to file briefs. Briefs, which have been carefully considered, were filed by the General Counsel and the Respondent.

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

The Respondent, a New York corporation located in New York, New York, is engaged in the operation of a private technical school. The Respondent, in the conduct of its operations, annually derives gross revenues in excess of $1 million, and annually purchases and receives at its facility goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly from points outside the State of New York.

The complaint alleges, the answer admits, and I find that the Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Background

The electronics technology school presently operated by the Respondent was founded in 1909 as the Marconi Institute, which was engaged in training telegraphers. In or about 1920, the school was taken over by the Radio Corporation of America, when its name was changed to R.C.A. Institute, Inc. The school then offered training in various engineering disciplines relating to radio and telegraphy. In 1972, the school became accredited to offer degree courses in engineering technology. R.C.A continued to operate the school until May 1974 when it was purchased in equal shares by a group of 30 faculty members headed by Samuel Steinman, who thereafter operated the Respondent under its present name and entity.[2]

The Union, at the time of the hearing, had represented the Respondent's teachers and technicians for about 3-1/2 years, and the Respondent's maintenance employees since January or February 1978. In addition, the Union was certified on January 28, 1980, in Case 2-RC-18576 as the bargaining representative for the Respondent's office clerical employees in yet a third unit. The office clerical unit is the only one relevant in this proceeding.[3]

Employees in the office clerical unit work in the school's administrative department which consists generally of the bursar's office, the registrar's office, the admissions office, the financial aide office, the accounting office, and the academic office. In accordance with the parties' stipulation, I find that the following individuals who at various times headed these offices were or are supervisors and agents of the Respondent within the meaning of Section 2(11) of the Act and that they held or are holding the positions set forth after their names: Bruno M. Suria, financial aid officer,[4] and Calvin T. Watlington, his successor in that position; Vincent Bruno, administrator of student services and registrar; Richard Carapezzi, consecutively bursar and accountant; Robert Gonzalez and John LiCausi, successively bursars; Salvatore Adelfio and Rodrique de los Reyes, consecutively treasurer-controllers; Walter Arizzni, vice president for marketing; Thomas Smithsi, associate dean of the preparatory department; George Leelike, manager of personnel relations; Richard Bader, dean of administration; Woodrow Hsu, dean of the day school; Martin Tucker, administrator of admissions; Michael Conlin, academics coordinator; and Roy Lewis, associate dean of the preparatory department. In addition, Nathaniel Buch was director of the Respondent's school from 1974 until his departure in November 1979.[5] [1] All dates hereinafter are in 1980 unless stated to be otherwise.

[2] Steinman, who had joined the R.C.A. faculty in 1957, became president and chief executive officer of the Respondent in May 1974. He has continued in this position, except for a 2-year period from May 1977 to May 1979, and was in this office when the events considered herein occurred.

[3] Since certification the undisputed appropriate unit for bargaining has been:

> All full-time and regular part-time office clerical employees employed by the Respondent at 320 West 31st Street, New York, New York, but excluding all other employees, teachers, maintenance and custodial employees, technical employees, managerial employees, confidential employees, head bookkeeper, guards, and supervisors as defined in the Act.

[4] The disputed unit placement of Rosa Suria, assistant financial aid, officer, will be discussed below.

[5] In stipulating that the above-named individuals are or were supervisors while in the indicated positions, the Respondent contended that only Steinman had authority to hire or discharge employees. However, the Respondent did agree that the others could assign work independently, a criterion for supervisory status under Sec. 2(11) of the Act.

B. The Facts

The General Counsel and the Union contend that, about 2-1/2 weeks after the Union was certified as the bargaining representative for the Respondent's office clerical employees, the Respondent unilaterally, without notice to or consultation with the Union, increased the number of weekly hours its office clerical employees were required to work from 35 to 39, requiring that employees arrive earlier and leave work later. At the same time, the Respondent shortened the daily lunch period from 1 hour to 37 minutes. The General Counsel argues that this was done both to punish employees for selecting the Union and to improve the Respondent's position at the bargaining table.

The Respondent, in turn, largely relying on timesheets prepared and signed by employees since 1974, contends that the 39-hour workweek had always been in effect, and that such scheduling had been started by R.C.A. and continued by the Respondent to date. Accordingly, as there had been no change in hours, the Union's certification had not prompted an unlawful reaction by the Respondent.

The General Counsel counterargues that, while the Respondent's business records as presented might appear to support the Respondent's position that its office clerical employees had long worked a 39-hour workweek, these records do not accurately describe the work hours and practices in effect before mid-February when, the General Counsel contends, the 39-hour workweek was first invoked. In support of this position, the General Counsel introduced the testimony of a number of employees, the testimony of several individuals formerly employed by the Respondent in supervisory positions, and certain documentary evidence, including other of the Respondent's business records.

Rosa Suria, assistant financial aid officer, testified that when she was first hired by the Respondent in September 1974 as a receptionist in the admissions office, Gregory Chaberski, then administrator of admissions, told her that her hours would be from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. with lunch from 1 to 2 p.m. However, although those were the hours she worked, Chaberski also directed her to fill out her biweekly timesheet to show that she worked from 7:45 a.m. to 4:10 p.m. with 37 minutes for lunch. He did not provide an explanation for this recordkeeping practice.

After working these hours for 3 years while a receptionist, Chaberski notified her of an opening in the financial aid office and referred her to Salvatore Adelfio, then the Respondent's treasurer and controller. Adelfio described the duties of the vacant position and told her that the hours would be from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. with an hour for lunch. Following this interview, Suria, in October 1977, advanced to her present position of assistant financial aid officer,[6] in which she worked the hours thus assigned.

Rosa Suria and almost all other witnesses called by the General Counsel, whether supervisory or not, testified that they complete their biweekly timesheets for each entire pay period just once every 2 weeks on payday.[7] The timesheets are then submitted to the employees' respective supervisors who also sign them.[8] Employees are hourly rated.

When Rosa Suria first became assistant financial aid officer, she reported to Bruno M. Suria, financial aid officer from October 1977 until mid-October 1979.[9] After Bruno Suria resigned, Rosa Suria worked for his successor, Calvin T. Watlington.

The Surias testified that in October 1977 Rosa had informed Bruno that he was completing his own timesheets incorrectly by reporting arrivals at 9 a.m., departures at 5 p.m., with an hour for lunch. Although he actually had been working those hours, Rosa pointed out that everyone she knew had been reporting on their timesheets work hours from 8:45 a.m. to 5:10 p.m. with 37 minutes for lunch. Bruno replied that he wanted to check this. Together they went to the accounting office where they asked Antoinette Ceigle, a bookkeeper, why they were required to list work hours from 8:45 a.m. to 5:10 p.m., with 37-minute lunch periods, on their timesheets when those were not really their work hours. Ceigle replied that it was necessary to record the longer hours for bookkeeping purposes; the hours were logged that way for the school's recordkeeping convenience.[10]

In January, shortly before the election, George Leelike, the Respondent's manager of personnel relations,[11] went to Rosa Suria's office and told her that she should not get involved with the Union and should not encourage people to join the Union. Leelike informed Suria that she was not allowed to vote and that she should leave the premises with the supervisors at the time of the election. When Suria replied that she would do what she felt was right, Leelike retorted that someone working at McDonald's who had been told to shave off his beard had been terminated when he had refused to do so. Leelike stated that this was not a threat.[12]

[6] Rosa Suria's status as a member of the bargaining unit is in issue. The record reveals that as assistant financial aid officer Rosa Suria assists students by filling out forms concerning financial aid, including loan application forms, notifies students that such aid is available, and helps the financial aid officer in preparing reports to the Federal Government. Besides Rosa Suria and the financial aid officer, financial counselor Bhisham Sachdeva is the only other individual employed in the financial aid office. Sachdeva does not report to Rosa Suria and she does not replace the financial aid officer in his absence. She does only her own work even when the financial aid officer is present. Rosa Suria signs only her own timesheets and does not approve the timesheets of other employees, a function performed in that office only by the financial aid officer. In the absence of the financial aid officer, Rosa Suria and Sachdeva report to the controller. Rosa Suria's ballot was challenged at the representation election by the Board agent on the ground that her name did not appear on the voting eligibility list and by the Union observer on the ground that she was a supervisor. As the challenged ballots were insufficient in number to be determinative, her status in the unit was never decided. Since the record contains no evidence that Rosa Suria has any of the supervisory criteria in Sec. 2(11) of the Act, or that she has been clothed with apparent supervisory authority, I find that she is an employee within the meaning of Sec. 2(3) of the Act and is properly included in the office clerical bargaining unit.

[7] The only exception to this was Edna Agapito, a receptionist in the bursar's office, who testified that she maintained her timesheets on a daily basis as instructed by the then bursar, Robert Gonzalez.

[8] The parties stipulated that the timesheets completed and signed by Rosa Suria and other office personnel since 1974 generally would show arrival at 8:45 a.m., departure at 5:10 p.m., with 37 minutes for lunch. While there was some deviation from this schedule, the general work pattern as set forth on the timesheets signed by the various employees in unit-type job classifications and countersigned by their supervisors did reflect the 39-hour workweek predicated on the 8:45–5 routine. Overtime premium pay was afforded only for work performed after 39 hours, and work performed after 35 hours, but not exceeding 39 hours, in a given week was paid at straight time.

[9] In May 1980, after Bruno Suria's departure from the Respondent's school, he and Rosa Suria were married.

[10] Bruno Suria, stipulated to have been a supervisor, also testified that his various superiors had told him that his normal work hours were from 9 to 5 with an hour for lunch. He resigned from the Respondent's employ before the alleged change in hours.

[11] Leelike is also one of the shareholders of the Respondent's stock and is a member of its board of directors.

As noted, the Union was successful at the January 18 election and was certified as the bargaining representative of the Respondent's office clerical employees on January 28.

Rosa Suria testified that thereafter, on or about February 21, she and the other financial aid office employees, who at the time, in addition to Sachdeva, also included financial counselor Magdeleine Alvarez, received the following memorandum, dated February 14, from Leelike addressed to all nonfaculty employees:

> It has become necessary to issue this memorandum to all non-Faculty employees for the purpose of clearly stating TCI's policy of work hours. The normal work week is comprised of 39 hours. The normal work day begins at 8:45 a.m. and ends at 5:10 p.m. There is a 37 minute lunch, and any breaks are to be authorized by the department supervisor. These hours may be rescheduled only by written approval in advance. These hours apply to all hourly employees and to those who are paid overtime. Any lateness will be docked from your paycheck and any unauthorized absences will not be paid.

When the above February 14 memorandum was distributed, Rosa Suria and the other financial aid personnel were told by Watlington that their hours were being changed. Instead of arriving at 9 a.m. and departing at 5 p.m., they thereafter were to come in at 8:45 a.m. and leave at 5:10 p.m. Watlington declared that they no longer would be allowed to take an hour for lunch, but would be limited to 37 minutes. If they came to work after 8:45 a.m., their pay would be docked.

Rosa Suria then asked Watlington when the provisions of the memorandum were to become effective, and was told that it would be all right to leave work at 5 p.m. that day, but on the following day the employees were expected to come in at 8:45 and to abide by the stated hours thereafter. Suria declared that these changes were being made because of the Union and that the Company most likely would use these conditions at the bargaining table. Watlington agreed that she probably was right.[13]

After the February 14 memorandum was circulated, Rosa Suria noticed the Respondent's president, Samuel Steinman, standing in front of her office at 8:45 a.m., checking on employees as they arrived for work. He also was present to ensure that employees did not leave work before 5:10 p.m. Before the memorandum, she had not seen Steinman before 9 a.m. Also, following the February 14 memorandum, Suria noted that Watlington, for the first time, had begun to log on his calendar the times that employees left for lunch and returned.

Rosa Suria testified that, although she since has worked the longer schedule as required by the memorandum and Watlington's directive, her compensation remains what it had been before February 14.

Bhisham Sachdeva, a counselor in the financial aid office,[14] testified that in August 1977, when he was first hired by the Respondent as a clerk-typist in that same office, he was told by the then financial aid officer, Mrs. Cudjoe, and the assistant financial aid officer at the time, Doris Jackson, that he would be working from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. with an hour for lunch. However, when Sachdeva first filled out his timesheet by writing in the hours he had been told to work, Cudjoe told him that he was not supposed to complete the timesheets in this fashion, but, instead, was to put down 8:45 a.m. to 5:10 p.m. with a 37-minute lunch period. She explained that it was school policy to complete the timesheets in this manner. He thereafter filled out the timesheets as instructed, but continued to work the shorter hours originally assigned.

Sachdeva related that he continued to work the same hours after becoming a financial counselor in 1978.

Watlington and Sachdeva had an exchange concerning the latter's punctuality[15] and Sachdeva received the following memorandum, dated February 5, from Watlington on the subject of lateness and absences:

> Please be advised that your attendance as well as your lateness continues to increase in a manner which is not beneficial to the Financial Aid Office functioning properly.
> I have spoken to you on two-separate occasions about arriving at work after 9:00 a.m. and requested that you show some improvement. There must be a definite improvement in your attendance from this point on. [Emphasis supplied.]

On February 7, Sachdeva sent a reply memorandum to Watlington wherein he protested the charges of lateness and questioned the accuracy of the asserted prior reprimands referred to therein. In his response, however,

[12] Rosa Suria's uncontradicted account of the foregoing conversation with Leelike is credited.

[13] Watlington did not testify.

[14] The parties stipulated that Sachdeva is employed in the relevant office clerical bargaining unit.

[15] Sachdeva's timesheet for the 2-week period ending February 8 contains certain corrections in that his arrival times for January 28, 30, and 31 were changed from 9:10, 9:05, and 9:10, respectively, to 9:30, 9:30, and 9:10. Sachdeva explained that these corrections had been made on February 8, the last day of that pay period, when, as usual, the timesheets for the period were prepared. Sachdeva had been late on those occasions and originally had entered his actual starting times for those dates. However, on February 8, Rodrique de los Reyes, then the Respondent's controller and treasurer, instructed Sachdeva to change these entry times to the corrected hours shown. He told Sachdeva that he would be paid for full days on those dates and should not worry. The timesheet also shows that Sachdeva's arrival times for February 4 and 5, originally inserted as 8:45, were changed to 9:15 and 9:45, respectively. A supervisory entry on the timesheet requested that Sachdeva be paid for 7.8 hours on January 28 to February 5, and noted that Sachdeva had been advised that future lateness would be deducted. The Respondent contends that the foregoing is consistent with its position because both before and after the election its regular workday was 7.8 hours.

Sachdeva did not take issue with the 9 a.m. starting time mentioned by Watlington.

Leelike's above-quoted memorandum of February 14 was given to Sachdeva by Watlington following the Union's certification. Watlington told Sachdeva that he would have to be on the job at 8:45 a.m. If he arrived for work after that time, deductions would be made from his pay. Sachdeva was told to take 37-minute lunches and to leave the job at 5:10 p.m. Sachdeva thereafter abided by the new hours.

Following receipt of Leelike's memorandum, Sachdeva noted that the Respondent's president, Steinman, was at the financial aid office every morning at or before 8:45 asking the whereabouts of given employees. As Sachdeva was situated in the front part of that office, some of these questions had been put to him. According to Sachdeva, such inquiries had not been made before the election.

Although Sachdeva's work hours have increased since the distribution of the February 14 memorandum and Watlington's accompanying explanatory instruction, his weekly earnings have not changed.

Bursar's office employee Ada Bosco[16] gave a similar account. She testified that when she was hired as a clerk-cashier in August 1978, she was told by her then supervisor, Bursar Robert Gonzalez, that her hours would be from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. with an hour for lunch. Bosco continued to work these same hours in successive positions in that office as receptionist, from October 1978 until November 1979, and as a tuition counselor ever since. However, when at the end of her first 2 weeks with the Respondent she filled out her timesheet to reflect her actual hours, Gonzalez told her to change these entries to show a work schedule from 8:45 to 5:10, with lunch from 2 to 2:37 p.m., for bookkeeping purposes. Bosco thereafter maintained her timesheets as instructed.

Bosco testified that, following the representation election, she found Leelike's February 14 memorandum on her desk. When she asked John LiCausi, who had succeeded Gonzalez as bursar, about the memorandum, LiCausi replied that there was a change of hours. From then on, the employees were to come to work at 8:45 a.m., take 37 minutes for lunch, and get off at 5:10 p.m. If employees were not at work by 8:45, their pay would be docked. Although Bosco's work hours were increased in February, her compensation remained the same.[17]

Edna Agapito related that she was hired as a cashier in the bursar's office in October 1978, and that she has held her present position as receptionist- typist in that office since November 1979. When hired, she, like Bosco, had been told by Bursar Gonzalez that her work hours would be from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. with 1 hour for lunch, but, as also was the case with Bosco, she had been directed by Gonzalez to complete her timesheets to show work hours from 8:45 a.m. to 5:10 p.m. with lunch from 1 to 1:37 p.m. Gonzalez had also told Agapito that this form of entry was for bookkeeping purposes.

Accordingly, while completing her timesheets as instructed, Agapito continued to work the original shorter hours until she received Leelike's memorandum of February 14. Since Agapito was given this memorandum, she has worked from 8:45 to 5:10 and has observed 37-minute lunch periods. There has been no increase in her pay to compensate her for the longer hours worked.

Agapito testified that, although she had been late for work before February, no deductions had been made from her pay. However, after February, her pay was docked for latenesses of 5, 10, and 15 minutes. Her timesheets show a schedule based on a standard workday of 7.8 hours. Accordingly, Agapito's record reveals that on January 8 she arrived for work at 9:45, had lunch between 1 and 1:37 p.m., and left work at 5:10, for a prorated total of 6.8 hours.[18] Her work hours as recorded for June 23, when she arrived at 9 a.m., also were proportionately reduced to a credit of 7.55.

Divinia Pagan[19] also testified that, after receiving Leelike's February 14 memorandum, her hours and those of other admissions office employees changed from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., with an hour for lunch, to 8:45 a.m. to 5:10 p.m., and 37-minute lunch periods. Pagan related that, when she joined the Respondent in 1974, Salvatore Adelfio, the then controller and treasurer, had informed her that her hours would continue to be from 9 to 5 with the 1-hour lunchbreak, and that had been her routine until February 1980, when she had received Leelike's memorandum. At that time, her supervisor, Director of Admissions Martin Tucker, had told her that the hours provided in Leelike's memorandum would become effective immediately. Pagan, too, related that, although the hours became longer, there was no increase in pay, and that Steinman, starting the day after Leelike's memorandum was distributed, began to stand at the door to check employees as they arrived for work. On the first day that he did this, Steinman had asked the whereabouts of two employees.

Pagan identified a series of weekly work schedules concerning admissions office coverage during 3 weeks in mid-1977, several months in 1979, and the first 2-1/2 months of 1980. These schedules list the daily starting times for each employee assigned to the admissions office during the weeks represented.[20] The authenticity of these schedules, which were prepared by successive administrators of admissions under the authority of the dean of admissions, is not disputed. The schedule, dated June 16, 1977, begins with a preamble, which announces itself as the schedule of starting times for coverage of the admissions office for the next several weeks. The time frames or work shifts there indicated were 9 to 5, 10:30 to 6:30, and 12 to 8. The schedule then set forth next to the names of each admissions office employee daily starting times of 9, 10:30, or 12. With very few exceptions, all starting times shown were for 9. A like reference to the above time frames was made in the coverage schedule dated April 20, 1979, for the 6 weeks between April 30 and June 8 of that year. The assignment patterns there conformed to the earlier schedule, with the very great majority of the assigned starting times set at 9. While the remaining coverage schedules did not also refer to times when the shifts were to end, the starting times assigned for admissions office coverage through 1979 and into 1980 remained the same with a heavy emphasis on 9.

[16] Bosco, also referred to in the record by her married name, Reyes, is in the bargaining unit.

[17] The Respondent argues that Bosco's testimony is contradicted by her time record for June 18, which shows that she arrived for work that day at 11 a.m., took lunch between 2 to 2:37 p.m. and did not leave work until 7:25, after staying late so as to work the full 7.8 hours. Also, while Bosco initially testified that on January 31 and February 7 her entered arrival times of 9:15 a.m. represented latenesses of 30 minutes, she changed this to avow that under the schedule then in effect she had been only 15 minutes late on those days.

[18] Although Agapito recalls having been late on January 8, she does not remember when she came to work. This, however, is compromised by her earlier testimony that it was her practice, when late, to put down her actual time of arrival.

[19] Pagan, the mother and mother-in-law of Rosa and Bruno Suria, respectively, began her employment with the school while it was still operated by R.C.A., and remained there in the Respondent's employ after May 1974. Since 1974, she has been an advisor in the admissions office.

[20] See G.C. Exhs. 7(a)-(h). Although the admissions office manning schedules for 1980 run through the week of March 10-14, by which time the change in hours alleged herein had become effective, the document for that week relates back as it shows coverage for the 4 preceding weeks and was dated February 12, which was before the issuance of Leelike's, above-quoted February 14 memorandum.

Pagan testified that the work hours shown in the admissions office coverage sheets represented the actual hours worked by employees in that office. Where the number "9" was placed next to the name of an employee, that employee was expected to work from 9 a.m. until 5 p.m., unless the letter "L" was inserted next to the starting time, in which case, the employee was expected to work late, until 8 p.m.[21] Employees assigned to start work at 10:30 were expected to work until 6:30. One employee, identified as J. Davis, was assigned to work this schedule on certain days so that he might be available to service veterans who attended evening classes.

Pagan, however, also recalled having received the following memorandum, dated July 18, 1974, from Nathaniel Buch, then school director, addressed to the Respondent's supervisors on the subject of office procedures:

> As you may know, we at T.C.I. are presently undertaking an intensive advertising campaign in order to greatly improve our enrollment picture for the Fall Term.
> In keeping with this undertaking, the following procedures will be reinstated for all office personnel immediately:
> 1) Each member of the staff will be on the premises for 7.8 hours per day. This means that your hours will reflect 8.4 hours each day with 37 minutes for lunch.
> 2) Lunch hours will be staggered so as to keep all areas covered at all times.
> 3) Counsellors will not schedule lunch between 12:00 Noon and 1:00 P.M.
> 4) Supervisors will continuously be aware of work being done by each person in their respective departments.
> 5) Personal Business Absence will be requested and approved by the immediate supervisor of each department prior to the day of the absence.
> 6) Absence due to illness must be reported to your immediate supervisor at the start of the day of this absence.

Pagan testified that when the above memorandum was given to her in 1974, on or about the time it was dated, her supervisor, then Admissions Administrator Gregory Chaberski, had asked her to read same, telling her that it was for the purpose of scheduling lunches only; no one should take lunch before 1 p.m. Chaberski spoke individually with each admissions office employee about their lunchtimes to ensure that the office would be fully staffed until 1 p.m. At the time, according to Pagan, all admissions employees generally were working from 9 to 5 with 1 hour for lunch, unless assigned to work an equivalent number of hours on another shift, or unless on required overtime. This did not change after Buch's memorandum and the duration of the lunch period was not affected, except that the lunchbreak subsequently was observed after 1 p.m.

In addition to Bruno Suria, the General Counsel presented the testimony of two other witnesses formerly in supervisory positions with the Respondent, Vincent Bruno[22] and Richard Carapezzi.[23]

Bruno testified that in February 1980 he attended a meeting of supervisors called by the Respondent's president, Steinman. Also in attendance were Woodrow Hsu, the dean of academics; Ray Lewis, associate dean of the preparatory department; Martin Tucker, administrator of admissions; Richard Bader, dean of administration; Michael Conlin, academics coordinator; and Rodrique de los Reyes, controller and treasurer.

Steinman opened the meeting by announcing that there would be a discussion concerning District 65, the union that had now come into being, and inviting the others to ask questions. Responding to an inquiry concerning the hours that the staff would thereafter work, Steinman declared that, when R.C.A. ran the school, the official school hours for all employees were 8:45 a.m. to 5:10 p.m. with 37 minutes for lunch. Even though those hours had not been enforced, Steinman stated that he would start enforcing them now because of the advent of the Union. He asserted that this was a perfectly legal situation and that the school would be using this as a tool to bargain with the Union at a later date. Steinman directed that all supervisors tell their staffs of this change and that all should abide by these hours, including the supervisors. In response to another query, Steinman declared that these hours would become effective immediately.

[21] Admissions employees were required to work longer work schedules during busy times such as registration periods and at the start of each school semester.

[22] Bruno worked for the Respondent from October 1974 until his discharge in June 1980. Originally hired as a clerk while a full-time student at the Respondent's school, in April 1976, he became a full-time assistant to the associate dean of the preparatory department, Thomas Smithsi. In November 1976, Bruno became administrator of student services and registrar, which positions he held until leaving the Respondent.

[23] Carapezzi was hired by the Respondent in October 1977 as bursar. In June 1978, Carapezzi became the Respondent's accountant with responsibility for overseeing the work of accounting office personnel, including the bookkeeper, assistant bookkeeper, and accounts receivable clerk. He maintained all books and handled Federal, state, and corporate matters. Carapezzi continued in this position until he resigned from the Respondent in mid-March 1980.

Bruno testified that when the above-described February meeting was conducted, office employees were working from 9 to 5 with an hour for lunch and that he had instructed his own staff as to those hours as necessary. However, immediately following the above meeting with Steinman and the other managerial personnel, Bruno called a meeting of those assigned to work with him and informed them of the new hours. To enforce them, Bruno made certain that he personally was on the job by 8:45. Leelike's memorandum of February 14 was received about 1 week after the meeting with Steinman. Although the actual work hours were changed in February, the method of filling out the timesheets continued as before.[24]

Bruno related that, when, in April 1976, he became a full-time employee of the school as assistant to Associate Dean Thomas Smithsi, he asked the latter why the timesheets were being filled out so as not to show the hours actually worked. Smithsi had replied that this was just for accounting purposes. When Bruno later became registrar, he asked the same question of School Director Buch and was given the same answer.

The Respondent's former accountant, Carapezzi, testified that, while serving as the Respondent's bursar from October 1977 until June 1978, he instructed the employees assigned to work under his direction that their work hours were from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. with 1 hour for lunch. Later, but before February, he and his accounting office employees also had worked these same hours.

Carapezzi related that, after receiving Leelike's February 14 memorandum, which he found on his desk on or about that date, he responded with his own written reply, dated February 20, to Leelike, with copies to Controller de los Reyes and to Administrator of Personnel Susan Sieczkowski.[25] Carapezzi's note is as follows:

> In regard to your memo dated February 14, 1980, I feel it necessary to state the following. At the time of my hire, October 10, 1977, one of the conditions of my hiring was that my hours consisted of a work day beginning at 9:00 a.m. and ending at 5:00 p.m., with a one hour lunch break. I was told at this time that this procedure is company policy. The thirty-nine hour work week was only a formality. If a change in this policy has occurred since then, I have failed to be notified. Accordingly, any people I have hired during this time span have been hired under the same conditions. I would greatly appreciate your immediate response of this matter. Thank you.[26]

Shortly after sending Leelike the above message, Carapezzi met Leelike in the hallway of the Respondent's premises and asked for clarification of the change in policy. Carapezzi told Leelike that, at the time he had been hired, he had been expected to work from 9 to 5 with 1 hour for lunch, and that he wanted to know why he and the persons employed in his office were now being required to work a 39-hour week. Although Leelike replied that he would meet with the employees in Carapezzi's department and discuss the matter, such a meeting never occurred.[27]

Ellen Harper[28] testified that, after receiving complaints from various members of the office clerical and faculty bargaining units about the change in hours affecting the office clerical unit, and following her own investigation, she sent the following letter, dated February 28, to Leelike at the Respondent's school:

> In our opinion, the recent increase in working hours for clerical employees represented by District 65, U.A.W. constitutes an unfair labor practice. We have filed charges in this regard with the National Labor Relations Board. A copy of our charge is enclosed.[29]
> We urge you to promptly reinstate the previous hours of work and pay bargaining unit employees for those additional hours already worked. Should this occur, we will of course withdraw our charge.
> We are prepared to meet with you to discuss this matter further if you wish.

Harper averred, without contradiction, that the Union had received no communication from the Respondent concerning the office clerical unit either before or after it sent the above February 28 letter to the school, and that no reply to this letter ever was received. Contract negotiations for the office clerical unit began in September. While there since have been discussions concerning working hours, there has been no agreement or resolution of this issue.

Samuel Steinman, the Respondent's president, testified that, in order for the present corporation to continue to operate the school after purchasing it from R.C.A in [24] Steinman questioned Bruno's general reliability by testifying that Bruno had been terminated because he had inappropriately permitted changes in student transcripts that did not correlate with actual grades, and that this resulted in diplomas having been incorrectly issued. In addition, the school had lost much money because the flow of information from student services that enabled the school to certify students who were receiving financial aid was very slow. Contrary to Bruno, who testified that he had not been informed of the reasons for his termination, Steinman testified that Bruno had been confronted with the evidence against him by his supervisor, Dean of Administration Bader, in July, and, soon thereafter, he had been let go. Bruno admittedly did not receive a copy of the internal personnel form subsequently given to Steinman, which set forth the reasons for Bruno's discharge. Bader was not called as a witness. The issue of Vincent Bruno's credibility will be considered below.

[25] Sieczkowski's duties as administrator of personnel differs from those of Manager of Personnel Relations Leelike, who works in labor relations, in that Sieczkowski is principally involved with verifying billing and handling of insurance claims for the Respondent's students. She also is responsible for maintaining personnel records.

[26] Although Carapezzi testified that he personally had delivered the above response to the personnel office and had given a copy to Sieczkowski with a request that she forward it to Leelike, Leelike denied receiving it.

[27] Another of the Respondent's business records, a payroll change notice for unit employee Alba Alcazar, also apparently contradicts the Respondent's timesheets. This document indicates that in June 1979 Alcazar was assigned to work from 12:30 to 8:30 p.m., hours corresponding to the General Counsel's position.

[28] Harper, an organizer for the Union for about 6 years, services the separate units of the Respondent's employees represented by the Union. Harper was the only union official who was involved in the organizational campaign for the Respondent's office clerical unit and, since certification, has served as the Union's chief negotiator for that unit.

[29] Subsequently, the charge in this proceeding was filed on March 3.

May 1974, it was necessary to retain all previous accreditations and degree-granting authority from the State Department of Higher Education and from the National Association of Trade and Technical Schools, and to gain approval from the Veteran's Administration and other agencies. To obtain these approvals, required for continued operation, the new management had to demonstrate that the school would be maintained with no change in administrative policy, curriculum facilities, or working conditions. The Respondent therefore successfully attempted to retain as many of R.C.A.'s former administrators and school employees as would be willing to remain.

Steinman declared that office clerical employees worked the 39-hour week when the Respondent took over operation of the school in 1974 and that in the interest of required continuity, there have been no changes in hours of work for clerical employees since that time. Steinman conceded, however, that, while it was necessary to maintain curriculum and faculty standards, office services, and the caliber of such facilities as libraries and laboratories, the clerical personnel involved in this proceeding do not conduct classes and are not directly associated with the school's academic standing.[30]

In explaining why the admissions office coverage schedules generally reflected starting times of 9 when, according to the Respondent, the work shift really began at 8:45, Steinman related that the net time during which the admissions office performed services was from 9 to 5. Accordingly, if admissions office employees are at work promptly at 9 a.m., except for peak periods, there would be no net diminution in the time during which services would be rendered in that office as compared with what had been available under R.C.A., as R.C.A. had followed the same policy. While testifying that the switchboard, too, does not open until 9 a.m., Steinman insisted that the hours on the posted admissions office coverage schedules are not the hours that those employees actually were expected to work, as they always had been required to be present by 8:45 and to leave at 5:10.

Steinman denied the account of the February managerial meeting given by Vincent Bruno. According to Steinman, he had called a meeting of ranking school personnel approximately 1 week after the Union's January 28 certification. In addition to those identified by Bruno as having been present, there were Richard Carapezzi;[31] George Leelike, manager of personnel relations; Walter Arizzni, vice president for marketing; Susan Sieczkowski, personnel administrator; and Richard Bader, then dean of admissions.

According to Steinman, he informed the group that, because the Union had won recognition as bargaining agent for the office clerical unit, the school would have to scrupulously avoid changing any of the terms and conditions of employment as such changes would have to be discussed in advance with the union representative. Responding to questions concerning tardiness and existing conditions of employment, Steinman told those assembled that they should make certain that they continued to do whatever had been done before. There was no discussion of negotiating strategy in future contract discussions with the Union.[32]

Steinman also denied that he had checked employee arrivals earlier than before following the issuance of Leelike's February 14 memorandum. Steinman explained that, since November 1979 when School Director Buch departed, Steinman has assumed Buch's duties. As a result, Steinman has arrived at the school much earlier than before to look into matters previously supervised by Buch, coming to work as early as 7:30 and 8 a.m. and remaining late. He has continued this practice since Buch's departure.

Steinman and Leelike trace the inception of Leelike's February 14 memorandum, which Steinman had authorized, to a tardiness problem then being experienced with financial aid employee Bhisham Sachdeva. Sachdeva had become upset when his supervisor, Financial Aid Officer Watlington, had refused to approve his timesheet as submitted because Sachdeva had not entered his lateness for the pay period in question. Sachdeva had explained to Leelike, called in on the matter, that his lateness had been caused by transportation problems. Sachdeva, in turn, was instructed to fill out his timesheet accurately with the proper arrival times. If Sachdeva wanted to record the reason for his lateness, it was up to him.

Leelike then reported the incident to Steinman, who asked him to look into the general matter of lateness in the office and to report back. When Leelike returned to Steinman with his findings on tardiness, the latter accepted Leelike's recommendation that, rather than deal individually with each employee, it would be wiser to remind the employees of the work hours by a general memorandum. Accordingly, Leelike's February 14 memorandum was distributed.

Leelike, too, affirmed that the working hours policy set forth in Buch's above-quoted memorandum of July 18, 1974, had not changed from that time to date. As did the Respondent's other officials, Leelike contended that the timesheets completed to show that 39-hour weeks generally had been worked by the Respondent's office employees since 1974 correctly represented the existing situation.

Although Leelike, as noted, denied receipt of Carapezzi's February 20 memorandum wherein Carapezzi had protested the asserted change in work hours, Leelike did recall going to Carapezzi's office in that period after Carapezzi had asked to speak with him. Carapezzi, during Leelike's visit, announced that he wanted to talk about his working conditions. He had received Leelike's memorandum and, in his mind, this February 14 communication constituted a change. Leelike replied that he knew of no change that had been intended. Carapezzi stated that he wanted Leelike to know that he was very upset about this. When Leelike asked what was making Carapezzi upset, Carapezzi reiterated that this represented a change. The conversation ended when Carapezzi walked out of his own office telling Leelike that he did not think he wanted to talk to him. Carapezzi resigned in mid-March.

[30] Accreditation was actually accomplished in 1974 when the Respondent's attorney went to Albany, New York, where he provided the appropriate agencies with information as to how the school would be run.

[31] While Carapezzi recalled having attended such a meeting, he did not remember what had been said.

[32] Steinman's account of the February meeting was substantially corroborated by Arizzni and Leelike.

The Respondent's position as to the continuity of the 39-hour workweek was further supported by the testimony of Walter Arizzni, vice president for marketing,[33] and two longterm employees, Kathryn Archacki and Lee Goldberg.[34]

Archacki, secretary to the dean, testified that she has worked 39-hour weeks throughout her approximately 19 years at the school under R.C.A. and the present management.[35] When hired by the Respondent in 1974, she was told by the then controller, Adelfio, that her hours would be the same as those she had had with R.C.A. Archacki's hours, from 9 a.m. to 5:25 p.m. with lunch from 2 to 2:37 p.m., have been followed all the time she has been with the school. If Archacki works through her lunch recess, she will leave at 5 instead of 5:25 p.m.

When Archacki received Leelike's February 14 memorandum, which provided that the hours set forth therein could be "rescheduled only by written approval in advance," she asked her supervisor, Dean Hsu, if this memorandum applied to her as well. Hsu promised to check. He later reported that Archacki should continue to work the same schedule as before.

Goldberg, who is Arizzni's secretary, was employed by R.C.A. for about 8-1/2 years before the school was purchased by the Respondent. She averred that from the time she was with R.C.A. to the present she has worked 39-hour weeks, from 9:30 a.m. to 5:55 p.m.,[36] taking between 37 to 40 minutes for lunch. While she sometimes works later than 6 p.m., she never leaves before that time. When she was hired by the Respondent in 1974, Adelfio agreed to Goldberg's request that the same arrangement she had had under R.C.A. be continued and that she be allowed to come in later in the morning and stay later in the day to complete her 7.8 hours.

Goldberg received a copy of Leelike's February 14 memorandum that work hours were from 8:45 to 5:10, and, although that communique required that those hours be observed unless there has been advance written authorization, Goldberg has continued to work the same hours as before without discussing the matter with Arizzni and without obtaining written authorization.

C. Discussion and Concluding Findings

The Respondent does not contest the established principle that an employer violates his duty to bargain if, when negotiations are sought or are in progress, he unilaterally institutes changes in the existing hours of work or other terms and conditions of employment.[37] Rather, in response to the General Counsel's assertion that the workweek was unilaterally lengthened from 35 to 39 hours approximately 2 weeks after the Union was certified as bargaining representative for the Respondent's office clerical employees, the Respondent contends that the workweek always had been 39 hours and that no such change had occurred.

This matter is unusual in that the Respondent's timesheets since 1974, which support the Respondent's position, are under attack. The timesheets are also supported by Buch's 1974 memorandum. Conventionally, such business records, consistently maintained in the manner described for so extended a period, might be dispositive. In the present matter, however, the weight of the evidence, in the context of the credibility resolutions to be discussed below, supports the General Counsel's argument that the timesheets are inconsistent with other business records and do not reflect the hours actually worked by the Respondent's office clerical employees before mid-February.

As described above, the General Counsel presented the testimony of five employee witnesses who are in the bargaining unit and three of the Respondent's former supervisors. I credit the testimony of the employee witnesses. That they all were on the Respondent's payroll when, at economic risk to themselves, they testified against their Employer's interest is a factor to be counted in assessing credibility.[38] The credibility of these witnesses has also been evaluated in the context of the other factors to be considered herein.

The testimony of former Superviser Richard Carapezzi is credited as he was a neutral and disinterested witness when he testified. Unlike Vincent Bruno, who also gave evidence as a former supervisor, Carapezzi had not been terminated by the Respondent, but had voluntarily resigned. Although Personnel Manager Leelike did not admit receipt of Carapezzi's memorandum of February 20 protesting Leelike's February 14 communique concerning work hours, Carapezzi's credibility is enhanced by Leelike's testimony that Carapezzi, at the time, did complain about these changes when Leelike came to see him in his office. Leelike noted that Carapezzi, when seeking to discuss the changes, had been quite upset. Having credited Carapezzi, I find that on or about February 20 he prepared and distributed his memorandum in reply to Leelike.[39]

Carapezzi, on the other hand, detracted from Vincent Bruno's believability as to events at the managerial meeting called by Steinman in early February. There, according to Bruno, Steinman had declared that the work hours would be increased because of the advent of the Union and to provide the Respondent with a bargaining tool. Bruno's account is denied by Steinman and other company witnesses. Although Carapezzi, by his own testimony and other testimony, was among those present at the meeting, he did not recall what had been said. Considering Carapezzi's sensitivity to the subject change in hours, to the point where he protested the matter in writing and/or orally, if Steinman had made the statements attributed to him by Bruno, it is most unlikely that such remarks would have been disregarded by Carapezzi.

[33] Arizzni, like Steinman and Leelike, is one of the 30 coequal shareholders in the Respondent corporation.

[35] Archacki has been secretary to the dean during her entire employment.

[36] These hours are recorded by Goldberg on her timesheets.

While Agapito appeared to be the most inconsistent of the Respondent's employee witnesses, her testimony concerning her work schedule before and after mid-February is accepted as otherwise corroborated.

[39] See Continental Distilling Sales Company, a Division of Publicker Industries, Inc., 145 NLRB 820, 827 (1964), enfd. in part 348 F.2d 246 (7th Cir. 1965), where much weight was given to the testimony of a neutral former supervisor.

In evaluating Vincent Bruno's testimony, I make no finding as to whether he was terminated because of the conduct attributed to him by Steinman. In not accepting Bruno's accounts of the mid-February meeting, it is noted that his version is not supported by Carapezzi; that, having been terminated, Bruno did have grounds for other than a neutral view of the Respondent; and that, as I found, his protestation that he had received no reason for his discharge is unconvincing. Bruno had been advanced from a routine part-time position while a student in the Respondent's school until he became registrar and administrator of student services. In short, he had not been badly treated. The record contains no evidence that Bruno had acted in any way to bring in the Union and there is no developed reason why the Respondent after furthering Bruno's career should have dealt so summarily as not to have notified him of the reasons for his termination.[40] Accordingly, so much of Bruno's testimony as relates to what Steinman stated at the early February meeting is not credited. However, as Bruno's testimony concerning the actual change in the length of the workday and the shortening of the lunch hour is corroborating by other evidence, that part is accepted.

Bruno Suria, like Carapezzi, had voluntarily resigned from his supervisory position, doing so even before the asserted change in hours became an issue. However, unlike Carapezzi, Bruno Suria, because of close family ties to his wife, Rosa Suria, and mother-in-law, Divinia Pagan, both of whom are still employed and have a material interest in the outcome of this proceeding, cannot be considered neutral. Nonetheless, Bruno Suria's testimony is consistent with the weight of the evidence as developed herein, is independently corroborated, and is accepted.

The testimony of the General Counsel's witnesses is corroborated by certain contemporaneously prepared documents of undisputed authenticity that provide insight as to the hours actually worked before mid-February. Accordingly, Financial Aid Officer Watlington's February 5 note to Sachdeva, reprimanding him for lateness, referred to two separate occasions when Watlington had spoken to him "about arriving at work after 9 a.m."[41] Also, the payroll change notice for employee Alba Alcazar shows that in June 1979 she worked a schedule consistent with what the General Counsel argues was followed before mid-February 1980. More significantly, taken at face value, the coverage sheets for the admissions office indicate that before mid-February most employees in that office were to be in the office from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. The lesser number of employees who were assigned to other shifts in that office worked the same number of hours.

Steinman's testimony that, regardless of what the coverage schedules appeared to require, daytime employees nonetheless had been expected to be on the job between 8:45 a.m. and 5:10 p.m. is diluted by his further testimony that the office rendered services only between 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., that the school's switchboard did not open to receive calls until 9 a.m., and that, if these employees arrived for work promptly at 9 and left at 5, the office could operate with no diminution of services as compared to R.C.A. This testimony eliminates any substantive reason for the longer hours, at least as far as the admissions office is concerned.

Similarly, as no one can call the school before 9 a.m., it would appear that the Respondent did not represent itself as open to the public before that hour and that certain other clerical services did not commence before then.

In affording greater credence to the admissions office coverage sheets as business records than to the timesheets, spontaneity of preparation is a compelling factor. While there is considerable testimony that the timesheets were kept in a certain way "for bookkeeping purposes," it is undisputed that the coverage sheets were regularly prepared by the Respondent for its own needs over an extended period and that the time frames for the various shifts as indicated in those schedules had been freely promulgated. Logically, if the Respondent had then intended that the admissions office actually be manned from 8:45 to 5:10 and that employees on other shifts work corresponding hours, it would have been just as easy to have so specified.[42]

Steinman's explanation of a need to continue services as under R.C.A. in order to acquire or retain accreditation may have provided a rationale as to why the Respondent may have deemed it necessary to have timesheets completed to reflect a 39-hour workweek. However, as a practical matter, this, too, did not translate into substance. Accreditation was obtained after the school's attorney went to Albany and informed the relevant agencies how the school would be operated. However, the clericals are not directly connected to the Respondent's academic standing. While Steinman testified that the longer hours were needed so that there would be no reduction in clerical support services, as noted such services, in fact, would not be diminished if the employees were on the job between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. With this background, I further credit the testimony of Divinia Pagan that her actual work hours while with R.C.A. conformed to the 35-hour week, and that she had been told by her supervisor that the July 18, 1974, memorandum from School Director Buch was intended only to ensure that employees did not leave the office for their 1-hour lunchbreak before 1 p.m.[43]

[40] While Bruno did not receive the internal personnel form given to Steinman setting forth the reasons for the action taken against him, in denying that he had even been given reasons for his termination, Bruno, in my view, overstated his situation.

[41] It is rather unlikely that a formal supervisory reprimand on the subject of lateness would refer to an incorrect starting time.

[42] While adjustments to certain timesheets based on the 7.8-hour day, as in the cases of Bosco, Sachdeva, and Agapito, tend to enhance authenticity, the weight of the evidence supports the conclusions reached herein.

[43] In reaching the conclusions herein, I have discounted the testimony of Archacki, secretary to the dean, and Goldberg, secretary to the vice

From Union Organizer Harper's undisputed testimony, it is clear that the Respondent refused to notify or consult with the Union about the change in hours. This omission plainly violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act even in the absence of a showing that the Respondent had acted in bad faith.[44] The Respondent was duty-bound to recognize and deal with the newly certified Union as the bargaining agent of the office clerical employees. By taking the unilateral action found herein, the Respondent unlawfully failed to fulfill its duty to bargain.[45]

IV. THE EFFECT OF THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES UPON COMMERCE

The activities of the Respondent set forth in section III, above, occurring in connection with the operations of the Respondent described in section I, above, have a close, intimate, and substantial relationship to trade, traffic, and commerce among the several States and tend to lead to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow thereof.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Respondent is an employer within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. The following employees of the Respondent constitute a unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act:

> All full-time and regular part-time office clerical employees employed by the Respondent at 320 West 3lst Street, New York, New York, but excluding all other employees, teachers, maintenance and custodial employees, technical employees, managerial employees, confidential employees, head bookkeeper, guards, and supervisors as defined in the Act.

4. At all times material herein, the Union has been the exclusive bargaining representative of the employees in the aforesaid appropriate unit within the meaning of Section 9(a) of the Act.

5. By unilaterally increasing the length of the workday and the workweek and by unilaterally changing working conditions by reducing the daily lunchbreak period, having implemented these changes on or about February 14, 1980, the Respondent has engaged in, and is engaging in, unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) of the Act.

6. By the foregoing conduct and by threatening an employee to discourage activity and support for the Union, the Respondent has interfered with, restrained, and coerced its employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act, and thereby has engaged in, and is engaging in, unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

7. The aforesaid unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that the Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I shall recommend that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and to take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

I shall recommend that the Respondent be required to rescind the unilateral changes found herein and to make affected employees whole for any losses sustained as a result of the changes.[46] Reimbursement shall include interest as provided in Florida Steel Corporation.[47] The Respondent also should be ordered to meet and bargain in good faith with the Union concerning work schedule changes and to post the customary remedial notices.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact, conclusions of law, and the entire record, and pursuant to Section 10(b) of the Act, I hereby issue the following recommended:

ORDER[48]

The Respondent, Technical Careers Institutes, Inc., New York, New York, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Refusing to bargain with District 65, affiliated with United Automobile, Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers of America, by unilaterally altering terms and conditions of employment of the employees in the bargaining unit set forth below for which the Union is president for marketing. While both are technically within the bargaining unit, they are longterm employees who throughout their lengthy tenures have been assigned to work directly for management officials. Their positions have brought them privileges not otherwise accounted for as both work schedules other than the 8:45 to 5:10 routine currently mandated by the Respondent. Archacki assertedly is scheduled to work from 9 to 5:25, and is free to depart at 5 p.m. if she works through her lunch period. Goldberg works from 9:30 to 6, hours she claimed to have followed through her earlier years with R.C.A. and, with the Respondent's permission, to have continued ever since. Contrary to the terms of Leelike's February 14 memorandum, both continued to work their separate schedules without obtaining written authorization. While Archacki did consult with the dean for whom she worked on this matter and obtained verbal clearance, Goldberg continued to work as before with no discussion with her superior, Arizzni. The longstanding respective work relationships between Archacki and Goldberg and the high managerial officials with whom they are associated have, to some degree, set them apart from other unit employees and have affected their independence and focus as witnesses.

[44] The Baughman Company, 248 NLRB 1346, 1347 (1980); Florida Steel Corporation, 235 NLRB 941, 942–943 (1978).

[45] It also is concluded that Leelike's undenied January directive to employee Rosa Suria that she should not become involved with the Union, encourage others to support the Union, or vote in the forthcoming representation election, in the context of his reference to someone who had been discharged at McDonald's for not following instructions, was a threat intended to discourage Rosa Suria from working for and supporting the Union. This statement was therefore violative of Sec. 8(a)(1) of the Act. Although not separately alleged in the complaint, this incident was litigated at the hearing and is closely related to matters actually alleged.

[48] In the event no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Rules and Regulations of the National Labor Relations Board, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order herein shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules and Regulations, be adopted by the Board and become its findings, conclusions, and Order, and all objections thereto shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

the exclusive bargaining representative. The appropriate bargaining unit is:

> All full-time and regular part-time office clerical employees employed by the Respondent at 320 West 31st Street, New York, New York, but excluding all other employees, teachers, maintenance and custodial employees, technical employees, managerial employees, confidential employees, head bookkeeper, guards, and supervisors as defined in the Act.

(b) Threatening to discharge employees if they work for or support the Union.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action:

(a) Upon request, meet and bargain in good faith with the Union, as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of the employees in the appropriate unit described above, concerning the length of the workday, the workweek, lunch breaks, and other terms and conditions of employment, and embody any understanding reached in a signed, written agreement.

(b) Rescind the changes in the length of the normal workday, the length of the normal workweek, and the duration of the daily lunch break made in February 1980,[49] and make the employees whole for any loss of earnings, privileges, or benefits suffered as a result of such unilateral action in accordance with the section of this Decision entitled "The Remedy."

(c) Preserve and, upon request, make available to the Board or its agents, for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(d) Post at its New York, New York, school copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[50] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 2, after being duly signed by the Respondent's representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Notify the Regional Director for Region 2, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps the Respondent has taken to comply herewith.

[49] No remedy is deemed appropriate here concerning overtime premium pay as the practice of affording same after 39 hours of work per week was unchanged.

[50] In the event that this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On June 23, 1981, Administrative Law Judge Gerald A. Wacknov issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order.[2]

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge and hereby orders that the Respondent, Ricks Construction Company, Inc., Bakersfield, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the said recommended Order.

---

[1] Respondent has excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Administrative Law Judge. It is the Board's established policy not to overrule an administrative law judge's resolutions with respect to credibility unless the clear preponderance of all of the relevant evidence convinces us that the resolutions are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, Inc., 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing his findings.

[2] In accordance with his dissent in Olympic Medical Corporation, 250 NLRB 146 (1980), Member Jenkins would award interest on the backpay due based on the formula set forth therein.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

GERALD A. WACKNOV, Administrative Law Judge: Pursuant to notice, a hearing with respect to this matter was held before me in Bakersfield, California, on March 17, 1981. The initial charge was filed on March 28, 1980,[1] by General Teamsters & Food Processing Local Union No. 87, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America (herein called the Union). An amended charge was filed by the Union on June 23.

Thereafter, on September 26, the Regional Director for Region 31 of the National Labor Relations Board issued a complaint and notice of hearing alleging a violation by Ricks Construction Company, Inc. (herein called Respondent), of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended (herein called the Act). The answer and amended answer, duly filed, deny the commission of any unfair labor practices.

The parties were afforded a full opportunity to be heard, to call, examine, and cross-examine witnesses, and to introduce relevant evidence. Since the close of the hearing, a brief has been received from the General Counsel.

Upon the entire record, and based upon my observation of the witnesses and consideration of the brief submitted, I make the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

The Board, in a related Decision issued on June 27,[2] asserted jurisdiction over Respondent finding as follows:

> Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business operations, annually performs services at the Elk Hills Naval Reserve valued in excess of $50,000 for Williams Brothers Engineering, herein called Williams.
> Williams is a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in Tulsa, Oklahoma. Williams is engaged in the supervision of the exploration, drilling, and production of petroleum products, as an agent for the United States Government acting through the Secretary of the Navy, at the Elk Hills Naval Petroleum Reserve Number One in Kern County, California, and received in excess of $50,000 per month net operating fee from the United States Government during the same period of time described above.
> Williams in the course and conduct of its operations annually purchases and receives at its Elk Hills operation, products, goods, and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly from points outside the State of California.
> The operations of Respondent in conjunction with the operations of Williams described above have a substantial impact on the national defense of the United States.
> Respondent, in the course and conduct of its operations, bought and received at its Bakersfield, California, facility products, goods, and materials valued in excess of $5,000 directly from points outside the State of California.

The instant complaint contains identical jurisdictional allegations. Respondent admits that it annually performs services valued in excess of $50,000 for Williams, and admits the allegation concerning the nature and extent of

---

[1] All dates or time periods herein are within 1980 unless stated to be otherwise.

[2] Ricks Construction Company, Inc., 250 NLRB 250, 251 (1980).

259 NLRB No. 43

Williams' operations at the Elk Hills Naval Reserve. However, Respondent's answer claims "no direct knowledge" that Williams purchases in excess of $50,000 worth of goods and material from outside the State of California for such operations, or that the operations of Respondent and Williams have a substantial impact on the national defense of the United States.

The General Counsel relies on the Board's jurisdictional determination in the foregoing case as being sufficient to establish jurisdiction herein, and so advised Respondent at the hearing. Respondent presented no evidence on the issue of jurisdiction.

On the basis of the foregoing admissions of Respondent, I find that the Board's jurisdiction over Respondent has been established under the national defense standards enunciated by the Board in Ready Mixed Concrete & Materials, Inc.,[3] and that Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

It is admitted and I find that the Union is, and has been at all times material herein, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. The Issue

The principal issue raised by the pleadings is whether Respondent refused and/or delayed the reinstatement of unfair labor practice strikers following the Union's unequivocal application for reinstatement on their behalf.

B. The Facts

Respondent has a contract with Williams Brothers Engineering to provide labor for the drilling of oil and gas wells, and related operations, at the Elk Hills Naval Petroleum Reserve Number One in Kern County, California.

In Ricks Construction Company, Inc., supra, the Board found that Respondent had violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by failing and refusing to recognize and bargain with the Union following the Union's certification, on November 27, 1979, as collective-bargaining representative of the employees involved herein,[4] and by failing and refusing to furnish the Union with certain relevant and necessary information for the purposes of collective bargaining.

On March 10, prior to the Board's June 27 decision in the aforementioned case, the Union commenced a strike against Respondent in protest of Respondent's continued failure and refusal to bargain. Some 100 of Respondent's approximately 135 to 150 employees participated in the strike.

On March 19, the Union terminated the strike and sent the following telegram to Respondent:

> TEAMSTERS LOCAL 87 HEREBY MAKES AN UNCONDITIONAL OFFER TO RETURN ALL RICKS CONSTRUCTION EMPLOYEES TO THEIR JOBS NO LATER THAN 5 PM MARCH 19, 1980. INASMUCH AS OUR PICKET LINE WAS AN UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICE PICKET LINE, TEAMSTERS LOCAL 87 DEMANDS THAT ALL EMPLOYEES RETURNING TO WORK AS PER THIS TELEGRAM BE REINSTATED TO THEIR FORMER POSITION NO LATER THAN 5 PM MARCH 19, 1980. PLEASE BE ADVISED THAT REFUSAL TO RETURN ANY OF THE ABOVE MENTIONED EMPLOYEES TO THEIR FORMER POSITION WILL SIMILARLY BE CONSIDERED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES.

Thereafter, apparently on or shortly after March 20, Respondent reinstated the great majority of employees to their former jobs. However, on and subsequent to March 20, Respondent's supervisors, while assemblying the crews prior to the customary 7 a.m. starting time, refused to reinstate approximately 20 returning strikers who had timely reported for work, advising them that they had been replaced or that their positions had been filled.[5]

Various employees who were refused reinstatement on and after March 20 testified that they had been working for Respondent for substantial periods of time in the same job classifications, that they worked a regular workweek on a full-time basis, and were on a permanent employment roster maintained by Respondent. Respondent's area manager, Irvin Gramling, testified that, although Respondent's foremen maintain a daily roster of regular employees, nevertheless none of Respondent's employees are considered to be permanent employees. Gramling, by way of explanation, testified that he would not characterize himself as being a permanent employee even though he has occupied his position for 5 years.

Gramling further stated that, following the receipt of the aforementioned telegram on March 19, Respondent did not issue any directive or instructions to its foremen regarding reinstatement of the strikers, and thus the foremen were apparently permitted to use their own discretion regarding reinstatement. Gramling surmised that the foremen "may have had their crews already filled up" on the morning of March 20, or that there was insufficient work available, as justification for the failure of the foremen to reinstate the employees to their former jobs. Gramling acknowledged that some strike replacements hired between March 10 and March 19 were again "hired" on the morning of March 20. However, he was unable to estimate the number of strike replacements so employed.

C. Analysis and Conclusions

While Respondent implicitly suggests, by certain questions directed to the General Counsel's witnesses at the hearing, that there may have been another reason for the strike, the unrebutted record evidence shows, and I find, that the strike was instituted for the purpose of protesting Respondent's continued failure to bargain with the Union following Board certification. Indeed, the Board, on June 27, determined that Respondent's failure so to bargain and to provide certain requested information was violative of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act. I therefore find that the strike, commencing on March 10, was an unfair labor practice strike. Even assuming arguendo a dual motivation for the strike, it is clear that the aforementioned unlawful conduct of Respondent was a principal reason therefor. Thus, the strike was nevertheless an unfair labor practice strike. See Larand Leisurelies, Inc., 213 NLRB 197, fn. 4 (1974), enfd. 523 F.2d 814 (6th Cir. 1975).

---

[4] The unit is described as follows:

> All roustabouts, lead roustabouts, crane operator, backhoe operator, pushers, and working foremen employed by the Respondent at Elk Hills Naval Reserve, but excluding all office clerical employees, professional employees, guards, all other employees, and supervisors as defined in the Act.

[5] The record indicates that some of these 20 employees were reinstated at a later date, and that some have not yet been reinstated.

An employer is obligated to reinstate immediately unfair labor practice strikers to their former positions of employment upon application, discharging, if necessary, any employees hired as replacements during the strike. Stanley Building Specialties Co., a subsidiary of the Stanley Works, 166 NLRB 984, 986 (1967), enfd. sub nom. United Steelworkers of America, Local 5571 [Stanley-Artex Windows, Division of the Stanley Works], 401 F.2d 434 (D.C. Cir. 1968); United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, AFL-CIO, Local Union No. 1780, 244 NLRB 277 (1979); Atlas Metal Parts Co., Inc., 252 NLRB 205 (1980), and cases cited therein at fn. 9.

The undenied and credible testimony of various employees who sought to return to work following the strike clearly demonstrates that Respondent's foremen, who possessed the authority to reinstate the employees, determined that they had been replaced and refused to give them preference over replacements hired during the strike. While there is no contention and no record evidence that the foremen were motivated by a discriminatory intent, such treatment of unfair labor practice strikers is inherently discriminatory and nonetheless unlawful. Moreover, although Area Manager Gramling speculated that there may have been no work available on March 20 for some of the approximately 20 employees involved herein, Respondent has not presented any probative evidence in support of this contention, particularly as the record evidence shows, and Gramling concedes, that an unknown number of strike replacements were employed subsequent to March 20. Thus, I find that Respondent has failed to sustain its burden of proof. See Kayser-Roth Hosiery Company, Inc. v. N.L.R.B., 447 F.2d 396, 401 (6th Cir. 1971).

Respondent's apparent contention that the employees involved herein were simply casual or daily laborers who reported to work each day without assurance that they would be "hired" is totally specious and I discredit Gramling's assertions in this regard. Rather, the uncontradicted record evidence shows, and I find, that Respondent's employees are assigned to specific job classifications and work crews, that they are employed on a regular full-time basis, and that they are permanent employees.

On the basis of the foregoing, I find that, by failing and refusing to reinstate the unfair labor practice strikers named in the complaint, Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act as alleged. Gulf States Manufacturers, Inc., 230 NLRB 558, 571 (1977); Kayser-Roth Hosiery Co., Inc., 187 NLRB 562, 567 (1970).

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. The strike which commenced on March 10 was an unfair labor practice strike.

4. By failing and refusing to reinstate unfair labor practice strikers on and after March 20, Respondent has violated and is violating Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act as alleged.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent violated and is violating Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act, I recommend that it be required to cease and desist therefrom and from in any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed under Section 7 of the Act.

Having found that Respondent has discriminatorily refused to reinstate the unfair labor practice strikers upon the Union's unconditional application on their behalf to return to work, Respondent shall be required to offer them immediate and full reinstatement to their former positions or, if such positions are no longer in existence, to substantially equivalent positions without prejudice to their seniority or other rights and privileges, discharging if necessary any replacements. Further, Respondent shall be required to make them whole for any loss of pay they may have suffered as a result of the discrimination against them. Backpay shall be computed in accordance with the formula set forth in F. W. Woolworth Company, 90 NLRB 289 (1950), and Florida Steel Corporation, 231 NLRB 651 (1977). See, generally, Isis Plumbing & Heating Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962). Moreover, Respondent shall be required to post an appropriate notice to employees.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact, conclusions of law, and the entire record herein, and pursuant to Section 10(c) of the Act, I hereby issue the following recommended:

ORDER[6]

The Respondent, Ricks Construction Company, Inc., Bakersfield, California, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Failing and refusing to reinstate unfair labor practice strikers upon their unconditional application to return to work on or about March 20, 1980.

[6] In the event no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Rules and Regulations of the National Labor Relations Board, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order herein shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules and Regulations, be adopted by the Board and become its findings, conclusions, and Order, and all objections thereto shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed under Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action which it is found will effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Offer to the striking employees for whom the Union made unconditional application to return to work on about March 20, 1980, immediate and full reinstatement to their former positions or, if such positions no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, discharging if necessary any replacements, without prejudice to their seniority or other rights previously enjoyed, and make them whole for any loss of pay or other benefits suffered by reason of the discrimination against them in the manner described above in the section entitled "The Remedy."

(b) Preserve and, upon request, make available to the Board or its agents, for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(c) Post at Respondent's facility at Bakersfield, California, and at appropriate locations at the Elk Hills Naval Reserve where Respondent customarily posts notices to its employees copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[7] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 31, after being duly signed by Respondent's representative, shall be posted by it immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by Respondent for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(d) Notify the Regional Director for Region 31, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps Respondent has taken to comply herewith.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

After a hearing at which all sides had an opportunity to present evidence and state their positions, the National Labor Relations Board found that we have violated the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, and has ordered us to post this notice.

The Act gives employees the following rights:

To engage in self-organization
To form, join, or assist any union
To bargain collectively through representatives of their own choice
To engage in activities together for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection
To refrain from the exercise of any or all such activities.

WE WILL NOT fail to reinstate unfair labor practice strikers upon their unconditional application to return to work.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed by Section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act.

WE WILL offer the unfair labor practice strikers for whom the Union made unconditional application to return to work on or about March 20, 1980, immediate and full reinstatement to their former positions or, if such positions are no longer in existence, to substantially equivalent positions discharging if necessary any replacements, without prejudice to their seniority or other rights and privileges.

WE WILL make the said employees whole for any loss of pay they may have suffered as a result of the discrimination against them, with interest.

RICKS CONSTRUCTION COMPANY, INC.

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On June 11, 1979, Administrative Law Judge James L. Rose issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, the General Counsel filed exceptions and a supporting brief, the Charging Party filed a brief in support of the General Counsel's exceptions, and the Respondent filed a brief in opposition to the General Counsel's exceptions.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached decision in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings, and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge and hereby orders that the complaint be, and it hereby is, dismissed in its entirety.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

JAMES L. ROSE, Administrative Law Judge: This matter was heard before me in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, on May 7, 1979. In essence, the General Counsel's complaint alleges that on October 13, 1978,[1] Joseph F. Kline, vice president of the Respondent, threatened with physical assault Thomas J. Ventura, the Charging Party, because he had engaged in protected activity and thereafter in fact assaulted him,[2] both in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, 29 U.S.C. §151, et seq.

The Respondent generally denied that it has committed any unfair labor practices, although admitting that a physical altercation occurred between Kline and Ventura on October 13.

Upon the record as a whole, including my observation of the witnesses, briefs and arguments of counsel, I hereby make the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT AMD CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

I. JURISDICTION

H. O. Kline Transportation, Inc., is a class three common carrier, meaning that its gross volume of business is less than one-half million dollars a year. It does business in a four-state area including Delaware, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Maryland and is operated by a father and two sons.

During the year preceding issuance of the complaint herein the Respondent received more than $50,000 for transporting goods and materials across state lines. The Respondent admits, and I find, that it is an employer engaged in interstate commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, Local 326 (herein the Union), is admitted to be, and I find is, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. The Facts

For a number of years the Union has represented a unit of the Respondent's drivers and warehousemen. The Respondent and the Union have been parties to a series of collective-bargaining agreements including the one which was in effect during the material time of the events herein.

Ventura has been the shop steward since February 1976, and as such he has been involved in meeting with the owners of the Respondent—H. O. Kline and his sons Bernard and Joseph. Ventura has discussed various matters of dispute arising under the contract and has formally processed grievances.

According to Ventura, and generally undisputed by the Respondent, on October 5, H. O. Kline was observed unloading a truck as was Bernard on October 12. Then in the late afternoon on October 13, when Ventura returned to the Company's premises from making a delivery, Joseph told him to finish unloading a truck, which Ventura claims Joseph had been doing.

Joseph denied that he did any unloading on October 13, but does admit that when Ventura returned he was, in fact, standing on the dock with papers in his hands.

In any event, according to Ventura he talked to Joseph about the events of October 5 and 12 as well as his contention that Kline was doing bargaining unit work

[1] All dates are in 1978 unless otherwise indicated.

[2] Ventura claims that as a result of the assault he has been totally disabled from gainful employment, a claim which the Respondent disputes. The General Counsel contends that Ventura's disability resulting from an unlawful assault would require a backpay remedy. But because the nature and extent of the disability, if any, will involve medical testimony and, presumably, the amount of backpay would be affected by any workmen's compensation payments, the parties stipulated that the backpay issues should be deferred to a compliance proceeding. While Ventura's entitlement to workmen's compensation has not been litigated, the compensation insurance carrier has apparently begun making some kind of disability payments.

259 NLRB No. 44

that day. For management to do such work is a breach of contract.[3]

Ventura contends that when he told Joseph Kline that the Company had been breaching the contract, when he or the other owners did bargaining unit work, that Kline got upset and said, "If I fucked up the Company he would fuck me up."

After this Ventura went to the drivers' room, filled out a report, called his wife, punched his timecard, and proceeded to leave. On leaving he passed Kline who asked "if everything was okay." Ventura said yes, except that he did not appreciate Kline's threat. A few words were exchanged, then, according to Ventura, Kline picked him up, "slammed" him against the wall, and hit and kicked him. And after a few minutes Kline told Ventura to "get the hell off the premises."[4]

Kline contends that from the time Ventura returned to the dock in the afternoon until the physical altercation, a period of about 45 minutes, on three occasions Ventura brought up the subject of supervisors doing bargaining unit work, and kept "picking" at him. And according to Kline, Ventura followed him around the dock in an abrasive manner, badgering him about being on the dock and like. Kline testified that he told Ventura that if he wanted to file a grievance to do so but otherwise "to get off my back," and that he was "screwing up the Company." (Kline denies making the statement attributed to him by Ventura quoted above.)

In general agreement with Ventura, Kline contends that when Ventura came out of the drivers' office he said something about not liking to be threatened. Then, as Kline turned to walk away, "the man came after me." Kline shoved Ventura away because, he stated, he was afraid for his own physical safety—that Ventura has a reputation for aggressiveness and is known to have a permit to carry a gun. In any event, they scuffled a bit and in a few seconds the fight was over.

Finally, Kline contends that Ventura did not look injured as a result of the fight nor did he make any comment then about being injured.

Mary Ellen Shevchuck is a billing clerk for the Respondent who comes to work at or about 4:45 to 5 p.m. While she denied observing the beginning of the fight, she did see Kline and Ventura scuffling, at first thinking they were playing and then concluding that they were in fact fighting. The other secretary went to the door and said, "Joe, Tommy, stop, stop it."[5]

B. Analysis and Concluding Findings

The principal event upon which the General Counsel bases his complaint is, pure and simply, a fight between the two individuals who undisputably did not get along[6] and both of whom are aggressive. Even if Kline struck the first blow, which appears to be the case although not totally free from doubt, such is not necessarily an unfair labor practice. Certainly to threaten an employee with physical assault because he has engaged in protected activity, such as processing grievances, is a violation of Section 8(a)(1). Jones Motor Company, a Division of Allegheny Corporation, 202 NLRB 123 (1973). So is an actual assault. Greyhound Taxi Co., Inc., 234 NLRB 865 (1978). But the fact that a management official scuffles with a union steward does not of itself prove a violation of the Act.

It does appear from the testimony of both Ventura and Kline that Ventura had advanced his contention that managers were violating the contract by doing bargaining unit work. He was privileged to do this whether he was a union steward or not. Ventura had a right upon observing these events as he perceived them, to tell Kline and, on receiving a negative answer, he certainly was privileged to file a grievance. But he was not necessarily privileged to spend 45 minutes off-and-on "badgering" Kline. And I find that this is precisely what Ventura did. Such was Kline's generally credible testimony, undenied by Ventura. Even so, I do not believe that such behavior caused Kline to threaten Ventura or be the aggressor in the fight.

It is noted that both Ventura and Kline recounted the facts in what appeared to be the most favorable to their particular cause. Nevertheless, I found Kline more straightforward and credible than Ventura. For instance, it appeared that Kline was willing to make admissions on material matters which were not in his interest. He did not deny that he was first to make physical contact.

I do not believe, as Ventura would have me, that he was blameless—that Kline attacked him unprovoked. Nor do I believe Ventura's version of the fight—that Kline "picked me up and sort of slammed me against the wall." It may be that Kline's act of pushing Ventura was the first touch, but such does not exonerate Ventura. Indeed, I believe he provoked the confrontation. From Ventura's testimony that just prior to the fight Kline asked him if "everything was okay" does not suggest a disposition on Kline's part to start a fight.

I do not find persuasive the General Counsel's argument that by not discharging Ventura for having assaulted Kline, which would have been permissible under the contract, the Respondent thereby admitted that Ventura did not hit Kline. A company does not have to discharge someone every time cause is given. There are here already two matters in litigation involving this fight, and to have discharged Ventura would just invite another. Finally, the issue is not whether Ventura assaulted Kline, but whether Kline's actions against Ventura were caused by Ventura's protected activity.

[3] Indeed, subsequent to the events here, these alleged breaches of contract were resolved through the grievance procedure. The parties agreed that 1 day of pay for an employee would be paid for October 12, inasmuch as there was a member of the bargaining unit on layoff status on that day, but since no bargaining unit people were on layoff on October 5, the grievance as to that day was without merit. Apparently, Ventura's contention with regard to October 13 was not processed as a grievance.

[4] There is no allegation that Ventura was discharged. He is still considered an employee but has not worked since October 13 because of the injuries he claims to have suffered.

[5] Ventura contends that one secretary screamed, "Stop it Joe, stop it," which, of course, implies that Kline was the aggressor. On this point I credit Shevchuck over Ventura. Inasmuch as she was not participating in the fight, her observation of the events would figure to be more accurate. Further, she is generally a disinterested witness and has little stake in the outcome of this matter, whereas Ventura's interest in a favorable result here is potentially beneficial also to his workmen's compensation claim. Finally, Shevchuck's demeanor was more positive than Ventura's.

[6] Undenied is the testimony of Union Business Agent Michael J. Ciabattoni that the Klines had complained about Ventura as shop steward and had asked be be removed because "they felt he was very petty."

The General Counsel contends that I should infer Kline started the fight from the fact that he is bigger than Ventura and served in the Army in Vietnam. I am not persuaded that these facts prove that Kline was the aggressor, particularly in view of Ventura's undenied aggressiveness.

Ventura was not blameless, nor of course was Kline. But given the apparent personalities of the parties involved and their relationship one with the other, I can not conclude that Kline started the fight because Ventura sought to exercise the rights guaranteed employees under Section 7 of the Act.

As to the alleged threat, even if it occurred, the statement from Kline to Ventura that "he would fuck me up" really does not mean much. The General Counsel contends that this was in the context of Ventura discussing the grievances and therefore amounted to a threat of physical violence in violation of Section 8(a)(1). First, I do not believe that Kline made the statement in the words attributed to him. That is, I credit his denial. Secondly, what was said was said during the give-and-take of Ventura badgering Kline, and did not imply a threat of physical violence in violation of the Act.

Accordingly, I conclude the General Counsel has failed to prove by a preponderance of the credible evidence that the Respondent threatened physical assault, or in fact physically assaulted Ventura in violation of the Act. I will recommend that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact, conclusions of law, the entire record in this matter, and pursuant to the provisions of Section 10(c) of the Act, I hereby issue the following recommended:

ORDER[7]

The complaint is hereby dismissed in its entirety.

[7] In the event no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Rules and Regulations of the National Labor Relations Board, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order herein shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules and Regulations, be adopted by the Board and become its findings, conclusions, and Order, and all objections thereto shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

Pick-Mt. Laurel Corporation and Local 170, Bartenders, Hotel, Motel & Restaurant Employees Union, AFL-CIO. Case 4-CA-8533

November 17, 1981

SUPPLEMENTAL DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On January 12, 1979, the National Labor Relations Board issued its Decision and Order in this proceeding,[1] in which it adopted the Administrative Law Judge's finding that Respondent had violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act, for reasons noted below. Upon a petition for review and a cross-application for enforcement of the Board's Order, the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit denied enforcement of the Board's Order and remanded the case to the Board for further consideration consistent with its opinion.[2] The Board thereafter accepted the court's remand and notified the parties that they could file statements of position with the Board upon remand. The General Counsel has filed a statement of position and Respondent has filed a statement of position and a motion to reopen the record.[3]

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

In order to place the substance of the court's remand in proper perspective, we note the following facts: Respondent's predecessor, the MLH Development Company (MLH), began operation of the hotel and restaurant involved herein on June 5, 1975. In February 1975, months before the facility opened, MLH recognized the Union as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of a unit of the facility's employees. In April 1975, before any employees were hired, MLH and the Union reached agreement on a collective-bargaining contract. This contract, executed on June 1, 1975, was effective until December 4, 1977. The agreement contained a valid union-security clause. Nevertheless, MLH unlawfully and regularly required new employees to sign union membership applications and dues-checkoff authorization cards at the time they were hired. In February 1977, the facility was acquired by P-B Associates, of which Respondent was the general partner.

On February 9, 1977, Respondent, as successor to MLH, began operating the hotel and restaurant facilities. It retained all of MLH's employees. On February 24, 1977, Respondent withdrew recognition from the Union. The following day, the Union called a strike and Respondent filed a representation petition with the Board. The charge herein was filed on March 4, 1977, alleging Respondent's refusal to bargain with the Union as a violation of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

In the earlier proceeding, the Administrative Law Judge found that Respondent had violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act by withdrawing recognition from the Union, and refusing to bargain with it, on and after February 24, 1977. In so concluding, the Administrative Law Judge found that Respondent was a successor to MLH; that the contract between MLH and the Union established the Union's presumptive majority status; and that Respondent had not shown either that the Union in fact no longer represented a majority of the unit employees or that Respondent had a reasonably grounded doubt based on objective considerations of that majority status. In his decision, the Administrative Law Judge rejected Respondent's contention that its withdrawal of recognition was justified because its predecessor had unlawfully recognized the Union. The Administrative Law Judge found that this unlawful recognition occurred 2 years before the charge herein was filed, was outside the limitations period set forth in Section 10(b) of the Act, and could not be considered in determining the legality of Respondent's withdrawal of recognition. He also rejected Respondent's attempt to rely on the subsequent unlawful acts of MLH in requiring new employees to sign applications for membership and dues-checkoff authorizations on their first day of employment as he found "no showing that specific incidents" of such misconduct had occurred within the 6-month 10(b) period preceding the filing of the unfair labor practice charge in this case.[4]

Upon exception to the Administrative Law Judge's Decision, the Board agreed with the Administrative Law Judge's conclusion that Respondent had unlawfully withdrawn recognition from the Union. With regard to Respondent's reliance on its

[3] Respondent submitted a motion to reopen the record so that it might present evidence regarding the appropriateness of issuing a bargaining order at the present time in light of certain alleged changed circumstances at Respondent's facility. In light of our decision herein, we find it unnecessary to reopen the record to take such evidence and Respondent's motion is thus denied.

We also deny Respondent's later filed request for oral argument as the record, briefs, and various submissions are adequate to dispose of the issues presented for consideration.

[4] See 239 NLRB at 1261. Respondent had also offered other evidence clearly occurring in the 10(b) period, which it claimed supported its withdrawal of recognition from the Union. The Administrative Law Judge independently analyzed this evidence and found that it did not establish loss of majority or a reasonably based doubt of that majority.

predecessor's earlier illegal recognition of the Union, the Board added that, as the circumstances surrounding the Union's initial recognition and execution of a contract with the predecessor occurred outside the 10(b) limitations period, they could not constitute an objective basis for a reasonably based doubt of majority status.[5] The Board accordingly adopted the Administrative Law Judge's recommended Order as modified.

On review, the Third Circuit held that the Board had erred in refusing to consider pre-10(b) evidence offered by Respondent concerning its predecessor's relationship with the Union. The court indicated that even if Respondent could not use pre-10(b) evidence to nullify the contract upon which the General Counsel relied to establish the presumption of the Union's majority status, there was no reason why Respondent could not rely on the evidence "surrounding the . . . contract's inception to shed light upon its refusal to bargain as background evidence buttressing Respondent's analysis of the various timely events which allegedly gave rise to its good-faith doubt of majority status."[6]

Also, the court referred to the predecessor's illegal practice of requiring employees to join the Union and to sign dues checkoffs on their first day of work. The court noted Respondent's argument that this practice, constituting an independent unfair labor practice as to each new employee hired including those hired within the 10(b) period, might serve as the "relevant temporal anchor" to which consideration of pre-10(b) events could be tied. However, the court remanded on this issue also since it concluded that neither Respondent's brief to the court nor the Board's decision addressed the relationship between this unlawful assistance during the 10(b) period and Respondent's claim of good-faith doubt.

Lastly, in light of Respondent's desire to use pre-10(b) evidence here to defend against, rather than to establish, an unfair labor practice the court directed the Board to explain, on remand, its reasons for using the date of the filing of the charge (March 4, 1977), as the benchmark for tolling the 10(b) period.

Having accepted the remand, the Board also accepts the court's opinion as the law of the case. Thus, we are compelled to consider evidence of events occurring prior to the advent of the 10(b) limitations period insofar as they shed light on objective considerations supporting Respondent's asserted reasonably based doubt of majority status. In this regard, the fact that the Union was recognized by, and negotiated a collective-bargaining agreement with, Respondent's predecessor without prior choice or designation by any member of the bargaining unit, though occurring outside the 10(b) period, may be used as background evidence lending credence to Respondent's assertion that its own observations within the 10(b) period were sufficient to prompt a reasonably based doubt of the Union's majority status. Such observations included expression of dissatisfaction with the Union made to Respondent's supervisors by at least 29 of the 103 employees employed by Respondent at the time Respondent withdrew recognition, an expression which under terms of the remand we must regard as substantial. Additionally, consistent with the court's direction to the Board, we note that the predecessor's conduct in unlawfully requiring new employees at the time of their hire to execute union membership and dues-checkoff cards also supports Respondent's claim that it doubted that the Union represented an uncoerced majority of its employees when it withdrew recognition and that its doubt was grounded on objective considerations.[7] Thus, pursuant to the remand of the court, we find that Respondent has presented evidence of objective considerations supporting its good-faith doubt of the Union's majority status sufficient to rebut the Union's presumption of majority status. We shall accordingly revoke our prior Decision and Order in this case and dismiss the complaint in its entirety.

[6] 104 LRRM at 2708, quoting 436 F.Supp. at 1355.

[7] With regard to this unlawful assistance offered to the Union by Respondent's predecessor, the Administrative Law Judge found that there was no showing that specific incidents of such unlawful assistance had occurred in the 10(b) period; which he deemed to commence on September 4, 1976; i.e., 6 months before the charge was filed on March 4, 1977. He stated that Respondent had only established that, on February 9, 1977, when it took over the facility, 50 of the then 80-employee unit complement had been working less than 6 months, or since August 9, 1976. He then noted that on the refusal to bargain date of February 24, the unit had expanded to 103 employees but that there was no evidence of which or how many of these employees had been hired within the 10(b) period, i.e., since September 4, 1976. He found this a critical point. Viewing this issue within the confines of the court's remand, however, we consider it unimportant that Respondent was unable to state with precision how many employees were hired within the 6-month 10(b) period utilized by the Administrative Law Judge. We note that at fn. 7 of its decision, the court recognized that Respondent had not produced specific evidence of the number of employees who were affected by the unlawful assistance from 6 months before the date Respondent itself wished to use as the tolling date for the 10(b) period, i.e., the refusal-to-bargain date. Still, the court questioned whether "evidence of a tainted majority" was necessary when Respondent only wanted to consider this evidence in conjunction with other evidence to establish—not proof of actual loss of majority—but only a reasonably based doubt of majority. In any event, the record contains uncontradicted testimony to the effect that the procedure requiring cards to be signed at the time of employment continued through February 9, 1977, and that there was constant turnover among Respondent's employees. Moreover, the record also contains a stipulation by the parties setting forth when various employees in the housekeeping department were hired which states that one housekeeping employee was hired by Respondent's predecessor on February 2, 1977, and another on February 6, 1977, clearly within the 10(b) period regardless of whether the filing of the charge or the withdrawal of recognition tolled the limitations period. In light of this evidence and our disposition herein, we find it unnecessary to pass on the issue of which date (the date the charge was filed, or the date recognition was withdrawn) should toll the 10(b) period in this case.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board hereby orders that its prior Decision and Order in this case be, and it hereby is, revoked and the complaint herein be, and it hereby is, dismissed in its entirety.

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On June 22, 1981, Administrative Law Judge Richard L. Denison issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, the Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the General Counsel filed limited exceptions and a brief in partial support of the Administrative Law Judge's Decision.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and briefs[1] and has decided to affirm the rulings,[2] findings,[3] and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge and hereby orders that the Respondent, Loy Food Stores, Inc. d/b/a Ken's IGA, Westville, Illinois, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the said recommended Order, except that the attached notice is substituted for that of the Administrative Law Judge.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

After a hearing at which all sides had an opportunity to present evidence and state their positions, the National Labor Relations Board found that we have violated the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, and has ordered us to post this notice.

WE WILL NOT interrogate our employees concerning their own or other employees' union activities, sympathies, or desires.

WE WILL NOT threaten our employees with discharge, layoff, shift cancellation, reduced working hours, changes, or other reprisals because they join or assist a union or engaged in other union activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection, or because they selected the Union as their exclusive collective-bargaining agent.

WE WILL NOT threaten our employees that other employees have been discharged for signing a union authorization card.

WE WILL NOT threaten our employees that we believe they started the union campaign.

WE WILL NOT discharge, lay off, or otherwise discriminate against employees because of their union sympathies, activities, or protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT refuse to bargain collectively concerning rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, and other terms and conditions of employment with Food and Commercial Workers Union Local 550-R, affiliated with the United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, AFL-CIO, CLC, in the appropriate unit described below:

> All full-time and regular part-time employees employed by Loy Food Stores, Inc. d/b/a Ken's IGA at its Westville, Illinois, facility; but excluding the store manager, assistant managers, confidential employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act and all other employees.

WE WILL NOT in any other manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of their rights to self-organization, to form, join, or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in other protected concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection, or to refrain from any and all such activities, except to the extent that such right may be affected by an agreement requiring membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment, as authorized in Section 8(a)(3) of the Act, as amended.

[1] The Respondent has requested that the record be reopened and/or amended to include the averred facts that discharged employees Holycross and Harper accepted the Respondent's unconditional offers of reinstatement in November 1980. We hereby deny this request. Even assuming that these two employees were reinstated, we note that the Respondent states that they were not given any backpay for the period between their discharges and their reinstatement, and as such we would find that the reinstatements were insufficient to erase the effects of the Respondent's unfair labor practices or ensure a free and fair election among the Respondent's employees.

In accordance with his dissent in Olympic Medical Corporation, 250 NLRB 146 (1980), Member Jenkins would award interest on the backpay due based on the formula set forth therein.

[2] The General Counsel has excepted to the Administrative Law Judge's refusal to compare signatures for the purpose of authenticating authorization cards and his failure to place the signature samples in the rejected exhibits file. We agree with the General Counsel that the Administrative Law Judge erred by such actions, but we find that this error was not prejudicial. Although we do not endorse the conduct of he counsel for the General Counsel in attempting to resubmit the rejected material by attaching it to his brief to the Administrative Law Judge, we disavow the Administrative Law Judge's characterization of that conduct.

[3] The Respondent has excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Administrative Law Judge. It is the Board's established policy not to overrule an administrative law judge's resolutions with respect to credibility unless the clear preponderance of all of the relevant evidence convinces us that the resolutions are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, Inc., 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing his findings.

259 NLRB No. 35

WE WILL recognize and, upon request, meet with and bargain collectively in good faith with Food and Commercial Workers Union Local 550-R, affiliated with the United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, AFL-CIO, CLC, as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of all our employees in the appropriate unit; and, if any understanding is reached, embody such understanding in a written and signed agreement.

WE WILL offer Brad Holycross and Phil Harper immediate and full reinstatement to their former positions or, if such positions no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or other rights and privileges, and make them whole for any loss of earnings they may have suffered as a result of our discrimination against them, plus interest.

KEN'S IGA

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

RICHARD L. DENISON, Administrative Law Judge: This case was heard in Champaign, Illinois, on October 20, 21, and 22, 1980, based on a charge filed by Food and Commercial Workers Union Local 550-R, affiliated with the United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, AFL-CIO, CLC, at times referred to herein as the Union or the Charging Party, on March 5, 1980.[1] The complaint, issued April 29 and amended at the hearing, alleges violations of Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (5) of the Act. The General Counsel contends that immediately prior to the Respondent's rejection of the Union's request for recognition, based on an asserted authorization card majority, the Respondent discharged two employees, and engaged in numerous acts of interference, restraint, and coercion, which precluded the holding of a fair election in an appropriate unit of the Respondent's employees.

The Respondent's answer, as amended, denies the allegations of unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint.

Upon the entire record in the case, including my observation of the witnesses and consideration of the briefs, I make the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

The complaint alleges and the answer admits that at all times material herein the Respondent is and has been an Illinois corporation with an office and place of business located at Westville, Illinois, where it is engaged in the business of the retail selling of foodstuffs and related items. During the 12-month period preceding the issuance of the complaint, a representative period, in the course and conduct of its business operations, the Respondent derived gross revenues in excess of $500,000, and, in the course and conduct of its business operations, the Respondent purchased and caused to be transferred and delivered to its Westville, Illinois, facility, goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly from points outside the State of Illinois. I find that the Respondent is, and has been at all times material herein, an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

The Union is, and has been at all times material herein, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. SUPERVISORY STATUS

Based on paragraph 4 of both the complaint and the answer, I find that at all times material herein, the following named persons occupied the positions set opposite their respective names, and have been, and are, agents of the Respondent at its Westville, Illinois, facility, acting on its behalf, and are supervisors within the meaning of Section 2(11) of the Act:

Kennard R. Davis	President
Gene Engle	Store Manager
Paul Baldwin	Assistant Manager
Michael Farmer	Assistant Manager
William Delp	Assistant Manager

IV. APPROPRIATE UNIT

Paragraph 7(a) of the complaint, as amended, alleges, and the Respondent's answer, as amended, admits that all full-time and regular part-time employees employed by the Respondent at its Westville, Illinois, facility; but excluding the store manager, assistant managers, confidential employees, guards, and supervisors as defined in the Act and all other employees, constitute a unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act, and I so find.

---

[1] The name of the Charging Party and the name of the Respondent appear as amended at the hearing.

All dates are in 1980, unless otherwise specified.

V. THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. A Union Campaign Begins at the Respondent's Store

The Respondent, a retail grocery store in Westville, Illinois, is affiliated with the Independent Grocers Association, commonly known as IGA. As of late February 1980, utilizing a work force of 5 supervisors and 30 part-time and full-time employees, as stipulated, the Respondent operated its business on a 3-shift, 24-hour-per-day, 7-day-per-week basis.

Terri Keller, a regular part-time checker, initiated the union activity at Ken's IGA by phoning Jim Newman, the Union's business agent, on January 17. After discussing with Keller the methods and procedures for conducting a card-signing drive, Newman asked for a list of employees' names and addresses and promised to send her a supply of authorization cards for her use in beginning the campaign. She received these cards on January 18, signed one, returned it to the Union by mail together with the employee list, and gave the remaining cards to employees at the store.

After receiving the list compiled by Keller, containing the names of 24 employees at the store including Meat Manager Bill Delp and Assistant Manager Willie Delp, on January 21 Business Agent David Kemp was assigned the responsibility of conducting the drive to organize the Respondent. Immediately thereafter, he mailed two authorization cards to each person whose name appeared on the list. At various times thereafter, as described in detail in the record, Kemp held union meetings at employees' homes. He solicited and received signed authorization cards both at these meetings and through the mail. The dated authorization cards in evidence show that as of January 29, in addition to Keller, cashiers Myra Nickle, Delores Nightlinger, and Rita Wynn, and checker Diana Roberts had signed union authorization cards.

B. Store Manager Engle's January 29 Meeting With Employees

Based on undisputed testimony by Owner Kennard R. Davis and Store Manager Gene H. Engle, the Respondent became concerned about its low gross profit and sales per man-hour ratio after they received the profit-and-loss statement for the end of 1979 and a visit from Zone Manager Lee Singleton emphasizing these deficiencies. In the meantime, Assistant Manager Mike Farmer told Engle and Davis that he had received the union card through the mail, and that a union organizer had stopped by his house while he was away. When Davis advised Singleton of this development, he instructed Davis not to accept the cards. Having all of these developments in mind, Davis and Engle had a number of informal talks in which they discussed what should be done. In addition to the store's economic problems, they also discussed the subject of the Union.[2] The end result of these conversations was that Davis decided that Engle should hold a meeting with the employees to talk about ways to improve the Company's economic circumstances and to give the Respondent's views concerning the Union.

Pursuant to a posted notice, the meeting was held at the store at 7 p.m. on January 29.[3] Only the checkers, stockboys, Davis, Engle, and Assistant Manager Paul Baldwin attended. Based on the estimates of Engle and Davis, the meeting lasted between approximately 1 to 2 hours. Engle was the only person to speak on behalf of the store's management. Although the meeting was ostensibly called mainly to discuss the store's unacceptable profit level, Engle, nevertheless, began by discussing the Union. He thanked the employees for attending, stated he understood there were some cards being circulated by a union, and expressed the hope that the employees would reconsider before signing, since he would rather deal personally with each individual on a one-on-one basis instead of involving a third party. The remainder of Engle's remarks about the Union were made in response to a question by Terri Keller, and a remark by cashier Margaret Valongeon. According to Engle and Davis, Keller asked if the employees would be fired if they signed cards, and Engle answered no, that that was her right as an individual and as an employee. Then Valongeon interjected, "No, he can't fire you, because that would be against our constitutional rights," to which Engle responded, "No, but the union recognizes that I have a right to make a profit, even if it means reduced store hours causing employee layoff." Engle and Davis testified that the remainder of the meeting was devoted to a review of the Company's financial problem, and to solicited suggestions from the employees as to how the adverse situation could be remedied.

Cashier Myra Nickle testified that the meeting was the first to be held in approximately a year and a half. It began shortly after 7 p.m. when Engle stated he had heard the employees received union cards by mail. He said that it did not matter if they were green, yellow, or blue, that the employees should make up their own minds whether or sign them. He continued, however, by saying that if the Union did get in, there would be a layoff. He said that the Union promised a lot of things, but that they did not always come through. There was also high cost and union dues. At approximately this point Terri Keller came into the meeting, slightly late. She asked if they signed cards, would they be fired, and Engle answered that he had no way of knowing who had signed cards, but that if a union did get in the hours would be cut. He said that he could not fire the employees, but he could lay them off. Then Engle talked about the economic conditions at the store. He asked the employees to estimate how much profit they made from a dollar. The employees were surprised to learn how small the Company's margin of profit was. Engle explained that the store was losing $800 or $900 a week and asked for suggestions for improvement. Prices not being changed at the end of a sale, customer theft, and deposits on soft drinks were the main areas mentioned. He emphasized that it was necessary for the store to make a profit, and that in order to maintain that profit he could lay people off.

[2] Engle could not remember what he said to Davis during these discussions although he recalled that the subject of the Union "came up in conversation quite often." Davis remembered discussing employees' voting preferences with Engle, but could not remember when this topic was explored.

[3] Only Engle was uncertain of the date, which he believed to be January 28, but had failed to write anything down about the meeting and, consequently, could not remember. Other witnesses definitely fixed the date as January 29, and they are credited.

Terri Keller testified that she arrived at the point in Engle's remarks where he was saying that the Union makes a lot of promises, charges dues, but does not always deliver. He said they could ask Rita Wynn. He said he could not afford to keep all of them if the Union came in. Then he began talking about the Company's profits and losses and asked for a couple of the employees to estimate what they thought he made on the dollar. Their estimates were high, and he emphasized that he was not making as much as they thought. Then Keller asked if they signed union cards, would they be fired, and Engle answered no, because he did not know who signed. But then he said, "I do have the power to lay you off." Then Margaret Valongeon, another cashier, spoke up and said that he could not do that, because if he laid them off he would have to bring them back before he hired anyone else. Engle answered that he could not afford to keep them and would have to cut hours if the Union came in. Engle said that the store was losing $800 or $900 a week and asked for the employees to make suggestions on how to improve profits. Suggestions by employees were made, including considerable discussion about mismarked off-sale items and the failure to mark soft drinks. Keller also remembered Engle stating that it was up to each of the employees to decide for themselves concerning the Union.

Engle denied threatening the assembled employees with discharge or layoff if they signed cards or if the Union came in. However, Engle found it impossible while testifying to remember in any detail his actual remarks to the assembled workers. He emphasized that he had failed to make notes of anything he said. I was not impressed with his memory. Likewise, Davis' testimony concerning Engle's remarks about the Union were couched in general terms, and contained vague qualifying phrases, e.g., "something of that nature," and "something to the effect." Considering that the Company knew well in advance the message that it wished to communicate to the employees, while the employees did not know, I find Nickle's and Keller's versions more detailed and precise concerning that area of the meeting in which the topic of the Union was discussed. I credit their versions and find that, in his January 29 address, Engle did in fact threaten the employees with reduced hours, with a layoff, and some of them would go, if the Union came in, or if they signed union cards. Thus, the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act in this portion of Engle's speech, as alleged in paragraphs 5(a)(1), (2), and (3) of the complaint, as amended.

C. Further Interrogation and Threats by the Store's Supervision

According to Diana Roberts, a third-shift checker at the Respondent's store, on or about February 4 she was in the dairy department when Gene Engle engaged her in conversation concerning the Union in the presence of Assistant Manager William Delp. Engle said he knew the Union was trying to get in. Then he stated that he did not care whether employees signed cards, but that if the Union got in they would have to shut down the third shift, because there was no way they could afford to keep it open. Engle denied threatening employees that their work hours would be reduced if the Union succeeded in organizing the Respondent, but later qualified that denial by stating generally that he did not remember ever talking about the Union to any employee. Third-Shift Assistant Manager Delp testified that he remembered the conversation in question, which occurred about 7 a.m. as they were preparing to leave work at the end of the shift. Although Delp also had difficulty remembering all that was said, he did recall Engle stating that while there was not going to be a layoff, "We would be put down to the second or first shift if it closes down, the third shift." Delp could not recall precisely whether Engle's remarks were made on the occasion of the conversation with Roberts, or on another occasion around that time. Nevertheless, Delp's testimony clearly tends to corroborate that of Roberts and refute Engle's qualified denial. I credit Roberts and find that the Respondent, through Engle, threatened an employee that the third shift would be eliminated if the Union got in, as alleged in paragraph 5(e) of the complaint as amended.[4]

Myra Nickle testified that on February 15 about 5 p.m. in the store, Assistant Manager Paul Baldwin began to talk to her about the Union. No one else was present. He said that she should be ashamed of herself for starting the Union, and, when Nickle protested that she did not start the Union, Baldwin asked, "Well, then, who did?" When Nickle answered that she did not know and if she did would not tell him. Baldwin retorted, "You're hurting me by doing this, you know." Nickle asked what he meant, and Baldwin said, "Well, I had a talk with Gene and Ken, and they told me that I am going to lose my job. They said if they kept me I would be a stockboy, and that would be lower pay." The conversation ended at this point, when a customer interrupted.

Baldwin did not testify at any point in the hearing. Nickle's testimony was not impaired by cross-examination. I credit her testimony and find that the Respondent, through Baldwin, unlawfully interrogated Nickle concerning who started the Union, and threatened her that store employees' hours would be reduced if the Union came in, in violation of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, as alleged in paragraphs 5(c)(1) and (3). I also find that Baldwin's remark that Nickle should be ashamed of herself for starting the Union is violative of Section 8(a)(1), in that through this remark Baldwin coercively conveyed to Nickle the message that the Respondent believed she had instigated the Union's organizational drive, as alleged in paragraph 5(c)(2) of the complaint.

[4] William Delp's uncertainty in his testimony concerning whether he heard one or two conversations between Roberts and Engle about the closing of the third shift caused counsel for the General Counsel to propose a further amendment to the complaint, par. 5(f), alleging that on or about February 4 Engle interrogated Roberts concerning her own and other employees' union activities. A close reading of the record reveals that Delp's testimony contains no account of Engle's having asked any questions during the conversation. The only mention of Engle asking anything about the Union is contained in a double question by counsel for the General Counsel after Delp had completed telling what he remembered of the conversation.

> Q. (By Mr. Somers) Okay. Now, you testified that Mr. Engle asked you if the Union was trying to get in, and that he said he would have to close down the third shift, right? If it did?
> A. Yes. He wasn't sure but he said he might have to.

On redirect examination Delp denied that Engle asked any questions, and no further clarification of this segment of Delp's testimony appears in the record. Under these circumstances, I find that the General Counsel has failed to prove that Gene Engle engaged in unlawful interrogation on or about February 4 as alleged in par. 5(f) of the complaint.

Myra Nickle further testified that on February 1 Assistant Manager Mike Farmer approached her in the store, alone, and asked, "Did you start this Union?" Upon receiving a negative answer Farmer asked, "Are you sure," and Nickle said that she was sure. Farmer acknowledged that he might have told the investigating Board agent that he had several conversations with employees about the Union during February 1980. He did not deny having a conversation with Myra Nickle about the Union around the time she specified, stating, instead, that he could not remember having such a conversation. Furthermore, although Farmer denied ever having asked Nickle why she started the Union, he did not specifically deny asking her if she started the Union—an entirely different question. Therefore, Nickle's testimony about the February 1 incident stands undenied and is credited. I find that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, through Farmer, by interrogating Nickle concerning her union activities, as alleged in paragraph 5(d) of the complaint.

Alleged discriminatee Brad Holycross testified that at the outset of his discharge interview with Gene Engle, alone, on February 28 at the store, Engle began by stating that "[W]ith all the union getting in here, there's going to be a lot of changes and a lot of people laid off." Engle denied making this threat. However, Holycross' testimony concerning Engle's alleged remarks is consistent with the statements found to have been made by Engle during his January 29 address to the assembled employees. I credit Holycross, who impressed me as an honest witness, and find that the Respondent, through Engle, threatened him during Holycross' discharge interview on February 28 as alleged in paragraph 5(b) of the complaint.

Alleged discriminatee Phillip Harper testified that on February 28, in the grocery area of the store, he heard Paul Baldwin tell Michael Farmer that when the Union got in there would be a layoff and many people would be laid off. Shortly thereafter Harper, being concerned about this statement, approached Baldwin, alone, in the area of the magazine rack and asked for more details. Baldwin responded they would cut back, and there would be only one assistant manager, Farmer, because he had more seniority than Baldwin, who would be reduced to a full-time stockboy. Continuing, Baldwin pointed his finger at Harper and said Harper would not have a job because he did not have enough seniority. Referring to himself, Baldwin said he would not be able to make it as a full-time stockboy because it did not pay enough, and if the Union got in he would probably have to quit, because if they were cutting hours he would not get that many hours and it would not be worth it. Baldwin said if the Union got in there would be a layoff and the store hours would be cut. Baldwin did not testify. Harper exhibited a reasonably good memory and was not questioned about this incident on cross-examination. I credit his testimony and find that the Respondent, through Baldwin, threatened Harper with a layoff if the Union came in, as alleged in paragraph 5(c)(3) of the complaint.

Based on undisputed and credited testimony by Myra Nickle, I find that on February 29 in the store, about 11 p.m., following the discharges of Holycross and Harper, Nickle approached Paul Baldwin and asked him why they had been fired. Baldwin answered that he did not know what had happened to Brad Holycross or why he was fired. Concerning Harper, Baldwin said he had been told by Gene Engle that he intended to keep Harper because he was a no vote for the Union, but then Engle heard that he had signed a card and planned to release Harper that evening after work. However, he said, when Engle found a lot of outdated and spoiled cottage cheese, he released Harper that morning. In his testimony, Engle admitted talking with Davis about employees' voting preferences, and with Baldwin about the Union. I find that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by threatening Nickle that one of her fellow employees had been fired because he signed a union card, as alleged in paragraph 5(c)(4) of the complaint.

D. The Discharges of Brad Holycross and Phil Harper

Brad Allan Holycross worked as a part-time stockboy on Saturdays and Sundays on the second shift from June 1979 until his discharge on February 28. He signed a union card on February 18 at a union meeting at Myra Nickle's home. Holycross' duties consisted of price marking items, stocking shelves, rotating products in the dairy case, and bagging and carrying out groceries for customers. Included within this general description of Holycross' duties was the specific task of changing the price marking on items from a sale price back to the regular price after the expiration of the sale. Holycross was not the only stockperson who worked Saturdays under the supervision of Gene Engle and Assistant Manager Mike Farmer, who conceded that the stockboys occasionally make mistakes in changing prices and also that the price lists from which they work are occasionally in error. The Respondent's president, Ken Davis, described Holycross' work performance prior to the January 29 employee meeting, as neither good nor bad.

During that portion of the January 29 employee meeting which was devoted to receiving employees' suggestions on how to improve profits, one of the topics discussed was mismarked off-sale items. Following the meeting, according to Davis, he talked with Mike Farmer, the Saturday night supervisor, who told him that remarking the off-sale items was the responsibility of Brad Holycross. Farmer, on the other hand, remembered Davis talking to him about profit and loss during the week after the meeting and stating that a lot of the price changes were not getting done. Farmer made no mention of Davis having asked for the identity of the employee responsible for changing the prices, or his having told Davis that Holycross performed this function. Farmer did testify that he simply told Holycross "that Ken was a little unhappy because of the pricing wasn't getting completely done." Thereafter, according to Farmer, during the remainder of January and on into February, he "noticed a few things" on occasion which had not been changed back to the regular price, but was unable to recall which items had not been changed. Farmer was unable to recall whether he ever discussed this problem with Holycross again. When asked if he ever discussed the matter with Ken Davis again, Farmer hesitated and answered, "I think I did." Farmer testified that he was never consulted by Ken Davis or Gene Engle about discharging Holycross for failure to change back sale items on Saturday night. He found out that Holycross had been discharged after the fact, when Engle told him he had let Brad go. According to Farmer, Engle never told him the reason for Holycross' discharge. He testified that he did not know the reason Holycross was terminated, but "I pretty well guessed." Farmer was never asked to elaborate on this response.[5]

Holycross was discharged on February 28 by Engle during a phone conversation with Holycross' mother, in which he stated that he was going to lay off her son and asked her to have Holycross contact him at the store. According to Engle, he acted upon instructions from Davis and fired Holycross solely because of his erroneous work in connection with the off-sale list. Engle's asserted reason for Holycross' discharge is consistent with the Respondent's April 2 position letter, but partially inconsistent with Davis' testimony that Holycross was released also for the purpose of reducing man-hours and improving the store's sale-per-man-hour ratio. Thus, it is clear that there are numerous inconsistencies in the testimonies of the Respondent's supervisors with respect to the events leading up to Holycross' termination. Furthermore, Davis and Engle acknowledged that during a meeting on February 25, only 3 days before Holycross' discharge (and 4 days before Harper's termination), the two men discussed the voting preferences of store employees with respect to a possible union election, at a time when they knew through Assistant Manager Farmer that almost all the employees had attended a union meeting on February 18. Davis admitted that the voting preferences of Holycross and Harper were specifically discussed at the same time when they were discussing their dissatisfaction with Holycross' and Harper's work.

All of these circumstances discussed above strongly suggest that the Respondent's expressed concern over Holycross' alleged failure to remark unidentified off-sale items is a pretext, and that the real reason for his termination was that the Respondent suspected he favored having the Union as his collective-bargaining representative. In my view, this perspective concerning the true reason for Holycross' discharge is confirmed by Engle's statement during his final interview with Holycross on February 28 in the back room of the store that, "With all the union getting in here, there's going to be a lot of changes and a lot of people laid off." In the light of that statement, Engle's further explanation to Holycross that he was doing the off-sale list wrong, his hair was too long, and Holycross' parents had cheated his son on the sale of a used television set is simply incredible and only serves to reinforce the conclusion that the Respondent was groping for a pretext with which to rid itself of a union adherent it could operate without. It is little wonder that the interview ended with Engle failing to answer Holycross' question about what he had done wrong with respect to the off-sale list. I find that the reasons espoused by the Respondent for Brad Holycross' discharge are pretexts and that he was discharged because of his known or suspected union sympathies and activities in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

Phillip Harper worked as a full-time stockboy on the first shift, Monday through Friday. His immediate supervisor was Gene Engle. His duties were the same as those of Brad Holycross, and specifically included filling the dairy case. Because of the relatively short spoilage time, dairy products are date coded. When they become outdated they must eventually be removed. On February 29 Gene Engle telephoned the Harper home and told Phillip Harper's mother that he did not need Phillip any more, that he had been dissatisfied with his work because he had found outdated cottage cheese in the dairy case. In both Engle's and Mrs. Harper's versions of this conversation Phillip Harper's discharge was attributed by Engle to the discovery of the outdated cottage cheese. Davis, on the other hand, testified that Engle had told him Harper had failed to rotate milk on the evening of February 28. This inconsistency remains unresolved. Harper received no warning or opportunity to improve prior to his discharge. Furthermore, I find the Respondent failed to prove that Harper was primarily responsible for the dairy case since, at the least, the record reveals that other stockboys on other shifts also had the same duties as Harper, including the dairy case. These inconsistencies suggest that the asserted reason for Harper's discharge is a pretext.

There are other indicators which also point in this direction. Harper was hired in June 1979 and between that time and October performed the duties of a part-time stockboy on both days and nights. Although, according to Engle, Harper could not keep up with the work and was removed from the night crew, he was not fired because, in Engle's words, "He was better than nothing." Nevertheless, despite this dim appraisal of Harper's performance, in late October 1979 when full-time stockboy Paul Barber was fired and part-time stockboy Bart Atwood refused full-time work, Engle promoted Harper to the job instead of looking elsewhere. Moreover, his duties and responsibilities were increased. According to Engle and Davis, during the next 3 months Harper's deficiencies became readily apparent, and they discussed his poor attitude toward his job with him on a number of occasions. However, in contradiction of his contention, they also stated that during this period Harper did not commit any serious errors. Thus, the Respondent condoned whatever shortcomings Harper may have possessed, and Harper remained on the job until after it learned of the Union's organizational drive and made the previously discussed assessment of Harper's sympathies and activities concerning the Union. The extent of the Respondent's maintenance of an understanding attitude toward Harper, until the union question came upon the scene, is clearly revealed by its failure to discharge Harper when he and stockboy Chad Fueyo drank 4 quarts of Busch beer in Harper's car in the store parking lot, and then proceeded to drive the car in reverse through the store's front window.[6] [5] Later in his testimony, on redirect examination, Farmer gave answers pursuant to strongly suggestive leading questions from counsel for the Respondent which tended to show more communication between Farmer, Davis, and Engle with respect to the off-sale item pricing errors allegedly involving Holycross and, in addition, tended to emphasize more participation by Farmer in the process leading up to Holycross' release. Under all the circumstances, I am persuaded that Farmer's earlier version is the most reliable account.

As noted earlier in this Decision, in discussing the events leading up to the termination of Brad Holycross, Engle and Davis met on February 25 and discussed Harper's and Holycross' voting preferences in the light of their knowledge of the union campaign, and the report of Assistant Manager Farmer that almost all the employees had attended a union meeting on February 18. Engle also discussed the union situation with the assistant managers. Nevertheless, Engle insisted that it was his discovery of outdated Weight Watchers milk and cottage cheese in the dairy case which angered him and precipitated Harper's termination. On cross-examination, however, Engle conceded that he was unable to recall the coded dates stamped on the containers and was even unable to explain how to interpret the coded numbers. Having considered all of the evidence presented with respect to Harper's discharge, including the significant portions of testimony described above, I can only find and conclude, as I do, that the reason offered by the Respondent for Harper's termination is a pretext, and that he was actually discharged because of his known or suspected union activities and sympathies. The accuracy of this assessment is further confirmed by the undisputed testimony of Myra Nickle concerning her conversation with Paul Baldwin in the store about 11 p.m. on February 29. On that occasion Baldwin told Nickle that Engle had taken advantage of his discovery of the outdated cottage cheese to fire Harper that morning, instead of implementing his original plan to release Harper that evening after work, because he had heard that Harper had signed a union card. I find that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act by discharging Phillip Harper on February 29.

E. The Alleged Violation of Section 8(a)(5) of the Act

Paragraph 7(b) of the complaint alleges that on or about February 21 a majority of Respondent's employees in the admitted appropriate unit, set forth in section IV of this Decision, designated and selected the Union as their collective-bargaining representative. Paragraphs 7(d) and 8, respectively, allege that the Union requested recognition on February 29, and since that time the Respondent has failed and refused to recognize the Union as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of its unit employees. The General Counsel alleges in paragraph 12 of the complaint that the Respondent's unfair labor practices constitute a course of conduct precluding the holding of a fair election among the employees in the unit and are so serious and substantial in character and effect as to warrant the entry of a remedial order requiring the Respondent as of February 21 to recognize and bargain with the Union. Counsel for the General Counsel argues that the Respondent's actions dissipated the Union's support and dampened continued enthusiasm for union activity so as to effectively preclude the filing of a representation petition and the holding of a fair and free election.

The Respondent contends, apart from arguing that no unfair labor practices were committed, that the General Counsel has failed to show that the unfair labor practices were so coercive, pervasive, or extensive as to require a bargaining order, or that the application of traditional remedies would not insure a fair election. The Respondent also argues that the conduct which comprises the unfair labor practices did not affect the employees, that a large majority of the authorization cards were signed after the bulk of the illegal action had occurred, and that the Union secured its last authorization cards and sent its bargaining demand to the Respondent after all of the alleged unlawful conduct had been committed.

Joint Exhibit J-1, signed by a representative of each party to this proceeding, shows that as of February 29, the date of the Union's letter, in evidence, lawfully requesting recognition, the appropriate collective-bargaining unit consisted of 30 employees. On March 6 the Respondent rejected the Union's demand for recognition asserting a good-faith doubt of its majority status. At the hearing in this matter, the General Counsel introduced into evidence 19 authenticated authorization cards from bargaining unit employees, 16 of which were signed between January 18 and February 21. Of the remaining cards, two were dated February 28, and the last card was dated February 29, the date of the Union's written demand for recognition.[7] Each of the 19 authorization cards was received into evidence without objection, except for General Counsel's Exhibit 22, the authorization card of Dorothy Wilson, dated February 29. This card was introduced into evidence through the testimony of Delores Nightlinger who, after observing Wilson sign the card on that date, accepted it from Wilson and thereafter turned it in to Union Representative Kemp. Under these circumstances, I find that Wilson's card has been properly authenticated and is valid, despite the fact that Wilson did not fill in the blank spaces on the card provided for the name of the company, the store address and number, and her job title.

[6] Neither employee was disciplined in any manner. Engle's explanation for this exercise in leniency was that the employees were off duty at the time of the incident, and if he had discharged them he would not have anyone to run the store since Westville was a small town. The contrast between the Respondent's inaction with respect to this incident, and its swift application of the ultimate sanction of discharge following the advent of the union campaign, when Harper, or possibly someone else, failed to rotate the cottage cheese, is striking, to say the least.

[7] Counsel for the General Counsel also offered into evidence copies of signatures (G.C. Exhs. 23-26 and 30) for comparison by the Administrative Law Judge for the purpose of authenticity corroboration. I rejected the exhibits on the basis of a lack of technical training as a handwriting expert and refused to permit these exhibits to be placed in the rejected exhibit file. Counsel for the General Counsel has attached photostatic copies of these rejected exhibits to his brief "for signature comparison, if necessary," and as "further evidence of the validity of four cards." These attachments to General Counsel's brief are stricken sua sponte and have not been considered. Regardless of whether my ruling was correct or incorrect, the sending of case related materials outside the record to the Administrative Law Judge by counsel for the General Counsel's attachment of these excluded documents to his brief, however well intentioned, is, to say the least, unprofessional and not to be encouraged. United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America and Scott and Duncan, Inc., 239 NLRB 1370, 1373, fn. 1 (1979).

The authorization cards are clear and unambiguous on their face. They state, "I . . . hereby authorize United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, AFL-CIO, or its chartered local union to represent me for the purposes of collective bargaining, respecting rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, or other conditions of employment, in accordance with applicable law." There is no evidence in the record to show that any of the cardsigners were told or assured that their card was to be used solely for the purpose of obtaining an election. Indeed, there is no evidence in the record from the card solicitors, the card signers, or anyone else, that any misrepresentation of any kind was made. I find that all of the cards introduced into evidence by the General Counsel are valid, and, therefore, I further find that on February 21, and thereafter, a majority of the Respondent's unit employees designated and selected the Union as their exclusive collective-bargaining representative.

Thus, the sole remaining question to be resolved is whether under the standards enunciated by the United States Supreme Court in N.L.R.B. v. Gissel Packing Co., Inc., et al., 395 U.S. 575, 614-615 (1969), the Respondent's unfair labor practices warrant the issuance of a bargaining order. In the Gissel decision the Court stated, in part (at 614-615):

> The only effect of our holding here is to approve the Board's use of the bargaining order in less extraordinary cases marked by less pervasive practices which nonetheless still have the tendency to undermine majority strength and impede the election processes. The Board's authority to issue such an order on a lesser showing of employer misconduct is appropriate, we should reemphasize, where there is also a showing that at one point the union had a majority; in such a case, of course, effectuating ascertainable employee free choice becomes as important a goal as deterring employer misbehavior. In fashioning a remedy in the exercise of its discretion, then, the Board can properly take into consideration the extensiveness of an employer's unfair practices in terms of their past effect on election conditions and the likelihood of their recurrence in the future. If the Board finds that the possibility of erasing the effects of past practices and of ensuring a fair election (or a fair rerun) by the use of traditional remedies, though present, is slight and that employee sentiment once expressed through cards would, on balance, be better protected by a bargaining order, then such an order should issue.

The record shows that the Respondent began its course of unlawful conduct on January 29 during a store meeting with employees shortly after it learned of the beginning of the Union's organizational drive, and steadily thereafter increased its antiunion activities in severity and number of occurrences, culminating with the discharge of Phillip Harper on February 29, the date on which the last authorization card in evidence was signed. Thus, the Respondent's contentions, as set forth above, are not supported by the facts. After February 21, at which time the Union had obtained a one-card majority, only three additional authorization cards were obtained from the 30-employee unit during the period in which the Respondent's unlawful activity reached its climax, and none following the discharge of one-fifthteenth of its work force. Thus, analysis of the increasing seriousness of the Respondent's unfair labor practices in correlation with the declining success of the Union's organizational activities persuades me that the application of traditional Board remedies in the instant case would be insufficient, and that the holding of a fair and free election under such circumstances is highly unlikely. I therefore find the issuance of a bargaining order, as part of an appropriate remedy for the unfair labor practices committed, necessary. I find that the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act on February 21 and thereafter by failing and refusing to bargain with the Union as the exclusive representative of its employees in the appropriate unit. In accordance with the principles enunciated by the Board in Trading Port, Inc., 219 NLRB 298 (1975), I find that the Respondent had an obligation to bargain with the Union as of February 21, 1980, by which date the Respondent had clearly embarked on a clear course of unlawful conduct which undermined the Union's majority status and made the holding of a fair election improbable.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. The Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. By threatening employees with discharge, layoff, reduced hours, changes, or other reprisals if they signed union cards, joined, engaged in union activities, or selected the Union as their collective-bargaining representative; by interrogating employees concerning their own or other employees' union activities, sympathies, or desires; by threatening an employee that the Respondent believed that employee started the Union; by threatening employees that another employee had been fired because he signed a union card; and by threatening employees with the elimination of the third shift in the store, the Respondent through its supervisors and agents violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

4. By discharging Brad Holycross on February 28 and Phillip Harper on February 29 because of their known or suspected union sympathies and activities, the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

5. The collective-bargaining unit set forth in section IV of this Decision constitutes a unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act.

6. Beginning on February 21, 1980, and at all times thereafter, the Union represented a majority of the employees in the unit set forth in section IV of this Decision, and is, and has been the exclusive representative of said employees for the purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(a) of the Act.

7. By refusing to recognize and bargain collectively with the Union with respect to the rates of pay, hours of employment, and other terms and conditions of employment of the employees in the appropriate unit on and after February 21, 1980, by which date it had embarked on a clear course of unlawful conduct which undermined the Union's majority status and made the holding of a fair election improbable, the Respondent violated Section 8(a)(5) and (1) of the Act.

8. The aforesaid unfair labor practices are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

9. The Respondent has not violated the Act in any respects other than those specifically found.[8]

THE REMEDY

Having found that the Respondent has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I find it necessary to order that the Respondent cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

Having discriminatorily discharged Brad Holycross and Phillip Harper, I find it necessary to order that the Respondent offer them immediate and full reinstatement with backpay computed on a quarterly basis, plus interest as prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Company, 90 NLRB 289 (1950), and Florida Steel Corporation, 231 NLRB 651 (1977).[9]

Since the Respondent unlawfully refused to bargain with the Union, I shall also order the Respondent to bargain with Food and Commercial Workers Union Local 550-R, affiliated with the United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, AFL-CIO, CLC, effective February 21, 1980, and to post an appropriate notice. Moreover, since I find that the unfair labor practices committed by the Respondent were serious in nature and struck at the very heart of rights intended to be protected by the Act, I find a broad cease-and-desist order is warranted.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact, conclusions of law, and the entire record, and pursuant to Section 10(c) of the Act, I hereby issue the following recommended:

ORDER[10]

The Respondent, Loy Food Stores, Inc. d/b/a Ken's IGA, Westville, Illinois, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Interrogating employees concerning their own or other employees' union activities, sympathies, or desires.

(b) Threatening employees with discharge, layoff, reduced hours, changes, or other reprisals if they signed union cards, joined, engaged in union activities, or selected the Union as their collective-bargaining representative; interrogating employees concerning their own or other employees' union activities, sympathies, or desires; threatening an employee that the Respondent believed that employee started the Union; threatening employees that another employee had been fired because he signed a union card; and threatening employees with the elimination of the third shift in the store.

(c) Discharging, laying off, or otherwise discriminating against employees in regard to hire and tenure of employment, or any term or condition of employment, because they joined or assisted Food and Commercial Workers Union Local 550-R, affiliated with the United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, AFL-CIO, CLC, or any other labor organization, or because they engaged in union activities or protected concerted activities.

(d) Refusing to bargain collectively concerning rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, and other terms and conditions of employment, with Food and Commercial Workers Union Local 550-R, affiliated with the United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, AFL-CIO, CLC, as the exclusive representative of all employees in the appropriate unit described in section IV of this Decision.

(e) In any other manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights to self-organization, to form, join, or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in other protected concerted activities for the purposes of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection, or to refrain from any and all such activities, except to the extent that such right may be affected by an agreement requiring membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment, as authorized in Section 8(a)(3) of the Act, as amended.

2. Take the following affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Upon request, recognize, meet with and bargain collectively in good faith with the Food and Commercial Workers Union Local 550-R, affiliated with the United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, AFL-CIO, CLC, as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of all our employees in the appropriate unit set forth in section IV of this Decision; and, if any understanding is reached, embody such understanding in a written and signed agreement.

[8] The complaint, as amended at the hearing, contains no allegation and the record contains no evidence which would support a finding that the Respondent conveyed to employees the impression that their union activities were under surveillance, which contention is raised for the first time on p. 46 of the General Counsel's brief. Nor do I make any finding concerning the contentions which emerge for the first time in that document and were not fully litigated at the hearing, concerning the awarding of unilateral wage increases to employees without first notifying and bargaining with the Union. In any event, with respect to this latter contention, a broad bargaining order found herein to be appropriate would encompass the complained of conduct.

[9] See, generally, Isis Plumbing & Heating Co., 318 NLRB 761 (1962).

[10] In the event no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Rules and Regulations of the National Labor Relations Board, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order herein shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules and Regulations, be adopted by the Board and become its findings, conclusions, and Order, and all objections thereto shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

(b) Offer Brad Holycross and Phillip Harper immediate and full reinstatement to their former positions or, if such positions no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions, without prejudice to their seniority or other rights and privileges, and make them whole for any loss of earnings, in the manner set forth in the section of this Decision entitled "The Remedy."

(c) Preserve and, upon request, make available to the Board or its agents, for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(d) Post at its Westville, Illinois, store, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[11] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 33, after being signed by Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by the Respondent immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the Respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Notify the Regional Director for Region 33, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps the Respondent has taken to comply herewith.

IT IS ALSO ORDERED that the complaint, as amended, be dismissed to the extent it alleges violations of the Act not found herein.

---

[11] In the event that this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

DECISION AND DIRECTION OF ELECTION

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

Upon a petition for representation filed on November 14, 1980, under Section 9(a) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer Thomas M. Good on December 11, 1980. Following the hearing and pursuant to Section 102.67 of the National Labor Relations Board Rules and Regulations, Series 8, as amended, and by direction of the Regional Director for Region 1, this proceeding was transferred to the Board for decision. Thereafter, the Employer filed a brief.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has reviewed the Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing and finds they are free from prejudicial error. They are hereby affirmed.[2]

Upon the entire record in this proceeding, the Board finds:

1. The Employer, a California corporation with corporate headquarters in Van Nuys, California, maintains a branch facility in Rocky Hill, Connecticut, also known as the Hartford office, where it is engaged in staffing and supplying security officers to employers within the State of Connecticut. Between January 1, 1980, and December 11, 1980, the Hartford office obtained gross revenues amounting to approximately $225,000 from services furnished to Travelers Insurance Company; gross revenues amounting to approximately $136,000 from services to The New Haven Register; and gross revenues amounting to approximately $90,000 from services to The Farley Company. The parties stipulated that these companies are employers within the jurisdiction of the Board.

We find that the Employer is engaged in commerce within the meaning of the Act and that it will effectuate the policies of the Act to assert jurisdiction herein.

2. The Employer contests Petitioner's status as a labor organization. It questions the stability of Petitioner's structure and the participation of members in the organization.

Also, the Employer disputes whether Petitioner acts with the purpose of advancing employee interests instead of the interests of particular individuals.

Testimony at the hearing shows that Petitioner was formed in August 1980, that employees participate in the organization, that its purpose is to represent employees on wages, hours, and other working conditions, and its function is to negotiate bargaining agreements with management. Petitioner is affiliated with the Federation of Special Police and Law Enforcement Officers (herein Federation), and has a constitution and bylaws, officers, and an executive board. From the date of its formation to the date of the hearing, a period of about 4 months, Petitioner had sought to organize employees, had discussed with employees complaints they had against their employer, had met with employees who had signed union authorization cards and reported to them about organizational progress, and had filed several representation petitions and an unfair labor practice charge.

We find that Petitioner is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

The Employer's contentions, based in part on the record in Burns International Security Services, Inc., supra, that allegations of misconduct have been made against Federation, with which Petitioner is affiliated, and certain Federation officials, do not establish that Petitioner is unable to represent the interests of employees or is disqualified from representing employees. See the discussion of these contentions in the Burns Decision at Appendix, Supplementary Objection No. 5.

3. A question affecting commerce exists concerning the representation of certain employees of the Employer within the meaning of Section 9(c)(1) and Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

4. The parties stipulated and we find that the following employees constitute an appropriate unit for the purposes of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act:

> All full-time and regular part-time security officers employed from the Employer's Rocky Hill, Connecticut, location, but excluding all supervisors,[3] and professional employees as defined in the Act.

Some of the security officers are designated "sergeants" and "lieutenants." These designations are based on a promotional system which confers increases in rank along with merit wage increases. Despite the designations, the sergeants and lieutenants perform essentially the same duties as other security officers. They do not schedule or assign work; they do not hire or fire or effectively recommend such action. We find that the sergeants and lieutenants are not supervisors as defined in the Act, and we include them in the unit.

[1] The name of the Employer appears as amended at the hearing.

[2] The Hearing Officer took administrative notice of the records in Bally's Park Place, Inc., 257 NLRB No. 132 (1981); Burns International Security Services, Inc., 256 NLRB 959 (1981); Wells Fargo Guard Services Division of Baker Protective Services, Inc., 236 NLRB 1196 (1978).

[3] The parties stipulated that field supervisors are supervisors within the meaning of the Act and should be excluded from the unit.

259 NLRB No. 39

5. Petitioner's president testified that Petitioner does not admit to membership employees other than guards and has not attempted to organize nonguards. He also testified that Federation does not admit to membership employees other than guards. The Employer contends, however, that under Section 9(b)(3) of the Act[4] Petitioner may not be certified to represent a unit of guards because of its affiliation with Federation, which the Employer asserts is affiliated with organizations which admit non-guards to membership—the Association of Public and Private Labor Employees (herein APPLE) and Allied International Union of Security Guards and Special Police (herein Allied). In support of its assertion that Federation is affiliated with APPLE and Allied, the Employer relies upon evidence in Bally's Park Place, Inc., supra. In the Decision in that case the Board found only a limited relationship between Federation and APPLE and no present or past affiliation between them that would disqualify the petitioning organization in Bally's Park from certification to represent a guards' unit by virture of its affiliation with Federation. The Board also found that the record in Bally's Park failed to establish that Allied represented employees other than guards, and, consequently, any affiliation between Federation and Allied would not subject a labor organization affiliated with Federation to disqualification from certification under Section 9(b)(3).

Based upon these findings in the Bally's Park Decision concerning Federation's relations to APPLE and Allied we find that Petitioner here is not disqualified under Section 9(b)(3) from certification to represent a guards' unit because of its affiliation with Federation.

[Direction of Election and Excelsior footnote omitted from publication.]

[4] Sec. 9(b)(3) provides in pertinent part that "no labor organization shall be certified as the representative of employees in a bargaining unit of guards if such organization admits to membership, or is affiliated directly or indirectly with an organization which admits to membership, employees other than guards."

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN VAN DE WATER AND MEMBERS FANNING AND ZIMMERMAN

On June 30, 1981, Administrative Law Judge Claude R. Wolfe issued the attached Decision and on July 8, 1981, an erratum thereto in this proceeding. Thereafter, Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the General Counsel filed a brief in support of the Administrative Law Judge's Decision.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge and hereby orders that the Respondent, Teresa Coal Company, Inc., Sidney, Kentucky, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the said recommended Order.

---

[1] Respondent has excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Administrative Law Judge. It is the Board's established policy not to overrule an administrative law judge's resolutions with respect to credibility unless the clear preponderance of all of the relevant evidence convinces us that the resolutions are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, Inc., 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing his findings.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

CLAUDE R. WOLFE, Administrative Law Judge: This case was ably heard by both parties before me in Huntington, West Virginia, and Pikeville, Kentucky, on January 8 and March 25 and 26, 1981, pursuant to charges filed on April 30, 1980, and the complaint issued June 4, 1980. The complaint alleges violations of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, as amended, consisting of the discharge of eight coal miners because they engaged in protected concerted activity, and a threat to discharge employees if they refused to enter the coal mine involved herein.

Respondent denies that it has committed the unfair labor practices alleged. Both parties filed post-trial briefs.

Upon the entire record and my observations of the demeanor of witnesses as they testified, I make the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent is a Kentucky corporation with offices and places of business in Canada and Sidney, Kentucky, where it has been engaged in the mining of coal. During the 12 months preceding the issuance of the complaint, a representative period, Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business operations, purchased and received at its Canada, Kentucky, facility goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000 directly from points outside the State of Kentucky. Respondent is now, and has been at all times material herein, an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Facts Found[1]

The coal seam at Respondent's mine is reached via an entrance way approximately 54 inches high at its lowest point and 18 to 20 feet wide extending about a half mile, or slightly less, from the outside entry to the work station. Prior to the coming of Section Boss Elmer Coyer in January 1980,[2] the men negotiated the entry passage by either walking in or riding in the bucket of a motorized scoop. The bucket measures about 6 by 9 feet, and the entire crew of 12 or 13 men would be carried in the scoop at one time. Scoops are commonly used for such a purpose in area mines, and Ray Chapman, district supervisor, Kentucky Department of Mines and Minerals, convincingly testified that so long as scoops are in good condition they are considered legally safe for usage in transportation of workers underground. Chapman's office has received no complaints, or issued any citations, or found any violations in Respondent's use of scoops. There is no evidence that any employee has suffered any physical injury while riding the scoop.

On those occasions when employees walk into the mine they are paid for the time thus spent, with overtime pay for any portion of that time over and above regular working hours.

Shortly after Elmer Coyer came to the mine in January, he instituted the use of a mantrip to convey workers in and out of the mine. A mantrip is a rectangular conveyance measuring about 8 by 20 feet. The one in use at Respondent's mine was characterized by some witnesses as a sled, from which I conclude it was on runners, pulled by the scoop.

The employees rode in the mantrip until about 2 weeks prior to April 17, when it became unusable because the access road was so wet and muddy, with holes in the roadway, that the mantrip could not traverse it without becoming stuck. The condition of the road was such that the scoop also occasionally became stuck in the roadway or could only progress halfway in. In either case the men had to get out and walk.

[1] With minor exceptions, there is substantial agreement among the witnesses regarding the relevant facts.

[2] All dates are in 1980.

After the poor road conditions made it impossible to use the mantrip, the men either rode the scoop in and out or walked. During this 2-week period, the second-shift men had several discussions among themselves concerning their complaints about the scoop. The primary topic of discussion was the possibility of injury to men riding in the scoop if it should rise up sufficiently to push them out against the ceiling. The evidence establishes that on frequent occasions the scoop would start to rise toward the ceiling, which caused the riders to shout to the operator who then took appropriate action to lower it. It appears that the scoop's trailing edge could rise at least 24 inches, leaving only about a 30-inch clearance for the seated men. I conclude it would be quite possible for a sitting man of average height to be pushed against the ceiling in the event of a 24-inch rise. Coyer[3] concedes that he heard the men complain of being frightened by the propensity of one of the two scoops available to rise without notice due to a stuck control lever. It also appears that the scoop bucket was sometimes caused to rise by the operator's maneuvering over the various dips and bumps in the road. The men were also concerned about the possibility the scoop ejector might accidently push them off the back edge of the scoop.[4] The men also complained, and advised Coyer, that they were afraid they would be unable to get out of the mine quickly if they got hurt. This concern was exacerbated by the fact that two other employees had been injured in the mine within 2 weeks of April 17 and had to be carried out by men on foot, a rather difficult and time-consuming project considering the height of the passage. This latter concern helps to explain the employees' later rejection of the opportunity to walk in to work.

At the end of their shift on April 17, about 6:30 p.m., all 13 men on the second shift talked to Coyer in a group, and told him that the roadway needed repairing and if it was not fixed so they could ride in the mantrip they would not ride the scoop on April 18. I conclude this ultimatum was immediately precipitated by the fact that the scoop bucket had risen on the way out that evening.

Coyer promised to speak to Lacy Walters, who was then Respondent's president but has since severed this connection. I credit Coyer that he spoke to Walters that evening and told him they needed to repair the roadway and operate the mantrip because the scoop was crowded. Coyer, who himself had once fallen out of the scoop as had another employee, had previously made similar requests to Walters, but the road was not yet repaired on April 17.

On April 18, the second-shift employees gathered at the mine shortly before the 2:30 p.m. starting time. The roadway was not repaired, nor was the mantrip there. The men met with Coyer and said that they were not going to ride the scoop because it was dangerous. Coyer then went and talked to Walters. I credit Bill Sparks, Respondent's office manager, that Walters told Coyer to tell the men they could either ride the scoop, walk in, or "go to the house" (a localism for "go home"). Coyer delivered this message. The men offered to remain and work if they could work at repairing the roadway. This offer was declined, and eight of the employees left,[5] after telling Coyer they would be back on Monday, April 21. The five second-shift employees who did not leave were put to work repairing the road.

David Thornsbury testified that, as he was leaving, he encountered Walters who told him that if the men walked off the hill they would not have a job. Walters' version was that he told Thornsbury and a couple others that if they went home they quit as far as he was concerned. Both versions convey basically the same message that employees who left would be separated, but I credit the version of Thornsbury, a more impressive witness than Walters. Office Manager Sparks agrees with Walters that the eight who left were no longer employees after they walked off on April 18 because by leaving they quit.

All eight returned at the beginning of their shift on April 21.[6] I find they were prepared to go to work and had their work clothes and equipment with them. They met with Walters and Sparks because they heard from other employees that they had been fired. Walters told them he could not let them go to work because they had quit. The men countered that they had not quit and were ready to go to work. Walters repeated they had quit and he could not let them go to work if he wanted to, and the men persisted that they were fired. The "quit" versus "fired" argument went on for a few minutes until Walters told them to go to the Board if they thought they had a case. They then left. No more than two new employees had been hired prior to the return of the eight on April 21.

Prior to the second shift "going to the house" on April 18, the first shift walked out on April 18 protesting the nonpayment of a production bonus. Two first-shift employees quit rather than go back in. Contrary to Respondent, the evidence does not convincingly show more than a vague suspicion that the second shift may have left for the same reason, and the clear preponderance of the evidence shows they left for the reasons expressed to Coyer on April 17 and 18.

B. Concluding Findings

When the employees spoke to Elmer Coyer on April 17 and 18 protesting the use of the scoop for transportation, and, in effect, demanding the road be fixed and the mantrip be put in service before they entered the mine, they were acting concertedly in pressing a grievance of concern to them all. That concerted action was clearly protected because the method of transportation in and out of the mine is clearly a condition of employment.

---

[3] Coyer is no longer associated with Respondent.

[4] The scoop is a very slow moving vehicle, and its speed was not discussed as a factor by the employees.

[5] Roy Delong, Wade Thacker, David Maynard, David Thornsbury, Larry Smith, Steven Morris, Jerome Newsome, and William F. Scott.

[6] This account of the events of April 21 is a fair summary of the complementary credible portions of the testimony of Roy Delong, William Scott, David Thornsbury, Larry Smith, Jerome Newsome, and Bill Sparks. Testimony to the contrary is expressly discredited.

The evidence with respect to the hazards of riding the scoop and the possible consequences of any delay occasioned by the necessity of carrying out an injured employee on foot establishes that the employees' action in protesting these conditions and requesting road repair and the return to use of the mantrip as conditions precedent to their entering the mine was not indefensible.[7] The repair of the road which would permit the use of the mantrip was certainly not an unreasonable request, as shown by Respondent's immediate start of that repair on April 18.

The employees have a statutory right to withhold their services in support of their grievance, and Respondent could not lawfully discharge them because they continued adamant in that refusal to work absent a remedy for their complaint,[8] nor could Respondent lawfully confront them with the choice of abandoning their statutory right or being terminated as employees. These alternatives were placed before the employees on April 18 by Coyer, pursuant to Walters' instructions, and plainly conveyed that discharge was imminent if they did not abandon their protected concerted withholding of services. I find this amounts to a threat of discharge violative of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act, and although not specifically alleged in the complaint it is fairly encompassed by complaint allegations, was fully litigated, and is intimately related to the subject matter of the complaint and the underlying charge.[9] Similarly, the statement of Lacy Walters to David Thornsbury that the men would have no job if they left was a threat of discharge for engaging in protected concerted activity, and violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

Although Respondent would have it that the eight employees voluntarily quit on April 18 when they "went to the house," I cannot agree. Respondent's view that the men were given reasonable alternatives, particularly that of walking in on paid time, and therefore voluntarily quit when they left, is understandable, but is in error. There is no requirement in the statute or precedent that I have found requiring employees to abjure a colorable grievance merely because the employer presents an alternative arguably reasonable but not acceptable to them.

The men did not quit on April 18, but were in fact terminated on that date. That they had no intention of quitting is evidenced by their advice to Elmer Coyer that they would return on April 21 and by their return on that day ready to work. Moreover, the aforementioned threats of Coyer and Walters, together with the statements of Sparks and Walters that the men ceased to be employees when they left on April 18, warrant a conclusion that Respondent implemented its threats of termination because the eight employees continued to withhold their services. I find and conclude that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by discharging Roy Delong, Wade Thacker, David Maynard, David Thornsbury, Larry Smith, Steven Morris, Jerome Newsome, and William Scott on April 18[10] because they engaged in protected concerted activity. This finding is based on and fully consistent with the teachings of the Supreme Court in N.L.R.B. v. Washington Aluminum Co., 370 U.S. 9 (1962). Respondent's reliance on G. H. Reed and G. A. Reed, d/b/a Wind River Logging Company v. N.L.R.B., 430 F.2d 331 (10th Cir. 1970); and N.L.R.B. v. Fruin-Colnon Construction Co. and Utah Construction and Mining Co., a Joint Venture, 330 F.2d 885 (8th Cir. 1964), both denying enforcement of Board orders, is misplaced because both are inapposite on their facts; the issue in Fruin-Colnon is the applicability of Section 502 of the Act to a strike in violation of a collective-bargaining agreement; and nothing is more firmly established than the proposition that administrative law judges must follow Board precedents until the Board or the Supreme Court overrules them.[11]

I further find that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by refusing the discharged employees reinstatement when they attempted to return to work on April 21. I view this as a continuation of the initial unlawful discharge and an effort to further perfect it. Walters' statement that he could not let them go to work if he wanted to constitutes an admission that he did not want to. The record requires a conclusion that the only discernible reason that he would not want to take them back was their concerted activity, all of which buttresses my original conclusion of unlawful discharge on April 18.

III. THE REMEDY

In addition to the usual cease-and-desist order and the posting of appropriate notices, my recommended Order will require Respondent to offer unconditional reinstatement to the eight employees discharged on April 18 to their former jobs, or substantially equivalent employment if those jobs no longer exist, and make them whole for all wages lost by them as a result of their unlawful discharge, such backpay and interest thereon to be computed in the manner prescribed in F. W. Woolworth Company, 90 NLRB 289 (1950), and Florida Steel Corporation, 231 NLRB 651 (1977).[12]

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. By threatening its employees with discharge because they engaged in protected concerted activity, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

3. By discharging and refusing to reinstate Roy Delong, Wade Thacker, David Maynard, David Thornsbury, Larry Smith, Steven Morris, Jerome Newsome, and William Scott because they engaged in protected concerted activity, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

---

[7] This does not mean the conditions complained of were objectively unsafe, which I need not determine inasmuch as this case does not raise a question cognizable under Sec. 502 of the Act, but is, rather, concerned solely with the concerted presentation of a grievance and the exercise of the right to cease work in support thereof.

4. The aforesaid unfair labor practices are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the Act, I hereby issue the following recommended:

ORDER[13]

The Respondent, Teresa Coal Company, Inc., Sidney, Kentucky, its agents, officers, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Threatening to discharge employees because they engage in protected concerted activities.

(b) Discharging or refusing to reinstate employees, or otherwise discriminating in any manner with respect to their tenure of employment or any term or condition of their employment, because they engage in protected concerted activities.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Offer immediate and full reinstatement to their former positions or, if such positions no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions to Roy Delong, Wade Thacker, David Maynard, David Thornsbury, Larry Smith, Steven Morris, Jerome Newsome, and William Scott, and make them whole for any loss of earnings they may have suffered as a result of the discrimination against them, in the manner set forth in the section entitled "The Remedy."

(b) Preserve and, upon request, make available to the Board or its agents, for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this recommended Order.

(c) Post at Respondent's place of business in Sidney, Kentucky, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[14] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 9, after being duly signed by Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by Respondent immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(d) Notify the Regional Director for Region 9, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps the Respondent has taken to comply herewith.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

WE WILL NOT threaten our employees with discharge because they engage in concerted activity protected by the National Labor Relations Act.

WE WILL NOT discharge or refuse to reinstate any of our employees, or in any other manner discriminate against them in regard to their tenure of employment or other term or condition of their employment because they engage in concerted activity protected by the Act.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees of the rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL offer Roy Delong, Wade Thacker, David Maynard, David Thronsbury, Larry Smith, Steven Morris, Jerome Newsome, and William Scott immediate and full reinstatement to their former jobs or, if those jobs no longer exist, to substantially equivalent employment, without prejudice to their rights and privileges previously enjoyed, and make them whole for any loss of pay they may have suffered by reason of our unlawful discrimination against them, with interest computed thereon.

TERESA COAL COMPANY, INC.

D'Agata National Trucking Co. and Carolina National Trucking Co. and Jay Stuart Goldstein. Case 4-CA-11931

November 18, 1981

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN VAN DE WATER AND MEMBERS JENKINS AND HUNTER

Upon a charge filed on March 11, 1981, by Jay Stuart Goldstein, an individual, herein called the Charging Party, and duly served on D'Agata National Trucking Co. and Carolina National Trucking Co., herein called Respondent, the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, by the Regional Director for Region 4, issued a complaint on April 29, 1981, against Respondent, alleging that Respondent had engaged in and was engaging in unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) and Section 2(6) and (7) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended. Copies of the charge and complaint and notice of hearing before an administrative law judge were duly served on the parties to this proceeding. Respondent failed to file an answer to the complaint.

On August 3, 1981, counsel for the General Counsel filed directly with the Board a Motion for Summary Judgment. Subsequently, on August 7, 1981, the Board issued an order transferring the proceeding to the Board and a Notice To Show Cause why the General Counsel's Motion for Summary Judgment should not be granted. Respondent thereafter filed a response to the Notice To Show Cause.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

Upon the entire record in this proceeding, the Board makes the following:

Ruling on the Motion for Summary Judgment

Section 102.20 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, Series 8, as amended, provides as follows:

> The respondent shall, within 10 days from the service of the complaint, file an answer thereto. The respondent shall specifically admit, deny, or explain each of the facts alleged in the complaint, unless the respondent is without knowledge, in which case the respondent shall so state, such statement operating as a denial. All allegations in the complaint, if no answer is filed, or any allegation in the complaint not specifically denied or explained in an answer filed, unless the respondent shall state in the answer that he is without knowledge, shall be deemed to be admitted to be true and shall be so found by the Board, unless good cause to the contrary is shown.

The complaint and notice of hearing issued on April 29, 1981, and served on Respondent by registered mail, return receipt dated April 29, 1981, specifically states that, unless an answer to the complaint is filed within 10 days from the service thereof "all of the allegations in the complaint shall be deemed admitted to be true and may be so found by the Board." As no answer was filed, counsel for the General Counsel, on August 3, 1981, filed a Motion for Summary Judgment. On August 7, 1981, the Board issued a Notice To Show Cause why the General Counsel's motion should not be granted and, on August 21, 1981, Respondent filed a response thereto.

Respondent's response to the Notice To Show Cause argues that the General Counsel's Motion for Summary Judgment should not be granted. Respondent contends that, in mid-April 1981, as a result of Board Agent Berger's urgings, it decided to pursue a settlement and commenced negotiations with Berger acting as intermediary. However, on April 29, the Regional Director issued a complaint and notice of hearing. Respondent claims that it did not consult an attorney at that time since it still believed that a settlement would be reached.

Respondent further asserts that, a few weeks later, Board attorney Rosenberger contacted Respondent's controller, Goldberg, and told him that Respondent ought to answer the complaint. However, Respondent states that it did not do so because it believed that the case had been resolved. Shortly after that conversation on June 24, 1981, the proposed settlement was rejected by the Charging Party. Immediately thereafter, Respondent contends, Goldberg called Rosenberger who informed him that she had not yet received the answer to the complaint. Goldberg promised Rosenberger that she would have the answer by the end of the week, which was 2 days away.

Respondent claims that the same day it contacted an attorney and typed up an answer. The next day, June 25, Respondent alleges the answer was signed, inserted in an envelope addressed to the Regional Director for Region 4, and placed on the table where all outgoing letters are left for posting and mailing each day. Respondent claims it never saw the answer or envelope thereafter and, since no Board agent informed it that the answer had not been received, thought it had been delivered.

We do not believe Respondent's submissions constitute good cause, within the meaning of Section 102.20 of the Board's Rules and Regulations, for failure to file a timely answer. In light of the above facts, and Respondent's promise to Board attorney Rosenberger that the answer would be filed in 2 days, it is apparent that Respondent's failure to answer the complaint was the result of its own negligence. Respondent does not even allege that it in fact mailed the answer, rather, it contends only that it left the envelope on a desk where mail is regularly collected. Moreover, at no time did Respondent request permission to file its answer after the 2 days had elapsed. In view of the foregoing, we find that Respondent has offered no valid reasons why the Motion for Summary Judgment should not be granted, and, under the rule cited above, the allegations of the complaint shall be deemed to be admitted to be true and are so found.[1] Accordingly, we grant the Motion for Summary Judgment.

On the basis of the entire record the Board makes the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. THE BUSINESS OF RESPONDENT

D'Agata and Carolina are Pennsylvania corporations engaged in the interstate and intrastate transportation of freight and commodities. D'Agata and Carolina at all times material have had common ownership, management, labor policy, and interchange of personnel, and constitute a single integrated business enterprise and a single employer within the meaning of the Act. During the past year, Respondent received gross revenues in excess of $50,000 for transporting freight from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to other States. We find, on the basis of the foregoing, that Respondent is, and has been at all times material herein, an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act, and that it will effectuate the policies of the Act to assert jurisdiction herein.

II. THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

On or about January 26, 1981, Respondent discharged Jay Stuart Goldstein, and at all times since then Respondent has failed and refused, and continues to fail and refuse, to reinstate him to his former or substantially equivalent position of employment, on account of his union activities. We find that, by such conduct, Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

III. THE EFFECT OF THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES UPON COMMERCE

The activities of Respondent set forth in section II, above, occurring in connection with its operations described in section I, above, have a close, intimate, and substantial relationship to trade, traffic, and commerce among the several States and tend to lead to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow of commerce.

IV. THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act, we shall order that it cease and desist thereform and take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

To remedy Respondent's discharge of Jay Stuart Goldstein in violation of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act, we shall order that Respondent offer immediate and full reinstatement to him to his former job or, if such job no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position, without prejudice to his seniority or any other rights and privileges previously enjoyed, and make him whole for any loss of earnings suffered by him because of his unlawful discharge. The backpay shall be computed in accordance with F. W. Woolworth Company, 90 NLRB 289 (1950), with interest as prescribed in Florida Steel Corporation, 231 NLRB 651 (1977). See, generally, Isis Plumbing & Heating Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).[2]

The Board, upon the basis of the foregoing facts and the entire record, makes the following:

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. D'Agata National Trucking Co. and Carolina Trucking Co. is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. By discharging Jay Stuart Goldstein because of his union activities, Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

3. The aforesaid unfair labor practices are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board hereby orders that the Respondent, D'Agata National Trucking Co. and Carolina National Trucking Co., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

---

[1] See Sullivan Magee & Sullivan, Inc., 229 NLRB 543 (1977); Ancorp National Services, Inc., Casco Division, 202 NLRB 513 (1973).

[2] In accordance with his partial dissent in Olympic Medical Corporation, 250 NLRB 146 (1980), Member Jenkins would award interest on the backpay due based on the formula set forth therein.

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Discharging or otherwise discriminating against employees because of their union activities.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action which the Board finds will effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Offer Jay Stuart Goldstein immediate and full reinstatement to his former job or, if such job no longer exists, to a substantially equivalent position, without prejudice to his seniority or any other rights or privileges previously enjoyed.

(b) Make Jay Stuart Goldstein whole for any loss of earnings he may have suffered due to the discrimination practiced against him as provided in the section of this Decision entitled "The Remedy."

(c) Preserve and, upon request, make available to the Board or its agents, for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(d) Post at its Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, facility, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[3] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 4, after being duly signed by Respondent's representative, shall be posted by Respondent immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(e) Notify the Regional Director for Region 4, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps the Respondent has taken to comply herewith.

APPENDIX

Sheet Metal Workers Local Union 156, AFL-CIO and Martin, Inc. and Trio Industries, Inc. and International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, Local 147, AFL-CIO. Case 25-CD-212

November 18, 1982

DECISION AND DETERMINATION OF DISPUTE

BY CHAIRMAN VAN DE WATER AND MEMBERS FANNING AND ZIMMERMAN

This is a proceeding under Section 10(k) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, following a charge filed by Martin, Inc., alleging that Sheet Metal Workers Local Union 156, herein called the Respondent or Sheet Metal Workers, had violated Section 8(b)(4)(D) of the Act by engaging in certain proscribed activity with an object of forcing or requiring the Employer, Trio Industries, Inc., to assign certain work to its members rather than to employees represented by International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, Local 147, AFL-CIO, herein called the Iron Workers.

Pursuant to notice, a hearing was held before Hearing Officer John Petrison on June 19, 1981. All parties appeared and were afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to adduce evidence bearing on the issues.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has reviewed the Hearing Officer's rulings made at the hearing and finds that they are free from prejudicial error. They are hereby affirmed.

Upon the entire record in this proceeding, the Board makes the following findings:

I. THE BUSINESS OF THE EMPLOYER

The parties stipulated,[1] and we find, that the Employer, a Connecticut corporation with its principal place of business in Shelton, Connecticut, is engaged in commercial construction. During the past year, the Employer received goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000 at its jobsites directly from suppliers located outside the State where said jobsites were located. We find that the Employer is engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act and that it will effectuate the purposes of the Act to assert jurisdiction herein.

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATIONS INVOLVED

We find that Sheet Metal Workers Local Union 156, AFL-CIO, and International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, Local 147, AFL-CIO, are labor organizations within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE DISPUTE

A. Background and Facts of the Dispute

Trio Industries, Inc., the Employer, was hired as a subcontractor to install all of the windows and the finish metal work in a building being constructed at One Summit Square. The finish metal work consists of all the entrances, revolving doors, and grillwork. The grill is an ornamental one about 12 inches wide and 40 feet long with bars spaced half an inch apart. Under the grill is a four-coil fan unit which occupies 15 percent of the area, the rest of which is empty space. Approximately 117 feet of grill will be installed on each of 28 floors.

The Employer has had a collective-bargaining agreement with the Iron Workers since 1947 and has used employees represented by the Iron Workers to install grills for over 24 years. Consistent with its past practice, the Employer assigned this work to its employees represented by the Iron Workers.

In February 1981, the local business agent for the Sheet Metal Workers approached Trio's field superintendent, Joseph Noonan, and asked him "who was installing the grills?" Noonan replied that he would use ironworkers and, when questioned "Why," responded that the Company had had an agreement with the Iron Workers since 1947 and had always used them to install grills. In April, the general contractor's superintendent was advised that the Sheet Metal Workers was going to picket the job if Trio used ironworkers. Also in April, Noonan received a copy of a request for a hearing before the Impartial Jurisdictional Disputes Board (IJDB). By letter Loren Cheney, Trio's erection manager, responded to the request for hearing by stating that he "would in no way" give up any part of the work to the Sheet Metal Workers. On April 24, 1981, the IJDB voted to award the work in dispute to the Sheet Metal Workers on the basis of trade practice. Trio and Iron Workers Local 147 ignored this award because neither had agreed to submit the dispute to the IJDB nor had participated in the IJDB proceeding.

[1] The commerce data pertaining to the Employer was inadvertently omitted at the hearing. Thereafter on August 28, 1981, the parties executed a formal stipulation as to these facts and further stipulated that the Employer was engaged in commerce within the meaning of the Act.

On May 20, pickets appeared at the jobsite with signs stating that the Iron Workers was unfair to the Sheet Metal Workers. Employees represented by the Iron Workers continued to install the grills for the next 5 or 6 days; however, the rest of the job was shut down during this period as none of the other unions would cross the picket line. On May 22, Martin, Inc., another subcontractor on the job, filed the instant charge.

B. The Work in Dispute

The work in dispute involves the installation of grillwork at the construction site located at One Summit Square, Fort Wayne, Indiana.

C. The Contentions of the Parties

The Employer contends that the work should be assigned to employees represented by Iron Workers Local 147, on the basis of the collective-bargaining history, area and industry practice, Company practice, relative skills involved, efficiency of operation, and employer preference. The Sheet Metal Workers contends that the ruling of the IJDB is binding. The Iron Workers contends that the Employer's assignment of the work should be upheld.

D. Applicability of the Statute

Before the Board may proceed with a determination of the dispute pursuant to Section 10(k) of the Act, it must be satisfied that (1) there is reasonable cause to believe that Section 8(b)(4)(D) has been violated and (2) the parties have not agreed upon a method for the voluntary adjustment of the dispute. It is clear that the picketing at the jobsite was to protest the Employer's assignment of the disputed work to its employees represented by the Iron Workers and to force the Employer to assign the work to employees represented by the Sheet Metal Workers. Accordingly we find that reasonable cause exists to believe that Respondent violated Section 8(b)(4)(D) of the Act.

The Sheet Metal Workers contends that an agreed-upon method for voluntary adjustment of the dispute exists because the Employer voluntarily submitted itself to the jurisdiction of the IJDB by writing a letter in response to the notice of hearing. The Employer and the Iron Workers assert that the decision is not binding as to them because neither had agreed to submit the dispute to the IJDB nor had participated in that proceeding.

We find no merit in the Sheet Metal Workers claim that the Employer agreed to be bound by the procedures of the IJDB. The record shows that the collective-bargaining agreement between Trio and the Iron Workers specifically disclaims reliance on the mechanism of the IJDB. Accordingly, we conclude that there is no agreed-upon method for settlement of the dispute that is binding on all parties and that this dispute is, therefore, properly before the Board for determination.

E. Merits of the Dispute

Section 10(k) of the Act requires the Board to make an affirmative award of disputed work after giving due consideration to various relevant factors. The following factors are relevant in making the determination of the dispute before us:

1. Area and employer past practice

The employees represented by the Iron Workers have installed the same type of grill for Art Iron at a Fort Wayne public library and a junior high school. Art Iron had also used Fort Wayne ironworkers to install that type of grill in Lima, Wapaeceneta, and Defiance, Ohio. The Sheet Metal Workers entered no evidence of area practice at the hearing. For the past 24 years the Employer has assigned the installation of grillwork exclusively to employees represented by the Ironworkers. Area and employer past practice, therefore, favor an award to those employees.

2. Economy and efficiency of operations

Employees represented by the Iron Workers perform work for the Employer other than that which is in dispute. As a result the Employer is able to interchange employees between grillwork and other metal finishing work and perform both the disputed and other work with one work force. Furthermore, since the Employer performs no sheet metal work, an award of the work to employees represented by the Sheet Metal Workers would appear to require the Employer to hire two work complements. Therefore, economy and efficiency of operations favor an award to employees represented by the Iron Workers.

3. Employer assignment and preference

The Employer has assigned the work in dispute to employees represented by the Iron Workers and has expressed the preference that the disputed work be performed by those employees. We find that the Employer's assignment and performance favor an award of the disputed work to employees represented by the Iron Workers.

Conclusion

Upon the record as a whole, and after full consideration of all relevant factors involved, we conclude that employees represented by the Iron

Workers are entitled to perform the work in dispute. In making this determination, we are awarding the work in question to employees who are represented by the Iron Workers, but not to that Union or its members. Accordingly, the present determination is limited to the work being performed by the Employer at One Summit Square in Fort Wayne, Indiana.

DETERMINATION OF DISPUTE

Pursuant to Section 10(k) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, and upon the basis of the foregoing findings and the entire record in this proceeding, the National Labor Relations Board makes the following Determination of Dispute:

1. Employees of Trio Industries, Inc., who are represented by International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, Local 147, AFL–CIO, are entitled to perform the installation of grillwork at the construction site located at One Summit Square, Fort Wayne, Indiana.

2. Sheet Metal Workers Local Union 156, AFL–CIO, is not entitled by means proscribed by Section 8(b)(4)(D) of the Act to force or require Trio Industries, Inc., to assign the disputed work to employees represented by that labor organization.

3. Within 10 days from the date of this Decision and Determination of Dispute, Sheet Metal Workers Local Union 156, AFL–CIO, shall notify the Regional Director for Region 25, in writing, whether or not it will refrain from forcing or requiring the Employer, by means proscribed by Section 8(b)(4)(D) of the Act, to assign the disputed work in a manner inconsistent with the above determination.

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN VAN DE WATER AND MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On September 30, 1980, Administrative Law Judge Elbert D. Gadsden issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, Respondent and the General Counsel filed exceptions and supporting briefs.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings, and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge only to the extent consistent herewith.

We agree with the Administrative Law Judge that the employees' work stoppage was concerted activity for the purpose of "mutual aid or protection" within the meaning of Section 7 of the Act. It is undisputed that the work stoppage was to protest the harassment suffered by night-shift employees when they left work. The employees wanted to be assured that, when leaving work, they would not be subject to racially motivated heckling or threats to their physical well-being. The employees therefore had a specific demand related to their conditions of employment. Their problem existed only because of their attendance at work.

Furthermore, the employees' concerns were not beyond Respondent's control. The hecklers were able to carry out their harassment of Respondent's employees because they were allowed to congregate in the parking lot area, on property rented by Respondent.[1] And as the tenant of this property, Respondent could have had the hecklers removed. As of the week of the work stoppage, however, Respondent's responses to the employees' complaints had failed to secure the area.[2]

We also agree with the Administrative Law Judge that Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act by terminating employees Janice Johnson and Kathy Sudler.[3] Contrary to the Administrative Law Judge, we find that Johnson is entitled to reinstatement.

We adopt the Administrative Law Judge's finding that Respondent's contention that it discharged Johnson for her racial remarks was pretextual,[4] although in making this finding, the Administrative Law Judge concluded that, because of her remarks, Johnson was not entitled to reinstatement. He stated that the unlawfulness of her termination could not serve to condone the irresponsible and inflamatory racial remarks uttered by Johnson during the April 24, 1979, employee-management meeting.

It is well settled, however, that not every impropriety committed in the course of Section 7 activity deprives the offending employee of the protection of the Act. A line must be drawn between situations where employees exceed the bounds of lawful conduct in a moment of exuberance or in a manner not activated by improper motives and those flagrant cases in which the misconduct is violent or of such serious character as to render the employees unfit for further service. Viewed in context, we do not consider Johnson's remarks so egregious as to warrant denying her the Act's complete protection.[5]

Thus, as indicated, Johnson and her fellow workers had been the victims of repeated racially motivated attacks culminating with the April 20, 1979, incident. On April 23, when she asked Respondent's president, Williams, to meet with the employees, he refused. Later that afternoon, while John-

[1] The incident of April 20, 1979, that precipitated the work stoppage, began in the parking lot area, although it continued when the employees walked towards the bus stop on Philmont Avenue.

Also, as found by the Administrative Law Judge, from the summer of 1978 until 1979, Respondent's employees had their automobile tires slashed and were subjected to racial slurs, heckling, and harassment performed by members of the white community in the parking lot area.

[2] In response to previous complaints, Respondent had called the police and complained to its landlord, The Singer Company, about the problem. Respondent had also hired a full-time security guard who was to check the parking lot area during its night shift.

In fact, Respondent's actions in response to the concerns raised by the employees' work stoppage tends to belie its claim that the employees' problems in this regard were outside its control. Thus, Respondent was able to get The Singer Company's agreement to build a fence around the parking lot in order to keep out trespassers. Respondent also urged the local transit authority to move the bus stop used by the employees to the front of Respondent's plant.

[3] The Administrative Law Judge also found, however, that their terminations violated Sec. 8(a)(3) of the Act. The complaint does not allege that their terminations constituted an 8(a)(3) violation. Nor was it argued that their work stoppage was in support of a union. We therefore do not adopt the findings that the terminations of employees Johnson and Sudler violated Sec. 8(a)(3) of the Act and we shall modify the Administrative Law Judge's recommended Order and notice accordingly.

Further, the complaint did not allege that any discharges—other than the discharges of Johnson and Sudler—were violative of the Act. Accordingly, we need not pass on the legality of other terminations effectuated by Respondent.

[4] As the Administrative Law Judge noted, Walter Bond and Deborah Charles, two other employees who had leadership roles in the work stoppage activities, were terminated even though they did not make racially derogatory remarks.

son and other employees were outside the building preparing for their meeting with Respondent's personnel manager, they saw Williams leave the building in a hurry. At this meeting, Respondent stated that it did not have any solutions for the abusive white community outside the plant.

Against this background, it is understandable that Johnson's remarks, although regrettable and not to be condoned, may have been caused by frustration and the emotional confrontation with Respondent. Because we do not consider her conduct so egregious as to render her unfit for further service with Respondent, we shall order that Johnson be reinstated.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board hereby orders that the Respondent, J. W. Microelectronics Corporation, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Discouraging employees from instigating and participating in a protected concerted work stoppage or activities by terminating their employment or otherwise interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in regard to their tenure of employment, or any term or condition of employment, because of their protected concerted activities.

(b) Discouraging employees from participating in a protected concerted walkout or activities in protest of Respondent's discharge of fellow employees by terminating their employment or otherwise interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in regard to their tenure of employment, or any term or condition of employment, because of their protected concerted activities.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the Act except to the extent that such rights may be affected by lawful agreements in accord with Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action necessary to effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Offer to Kathy R. Sudler and Janice Johnson immediate and full reinstatement to their former positions or, if such positions no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions without prejudice to their seniority or other rights previously enjoyed, and make them whole for any loss of pay suffered by reason of the interference, restraint, and coercion against them, with interest, in accordance with F. W. Woolworth Company, 90 NLRB 289 (1950), and Florida Steel Corporation, 231 NLRB 651 (1977). See, generally, Isis Plumbing & Heating Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).[6]

(b) Preserve and, upon request, make available to the Board or its agents, for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(c) Post at Respondent's place of business in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[7] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 4, after being duly signed by Respondent's authorized representative, shall be posted by it immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(d) Notify the Regional Director for Region 4, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps Respondent has taken to comply herewith.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the complaint be dismissed insofar as it alleges violations of the Act not found herein.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

After a hearing at which all sides had an opportunity to present evidence and state their positions, the National Labor Relations Board found that we have violated the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, and has ordered us to post this notice.

WE WILL NOT restrain or coerce our employees in the exercise of their protected Section 7 rights by terminating their employment because they instigated and engaged in a concerted work stoppage in protest of related working conditions.

[6] In accordance with his dissent in Olympic Medical Corporation 250 NLRB 146 (1980), Member Jenkins would award interest on the backpay due based on the formula set forth therein.

[7] In the event that this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

WE WILL NOT discourage our employees from instigating, participating, or supporting a concerted protest work stoppage by terminating their employment, or otherwise interfering with, restraining, or coercing our employees in regard to their tenure of employment, or any term or condition of employment, because of their protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT discourage our employees from concertedly protesting the discharge of fellow employees by terminating their employment, or otherwise interfering with, restraining, or coercing our employees in regard to their tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment because of their protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise and enjoyment of rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act, except to the extent that such rights might be affected by lawful agreements in accord with Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

WE WILL offer Kathy R. Sudler and Janice Johnson immediate and full reinstatement to their former positions or, if such positions no longer exist, to substantially equivalent positions without prejudice to their seniority or other rights previously enjoyed, and make them whole for any loss of pay suffered by reason of the interference, restraint, or coercion against them, with interest.

All our employees are free to engage in, or refuse to engage in, protected concerted activities to protest a work-related problem, or to protest the discharge of fellow employees, or to engage in other activities for mutual aid and protection, except to the extent that such rights may be affected by lawful agreements in accord with Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

J. W. MICROELECTRONICS CORPORATION

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

ELBERT D. GADSDEN, Administrative Law Judge: Upon individual charges of unfair labor practices filed on May 5, 1979, by Janice Johnson and Kathy R. Sudler, respectively, hereinafter called the Charging Parties, against J. W. Microelectronics Corporation, herein called Respondent, an order consolidating said cases and a consolidated complaint was issued by the Regional Director for Region 4, through the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board on June 18, 1979.

In substance, the consolidated complaint alleges that Respondent discharged the Charging Parties (employees) because they engaged in concerted activities for purposes of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection.

On or about June 29, 1979, Respondent filed an answer denying that it has engaged in any unfair labor practices as alleged in the complaint.

The hearing in the above matter was held before me in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, on December 18, 1979. Briefs have been received from counsel for the General Counsel and for Respondent, respectively, which have been carefully considered.

Upon the entire record in this case and from my observations of the witnesses, I hereby make the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent J. W. Microelectronics Corporation is, and has been at all times material herein, a Pennsylvania corporation with an office and place of business in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where it is engaged in the manufacture and nonretail sale of electronic component systems and subsystem products.

In the course and conduct of its business operations, Respondent has annually sold and shipped from its Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, facility products, goods, and materials valued in excess of $50,000 to points outside the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

The complaint alleges, the answer admits, and I find that Respondent is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

II. THE ALLEGED UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

A. Background Facts

Respondent J. W. Microelectronics Corporation is, and has been at all times material herein, engaged in the manufacture and nonretail sale of electronic component systems and subsystem products.

Respondent's Philadelphia facility is located near Fairmont Park which is adjacent to Philmont Avenue. Also adjacent to its building is a parking lot which belongs to its landlord, the Singer Company. Some personnel of Respondent (particularly supervisory personnel) generally park on said parking lot during Respondent's second (night) shift. Also adjacent to the lot is a field (recreation) which also belongs to the Singer Company. The park is several hundred feet away from Respondent's manufacturing facility. The Singer Company permits community groups to use the park for recreational purposes and the record shows that groups of community persons (white males) congregate in the park late at night drinking beer, smoking dope, and heckling and harassing the black employees of Respondent on the night shift as they leave the plant en route to their cars or to the public bus stop on Fairmont Avenue.

Prior to April 20, 1979, Respondent had received several complaints from its employees with respect to being harassed and heckled by the unidentified white persons from the community who congregated in the park during late hours of the night. In response to such complaints Respondent had previously called the police on occasion and had also complained to the Singer Company about the problem. Respondent had hired a full-time security guard 2 months prior to April 20, who was to check the area of the parking lot during its second or nightwork shift. Nevertheless, the record shows that the community in which Respondent's business facility is located is a substantially, if not totally, white community and its presence there appears to have been against the wishes of a large number of community residents. In any event, the dispute presented for determination in this proceeding arose out of this sociological conglomerate of facts.

During the summer evenings of 1978-79, automobile tires of Respondent's employees had been slashed and said employees victims of racial slurs (niggers) accompanied by profanity when leaving work at 12 midnight. The heckling and harassment were performed by members from the white community standing on the Singer Company's parking lot.

Finally, the record shows that the following named persons occupied the positions set opposite their respective names, and are now, and have been at all times material herein, supervisors of Respondent within the meaning of Section 2(11) of the Act and agents of Respondent within the meaning of Section 2(13) of the Act:

Jesse Williams	President
Vernol Jackson	Production Supervisor
Stanley Mulligan	Personnel Manager
Steven: (Steve) Aaronson	General Manager during some period of time herein.[1]

B. Harassment by Some Members of the White Community on April 20 and the Activities of the Victimized Black Employees in Response Thereto

Respondent's plant operates a second or night shift consisting of about 30 employees. The night shift works from 3:30 p.m. to midnight and all except two of the employees are female. Just about all of said employees except three or four are black.

According to the undisputed testimony of Janice Johnson and Kathy Sudler, which I credit, they along with fellow employees Walter Bond, Charlene Johnson, and others were leaving work at midnight on Friday, April 20, 1979.[2] As they waited a few seconds for their ride on the parking lot, and later proceeded to walk towards the bus stop on Philmont Avenue, several (approximately 10) male members of the white community commenced following them and yelling, "Get those niggers." "Kill them m—f—ers." "Get them out of our neighborhood." "We don't want them here"; and they proceeded to throw bottles, rocks, and bricks at them (employees). In an effort to protect Johnson, Sudler, and other female fellow employees, fellow employee Walker Bond and a male friend of his came towards them and became involved in a fight with the hecklers, in which scuffle Bond's male friend received a cut on the arm.

Over the weekend (April 21-22), Janice Johnson further testified undisputedly that fellow employees Deborah Bass and others called her on the telephone. They agreed to request a meeting with Jesse Williams, president of the Company, to discuss the incident which occurred on Friday night, April 20. Thereupon, Johnson called Williams on Monday morning (April 23) and told him what had happened on Friday night as they left work. She asked him if he could meet with herself and fellow employees on the night shift at 3 o'clock that afternoon. Williams said, "No, he could not meet with them at that time but that he would have Manager Steve Aaronson to meet with them."

At 3 p.m. on Monday, April 23, Johnson, Kathy Sudler, and other employees met outside the building in preparation for a meeting with management. They observed President Williams come out of the building and leave in a hurry.

Plant Manager Steve Aaronson did not meet with them but Personnel Manager Stan Muligan met with them in the plant's cafeteria. Present with him were John Collier, night-shift foreman, and Vernol Jackson, production supervisor. After a heated discussion during which the employees informed management about the Friday night incident, Supervisor John Collier said management did not have a solution. Janice Johnson then said, in responding to Collier, that if the Company did not have a solution, she suggested that the second-shift employees should not return to work until management found a solution. In the midst of all the yelling and shouting Williams ended the meeting. The second-shift employees left the cafeteria and met across the street in Fairmont Park where they discussed seeking outside help.

On the next day, Tuesday, April 24, Janice Johnson, her husband, and other employees on the night shift went to city hall and met with City Councilman Lucien Blackwell. Johnson continued to testify as follows:

> Q. What did the second shift say to Mr. Blackwell?
> A. We told him what had happened Friday and what kind of response we got from the President of the company and that the police wasn't there. [H]e called the police commissioner in that district and he said he wasn't aware of the problem that had happened on Friday and then he called Mr. Williams, but they said he was out. So then he called Tim Dougherty of the Philadelphia Tribune.
> A. That's a newspaper. A Philadelphia newspaper.
> Q. Then you called up Mr. Dougherty and what happened, if anything as a result of the phone call to Mr. Dougherty?
> A. Mr. Dougherty came over and took a report of what was being said. And, I did most of the talking.

The report of Tim Dougherty described in General Counsel's Exhibit 2 was published in the Friday, April 27, issue of the Tribune. After the meeting with Councilman Blackwell on Tuesday, Johnson and her fellow employees returned to the plant and the day-shift employees were sitting in the cafeteria. They wanted to know what had happened at Blackwell's office at city hall. She proceeded to tell the day-shift employees what had happened on Friday night and also what happened at Blackwell's office. At that time Plant Manager Steve Aaronson and Supervisor Vernol Jackson walked into the cafeteria and announced there was no work for the night shift on Tuesday, April 24, and that he was not sure about the rest of the week. He said some of them would be put on the day shift. Johnson replied, "[T]hat would not solve the problem because you know how those Caucasians are, if they do it at night, they'll do it in the day time."

[2] All dates herein refer to 1979, unless specifically indicated otherwise.

Johnson continued to testify as follows:

> Q. Did he say anything else to you?
>
> A. He said that—yes, he said that we would be paid for the time that the company had allowed us—for the days that the company had gave us off, we would be paid for it and he also said at this point, he wasn't sure if we had to work the rest of the week.
> Q. Did he say anything about the Monday night meeting or the Monday afternoon meeting?
>
> A. Yes. He was not told about the meeting on Monday that Mr. Williams did not tell him about the meeting on Monday and that was why he wasn't there.
> Q. Okay, what, if anything was going to happen the next day?
> A. He also told us that if anyone was interested that Mr. Williams had arranged a meeting at 9:00 with the Commissioner of Human Relations down at city hall with Clarence Farmer.

Johnson further testified that as they left the building they met members of an organization called the House of Umoja, which works with gangs to avoid violence. It is a security force and its members asked to meet with them, so she and about 15 other fellow employees went to the home of employee Walter Bond for a meeting. They decided to select six employees to speak for the night shift (Janice Johnson, Kathy Sudler, Deborah Bass, Carolyn Knight, Deborah Charles, and Walter Bond). Then they selected two of the employees (Janice Johnson and Walter Bond) to speak for the six designated employees. The group agreed that if one employee was fired by Respondent all of them would walk out.

On the next day, Wednesday, April 25, 20 plus employees from the night shift attended the meeting at the Human Relations Commission at 9 a.m. Present were President Williams, Lucien Blackwell of the commission, Farmer, and members Umoja. Blackwell met privately with President Williams and they came out and announced that it would provide two plainclothesmen and two uniformed police in marked cars. Janice Johnson then asked President Williams if the night-shift employees were going to be compensated, and he said they would discuss that in a meeting at the plant at 3:30 p.m. She and other employees attended the 3:30 p.m. meeting (April 25) and present at that meeting were President Williams and Kleit or Klink from the Human Relations Commission. During the meeting Kleit or Klink from the commission told employees that Respondent was going to try to build a fence around the building and try to get the public bus rerouted. A representative from the police department was also present.

Subsequently, Williams then told employees that they went over his head by going down to city hall. Janice Johnson then told him that she personally requested a meeting with him and he said, "No," and designated lower management personnel (Steve Aaronson), who did not meet with them. Williams, nevertheless, asked employees to return to work but the employees advised that they were tired from the long day's meetings, that some of them had not come dressed to return to work, and that some had to make babysitting arrangements, etc. Supervisor John Collier then asked the employees for a show of hands for returning to work, but all the employees decided to go home. Johnson said at that time, she noticed President Williams had a piece of paper in his hand on which he had written and underlined the names of Janice Johnson and Walter Bond.

Thereafter, all of the employees on the night shift reported to work the next day Thursday, April 26, and as Janice Johnson went to punch her timecard, she noticed that it was not there. Janice Johnson's testimony with respect to all of the meetings was corroborated by fellow employee Kathy Sudler, Johnson continued to testify as follows:

> Q. When you arrived at work, what did you find?
> A. Well, when I got to work it was early. So, I went to punch my timecard in and to see that it was not in its place. So, I went to the office and I met Vernol Jackson in the hallway and he walked to the office with me. And when I started to ask the secretary what happened to my timecard, Stan Mulligan said, "Janice Johnson, we have terminated you. Here is your check and could we please have our badge." And at that time, I left the building.
> Q. Let me ask you this first. Did anybody know you were fired or did you just leave work?
> A. Well when I had left out the building Thursday, there was an employee that worked on the day shift. I told her, would you go back in the building and tell Kathy Sudler I had been fired so they could tell the rest of the employees because we were all supposed to walk out. She told Kathy Sudier and Kathy Sudler, Charlene Johnson, Annettie McDaniels, Ricki Exume, Linda Banks and Brenda Merrell walked out the building.

Likewise, Kathy Sudler reported to work on Thursday, April 30, and punched in. After she was informed by employees that Janice Johnson and Walter Bond were fired, she proceeded to remind the employees of their agreement to walk out if any employee was fired. At this juncture, Supervisor John Collier appeared and Sudler continued her testimony as follows:

> A. I was in the back talking to the employees. And he came up to me and said, "What are you > doing back here" and I told John Collier Janice Johnson had been fired. And we all said if anyone had been fired, we all were going to stick together.

> Q. What did he say about that?
> A. He said, "Kathy, are you going to stay or are you going to punch your card?" I said, "I'm going to punch my card."
> Q. Did you?
>
> A. Yes.
> Q. Did anybody go with you?
>
> A. Yes.
> Q. Who went with you?
> A. Charlene Johnson, Ricki Exume, Brenda Merrell, Linda Banks and Annettie McDaniels.
> Q. Did all these people punch out with you?
> A. Yes.

However, she says she does recall Collier telling the employees there would be police protection at the plant and that Respondent had contacted the Singer Company, its landlord, and was working to get security for the parking lot, a fence, and changing the parking area. She said Mulligan did not tell her why she was being terminated.

Kathy Sudler further testified, without dispute, that on the next day, Friday, April 27, she joined Janice Johnson, Walter Bond, and Charlene Johnson in securing signs with which they picketed the plant, and also distributed handbills (G.C. Exh. 3). The handbills were a replica of the signs which bore the writings "Strike JWM as unfair labor practice," "unfair management so honor our strike"; "We were fired for the concern we had for our fellow workers, etc. not only ourselves"; "Strike." "Strike unfair labor practice, strike"; "Management unfair please help protect our rights, strike"; and "Strikeperson fired for protecting rights"; "You need your jobs, we need ours to" and "unfair labor practice"; "Strike unfair management at J.W.M. Corp., strike." (And the last sign said, "strike J.W.M. Corp. unfair labor practice, strike.")

On the following Monday, April 30, Kathy Sudler said she received a letter (G.C. Exh. 4) from Respondent advising that she was terminated for refusing to work. She stated that Charlene Johnson received a like letter of termination on April 30, also.

Stanley Mulligan, personnel manager for Respondent since February 1979, stated that he first learned about the Friday night incident on Monday, April 23. He said he expressed concern about the safety of the employees and in essence corroborated the prior testimony of the contents of the several meetings in which management and employees were present. He denied that employee Janice Johnson was terminated because she agitated a work stoppage but instead, stated that he received a letter from President Williams (G.C. Exh. 5) dated April 26, asking him to investigate. He sent a letter of report (G.C. Exh. 6) to President Williams. In response thereto, President Williams in his letter (G.C. Exh. 7) directed Mulligan to terminate of Janice Johnson. Thereupon he terminated Johnson on April 26. Thereafter, Deborah Charles called and resigned on April 26 before he had an opportunity to terminate her as he intended to do.

Manager Mulligan further testified that employees Kathy Sudler, Charlene Johnson, Nettie McDaniels, and Brenda Merrell were terminated for walking off the job. He said Respondent's employees' handbook provides, at pages 38 and 39, for termination of employees for participating in or agitating a work stoppage, slowdown, or any other work curtailment. (G.C. Exh. 8.)

On cross-examination, Manager Mulligan testified that Respondent has about 190 employees and that at one time five employees used to be selected as employee of the month. Prior to February 1979, Kathy Sudler had been selected such an employee. He further testified that Respondent's personnel records do not show a reason for Kathy Sudler's departure on April 26, but its records marked Ricki Exume as AWOL, and that Exume, Linda Banks, and Nettie McDaniels walked out with Kathy Sudler on April 26. The reason for Sudler's discharge was insubordination or refusal to carry out work assignments. In doing so, the employees willfully countermanded orders of management. He acknowledged that Brenda Merrell did not report for work on April 27 and that no comment is on her timecard.

Respondent produced Juanita Pegues as a witness who testified that the Friday night incident occurred about two city blocks from the plant. Pegues further testified that on Friday, April 20, the hecklers jumped two fences in order to get to the employees. They jumped the fence of the Orkin Company and also the Singer Company and she was on Philmont Avenue going towards Busteton Avenue to catch the bus. At that point the hecklers started throwing bottles and yelling racial slurs.

Manager Mulligan's testimonial account of the Tuesday meeting was as follows:

> A. I walked into the meeting along with Vernol Jackson. At that time, he was trying to explain what were the actions we had taken to secure their safety. There was general chaos among the employees. There was a lot of shouting, trying to shut people down as such. Steve Aaronson came in during the meeting and then tried to also do the same thing, at that time, that particular time, I had a lieutenant from the local office, police lieutenant, from the local police department in my office. And Steve was trying to explain to them the things that we were doing and had done to secure their safety. And he said, "You know if you like, you don't have to take my word for it, you can ask Stan. Stan tell them." I said, "A policeman is in my office now" and that's when Janice, who was standing on her feet, jumped up. She jumped up in between and she shouted at the other employees as she was banging her hand on the table. "Why should we listen to these people. We know all caucasians are animals." With that, Steve just threw up his hands and he sort of wandered off a little bit. The night shift left, the entire night shift.

Mulligan denied Steve Aaronson said there would be no work because work was available. He said Aaronson, who is white, left Respondent's employ a couple of days thereafter.

Mulligan further stated that although Williams ordered the discharge of Johnson, Bond, and Sudler, he did not know about their leadership among the employees.

Manager Mulligan further testified that on Friday, April 27, employees Rickie Exume and Linda Banks returned to work and were hired by Respondent because Exume called in the previous day and said although she walked out the day before, she had done so because she was genuinely concerned about her safety. She asked to report to work pursuant to the directive of Supervisor John Collier. The other four workers, Nettie McDaniels, Kathy Sudler, Charlene Johnson, and Brenda Merrell, were sent letters of termination for refusal to work. Linda Banks was allowed to return to work, but he does not know why she was permitted to return.

Manager Mulligan testified that Janice Johnson made racial remarks and she and Walter Bond were abusive to management in their Tuesday meeting.

III. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

A. The Work Stoppage

The issues presented for determination in this proceeding are as counsel for the General Counsel sets forth as follows:

1. Was the employees' work stoppage concerted activity protected under the National Labor Relations Act?
2. Was Janice Johnson terminated because she instigated the work stoppage?
3. Was Kathy Sudler terminated because she engaged in a concerted work stoppage to protest the discharge of fellow workers Janice Johnson and Walter Bond?

The work stoppage which occurred as a result of the instigation of Janice Johnson and other employees' protest of the racially motivated heckling and harassment they experienced from some male members of the white community appears to be well established by the evidence. The threats of violence, heckling and harassment by which Janice Johnson and fellow black employees were victimized occurred after working hours and after they left the immediate premises of Respondent.

Respondent had no managerial control over the hecklers and was not responsible for their conduct. The record indicates that initially Respondent intimated that the problem was one for which it was not responsible and one which was above and beyond its control. This is so, because President Williams appeared reluctant to meet with the employees when he was first requested to do so by Janice Johnson. Secondly, when management officials were first apprised of the problems on Friday, April 20, their response was "we have no solutions." Notwithstanding, Respondent thereafter took several initiatives to protect the employees. It spoke to its landlord, Singer, which also owned the subject parking lot and park on which the hecklers would come to carry out their harassment of the employees. Respondent also called the police on several occasions, contacted the public bus company in an effort to have the bus rerouted to stop in front of its plant, considered building a fence around the lot, and secured a meeting with the Human Relations Commission. While all these exemplary things were done by Respondent, it should be noted that a key to an understanding of the issue is the right of the employees to complain, protest, and engage in other activities for the mutual aid and protection of fellow employees, even if the source of their grievance or concern is remote to the employer and the jobsite.

As counsel for the General Counsel points out, the Supreme Court in Eastex, Inc. v. N.L.R.B., 437 U.S. 556, 563 (1978), "held that the Section 7 right to engage in concerted activities for the purpose of . . . mutual aid and protection," was intended by Congress to protect such activities in the broader purpose, as well as the narrower purpose of "self organization" and "collective bargaining." The Board has given Section 7 a broad interpretation as enunciated by the Supreme Court in N.L.R.B. v. Peter Callier Kohler Swiss Chocolates Co., Inc., 130 F.2d 503 (2d. Cir. 1942), Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation Ltd., et. al. v. N.L.R.B., 114 F.2d 930 (1st Cir. 1940), and others. It is therefore clear that the conditions against which Janice Johnson and other employees protested by engaging in a work stoppage was protected activity under the Act and the above cited authorities.

B. Discharge of Janice Johnson

Although Respondent did not have direct control over the events which took place after the second-shift employees left the plant, a crucial question raised by the evidence is whether Respondent's termination of Janice Johnson was in any way motivated by her work stoppage activity.

Respondent contends it terminated Janice Johnson for making racially inflammatory statements about management during the employees-management meeting on April 23 when, among other things, Janice Johnson in effect said in reference to a white supervisor: "Why should we listen to these people . . . and their lies . . . We know all caucasians are animals." Since there were other negative remarks made by other employees during the meeting, President Williams asked Personnel Manager Stanley Mulligan to investigate and give him a report on the conduct of employees during the meeting. Mulligan's report gave information upon which Mulligan said President Williams terminated Janice Johnson, Walter Bond, and Deborah Charles. The latter three employees were charged with telling the employees management was not doing anything to help them with their problem. Johnson, Bond, and Charles were also charged with making inflammatory statements at the meeting, but Bond and Charles were not charged with making any racially derogatory remarks. Nevertheless, Bond and Charles were also terminated.

Hence, it is readily apparent that Walter Bond and Deborah Charles, who did not make racial remarks, were terminated because of their advocacy for and participation in the work stoppage activity, which activity is protected by the Act. Since Janice Johnson was the first one discharged along with Bond and Charles, it becomes obvious that she was part of a lot (Bond, Charles, and Johnson) which Respondent wanted to elimfnate from its employ. Thus, Respondent's discriminatory motive for Johnson's discharge is thereby revealed. Correspondingly, Respondent's contention that it discharged Janice Johnson for her racial remarks is exposed, partially as a supplementary reason, and obviously as a pretext to conceal its other reason. Nevertheless, since Johnson's discharge was in part motivated by her protected leadership role in the work stoppage activities, Respondent's discharge of her was discriminatory and violative of Section 8(a)(3) and (1) of the Act.

However, this does not go to say that Janice Johnson's racially, derogatory, and inflammatory remarks did not also constitute a valid reason for her termination. 418 Geary, Inc. d/b/a Stage Deli and Theater Lounge, 238 NLRB 276, 279, fn. 10 (1978); Diocese of Fort Wayne-South Bend Inc., 230 NLRB 267; and Charles Edwin Laffey, d/b/a Consolidated Services, 223 NLRB 845 (1976). However, the above finding does not condone the irresponsible and inflammatory racial remarks uttered by Janice Johnson during the Tuesday employees-management meeting. As the record shows one white supervisory employee left the employment of Respondent 2 days later. The record does not specifically show why said employee left the employment of Respondent and Respondent did not offer any evidence in this regard. Nevertheless, such language by Johnson was certainly excessive and was deemed damaging to employee-management relations, as well as to race relations among employees. It would be interesting to know what demands Janice Johnson would have exacted of management had management publicly made racially derogatory remarks in reference to black persons. Thus, it is clear that Respondent also had cause to discharge Johnson even though such cause was coupled with an unlawful motive (Johnson's protected concerted activities). Consequently, although I will recommend that Respondent make Johnson whole for the discriminatory discharge I will not recommend that she be reinstated by Respondent.

C. Respondent's Termination of Kathy Sudler

On Thursday, April 26, Kathy Sudler learned from employees in the plant that Janice Johnson and Walter Bond had been fired. In keeping with the employees' agreement to walk out if Respondent fired any of the protesting employees, Sudler proceeded to inform employees on the second shift that Respondent had fired Janice Johnson and Walter Bond and reminded them of their agreement to walk out. As she was in the process of doing this, Production Supervisor John Collier walked up and asked Sudler what was she doing back there. Sudler told him Janice Johnson had been fired and that all the employees were going to stick together. Collier in effect told Sudler she should leave work if she was going to continue her protest. He also asked her if she was going to stay or punch out. Sudler said she was going to punch out and she did in fact do so, along with fellow employees Charlene Johnson, Annettie McDaniels, Ricky Exume, Linda Banks, and Brenda Merrell. Supervisor Collier did not testify in this proceeding and I credit Sudler's testimony that she informed Collier that she and other employees were sticking together (walking out) in protest of Respondent's termination of Johnson and Bond.

Personnel Manager Stanley Mulligan gave the Company's account of Sudler's discharge since Collier did not testify herein. Manager Mulligan contended that Respondent (presumably Collier or other managerial personnel) did not know why Kathy Sudler and other employees walked off the job on April 26. However, the evidence contradicts this contention by the credited testimony of Sudler, who advised Supervisor Collier why she and other employees were walking off the job. Moreover, Sudler and other employees picketed the plant commencing at noon on the following day, April 27. They wore signs which protested the termination of fellow employees for engaging in the protest against racial harassment. I was not persuaded that none of Respondent's managerial staff or employees in favor of management did not observe Sudler and other employees picketing the plant on April 27. Hence, Respondent's denial of knowledge of the whereabouts of Sudler on April 27 is not convincing, in view of the fact that Sudler advised Supervisor Collier that she and other employees were walking off the job in protest of the discharge of fellow employees Johnson and Bond. The picket signs clearly indicated that the employees were protesting the terminations of their fellow workers. Hence when Collier decided to terminate Sudler and the other employees on April 27, he did so with knowledge of their purpose as stated to him by Sudler on April 26, as well as by their participation in the picket line on April 27. Therefore, Respondent's contention that it discharged Sudler and other employees for failure to report to work on April 27 because they left work early on April 26 is pretextual to conceal its real reason for terminating them for protesting the discharge of fellow employees Johnson and Bond.

It is well established law that Section 8(a)(1) of the Act protects the right of employees to protest the discharge of other employees, even if such other employees were discharged for lawful reasons. Auto-Truck Federal Credit Union, 232 NLRB 1024 (1977), Associated Cleaning Consultants & Services, Inc., 226 NLRB 1066 (1976), and Roemer Industries, Inc., 205 NLRB 63 (1973).

Based on the foregoing conclusions, findings, and legal authority, I conclude and find that Respondent's termination of Kathy Sudler and other employees who protested the termination of Johnson and Bond with her violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

IV. THE EFFECT OF THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES UPON COMMERCE

The activities of Respondent set forth in section II, above, occurring in close connection with its operations as described in section I, above, have a close, intimate, and substantial relationship to trade, traffic, and commerce among the several States and tend to lead to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow of commerce.

V. REMEDY

Having found that Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices warranting a remedial order, I shall recommend that it cease and desist therefrom and that it take certain affirmative action to effectuate the policies of the Act.

It having been found that Respondent interfered with, restrained, and coerced its employees in the exercise of their Section 7 protected rights in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act, by discriminatorily terminating employees Janice Johnson and Walter Bond for engaging in protected concerted protest activities on April 23 through 26; and that it discriminatorily terminated the employment of Kathy Sudler, because she along with fellow employees Charlene Johnson, Annettie McDaniels, Brenda Merrell, Ricky Exume, and Linda Banks walked off the job on April 26, 1979, to protest the terminations of Janice Johnson and Walter Bond, the recommended Order will provide that Respondent cease and desist from engaging in such unlawful conduct.

Because of the character of the unfair labor practices herein found, the recommended Order will provide that Respondent cease and desist from in any other manner whatsoever interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed by Section 7 of the Act. N.L.R.B. v. Entwistle Mfg. Co., 120 F.2d 532, 536 (4th Cir. 1941).

Upon the basis of the above findings of fact and upon the entire record of this case, I make the following:

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. J. W. Microelectronics Corporation is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

2. The second-shift employees work stoppage protest to management about racial and physical harassment by white male hecklers from the community as the employees leave the plant en route home, constituted protected concerted activity under the Act.

3. By discriminatorily terminating Janice Johnson's employment for engaging in protected concerted activity in instigating the work stoppage in protest of the employees' problem of racial harassment, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

4. By discriminatorily terminating the employment of Kathy Sudler because she engaged in a protected concerted work stoppage to protest Respondent's discharge of fellow employees Janice Johnson and Walter Bond, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

5. The aforesaid unfair labor practices affect commerce within the meaning of Section 2(6) and (7) of the Act.

November 18, 1981

DECISION AND ORDER

BY CHAIRMAN VAN DE WATER AND MEMBERS FANNING AND HUNTER

On June 29, 1981, Administrative Law Judge Howard Edelman issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, Respondents filed exceptions and a supporting brief.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and brief and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge and to adopt his recommended Order, as modified herein.[2]

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge, as modified below, and hereby orders that the Respondents, Air-Vac Industries, Inc., Leeward Constructors, Inc., and Air-Vac Environmental Limited, Smithtown, New York, their officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall take the action set forth in the said recommended Order, as so modified:

1. Add the following at the end of the last sentence to paragraph 1(a):

"The appropriate bargaining unit is:

"All drivers of Respondents employed at their Smithtown, New York location; excluding all other employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act."

2. Substitute the following for paragraph 1(e):

"(e) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them under Section 7 of the Act."

3. Substitute the attached notice for that of the Administrative Law Judge.

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

WE WILL NOT refuse to bargain in good faith with Local Union No. 282, affiliated with International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, herein called the Union, as the representative of the employees in the unit described herein, by refusing to sign the supplemental agreement submitted to us and agreed to on or about October 23, 1979.

WE WILL NOT refuse to implement the terms of the supplemental agreement described above and effective as of January 1, 1980.

WE WILL NOT bargain directly with employees, promising employees hospitalization benefits and other benefits or improvements in their working conditions or terms of employment.

WE WILL NOT threaten our employees with the partial closure of our operations and layoffs.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them under Section 7 of the Act.

WE WILL recognize the Union as the exclusive bargaining representative of our drivers with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment. The appropriate bargaining unit is:

> All drivers of the Employers employed at our Smithtown, New York location; excluding all other employees, guards and supervisors as defined in the Act.

WE WILL, upon request by the Union, execute the supplemental agreement agreed upon on or about October 23, 1979, and give retro-

[1] Respondents have excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Administrative Law Judge. It is the Board's established policy not to overrule an administrative law judge's resolutions with respect to credibility unless the clear preponderance of all of the relevant evidence convinces us that the resolutions are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, Inc., 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing his findings.

[2] In view of the nature and extent of Respondents' violations and in order to more fully effectuate the policies of the Act, we have, sua sponte, determined that the Administrative Law Judge's recommended broad cease-and-desist Order is unwarranted in this case. Accordingly, we will modify the Administrative Law Judge's recommended Order and notice to include the narrow injunctive language. See, generally, Hickmott Foods, Inc., 242 NLRB 1357 (1979).

The Administrative Law Judge inadvertently failed to include the description of the unit in his recommended Order and notice. We have corrected them accordingly. We also delete the Administrative Law Judge's reference to F. W. Woolworth Company, 90 NLRB 289 (1950), in his recommended remedy. See, e.g., Ogle Protection Service, Inc., 183 NLRB 682 (1970); Paramount Plastic Fabricators, Inc., 190 NLRB 170 (1971).

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

HOWARD EDELMAN, Administrative Law Judge: This case was heard before me on December 8, 1980, in Brooklyn, New York. The complaint in this case issued on May 30, 1980, based on an unfair labor practice charge filed on March 26, 1980, by Local Union No. 282, affiliated with International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, herein called the Union, which alleged that Air-Vac Industries, Inc., and Leeward Constructors Inc., a single employer, herein respectively called Respondent Air-Vac and Respondent Leeward and collectively called Respondent, violated Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, herein called the Act.

The complaint alleges, inter alia, that Respondents Air-Vac, Leeward, and Air-Vac Environmental Limited, herein called Respondent Environmental, violated Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act by refusing to sign and execute a collective-bargaining agreement with the Union.[1] The complaint also alleges that, following refusal by Respondents to execute the collective-bargaining agreement negotiated with the Union, Respondents bargained directly and individually with its employees, offered and promised its employees hospitalization benefits, and threatened its employees with a partial closing of its business and layoffs, in order to discourage their assistance and support for the Union.

The parties to this proceeding did not file briefs. Upon consideration of the entire record, and my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, I make the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. JURISDICTION

Respondent Air-Vac is a New York corporation which at all times material herein has maintained its principal office and place of business in Smithtown, New York. Respondent Air-Vac is engaged in the construction, maintenance, and rehabilitation of drain and sewer systems for private corporations. During the past year which period is representative of its annual operations generally, Respondent Air-Vac in the course and conduct of its business performed services valued in excess of $50,000 of which services were performed in New York State for customers who during the same period purchased and caused to be transported to their places of business goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000, which were delivered to their place of business in interstate commerce directly from States of the United States other than the State in which they are located.

Respondent Leeward is a New York corporation which at all times material herein has maintained its principal office and place of business in Smithtown, New York, operating out of the same facility as Respondent Air-Vac. Respondent Leeward is engaged in the maintenance and rehabilitation of drain and sewer systems for municipalities located in Nassau and Suffolk Counties. During the past year, which period is representative of its annual operations generally, Respondent Leeward, in the course and conduct of its business, performed services for such municipalities valued in excess of $50,000, which services were performed within New York State for municipalities which during the same period purchased and caused to be transported to their places of business goods and materials valued in excess of $50,000 which were delivered to their places of business in interstate commerce directly from States of the United States other than the State in which they are located.

Respondents Air-Vac and Leeward admit, and I find, that said Respondents are and have been at all times material herein employers engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

Respondents Air-Vac and Leeward also admit and I find that, at all times material herein, they have been affiliated businesses, with common officers, ownership, directors, and operators, and constitute a single integrated business enterprise, the said directors and operators formulating and administrating a common labor policy affecting the employees of said Respondents.

I further find that Respondent Environmental is and has been at all times material herein an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.[2]

II. THE LABOR ORGANIZATION INVOLVED

Respondents admit and I find that the Union is now, and has been at all times material herein, a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

III. THE FACTS

Respondent Leeward commenced its operation in 1970. Respondent Air-Vac commenced its operation in 1971. At all times herein, Respondents Leeward and Air-Vac were owned by Edward Jost and his wife, who were also the sole officers and directors of both the corporations. Additionally, Respondents Leeward and Air-Vac have had at all times since 1971 common supervisory personnel and employees and have operated out of the same facility. Prior to 1977, Respondents Air-Vac and Leeward performed maintenance and rehabilitation work on drain and sewer systems for municipalities located principally in the counties of Nassau and Suffolk

[1] During the course of the hearing herein, the complaint was amended to include Respondent Environmental as a single integrated business enterprise with Respondents Air-Vac and Leeward, having been affiliated businesses with common officers, ownership, directors, and operators whose directors and operators formulate and administer common labor policy.

[2] Respondent Environmental did not admit or deny that it was an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Sec. 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act. Nor are there any jurisdictional facts contained in the record which establish independently that Respondent Environmental is an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of the Act. This finding is based upon my conclusion described below that Respondents Air-Vac, Leeward, and Environmental are a single employer and that Respondent Environmental is an alter ego of Respondent Leeward. B.J.S. Drugs, 243 NLRB 830 (1979).

Sometime in or around November 1977, Respondent Air-Vac commenced performing drain and sewer system construction and maintenance work for private companies in the heavy construction industry located primarily in the counties of Nassau and Suffolk. At this time, in order to be able to perform such work for private companies and to avoid labor disputes, Respondent Air-Vac signed a collective-bargaining agreement with the Union covering its drivers who perform such construction and maintenance work.[3] The collective-bargaining agreement herein expired on June 30, 1978. Thereafter, Respondent Air-Vac entered into a subsequent collective-bargaining agreement with the Union which was effective from July 1, 1978, through June 30, 1982.

At the time Respondent Air-Vac initially entered into its collective-bargaining agreement with the Union, it was orally agreed by union representatives and Edward Jost that all heavy construction work would be performed through Respondent Air-Vac and that such work would be covered by the Union's contract. It was further agreed that Respondent Leeward would continue to operate as a nonunion corporation performing municipal work exclusively.

From November 1977 through July 1980, Respondents Air-Vac and Leeward have employed five to seven drivers in a single common unit. Following the execution of the union contract, a seniority list was prepared by Respondent Air-Vac. Those drivers having the highest seniority were awarded the more lucrative Air-Vac work. Since such work was covered by the Union's contract, the drivers received a higher rate of pay than those performing similar work for Respondent Leeward. Additionally, drivers performing work for Respondent Air-Vac received the contract benefits which included pension and hospitalization benefits. The lower seniority drivers performing work for Respondent Leeward were not covered by the Union's contract and received no hospitalization or pension benefits.

At times, depending on the volume of work available, all Respondents' employees might be performing work for Respondent Air-Vac. At other times the entire complement of employees might be performing work for Respondent Leeward. Generally, however, the two to three employees with the lowest seniority were assigned to work jobs for municipalities performed by Respondent Leeward.

Sometime in September 1979 the employees of Respondents Air-Vac and Leeward, including Union Shop Steward Thomas Sallie, met with Edward Jost. The employees demanded that Jost provide hospitalization and other benefits for those employees working on Respondent Leeward's jobs. These employees were not performing sufficient work under the Union's contract with Respondent Air-Vac to qualify for the union benefits provided in such agreement. When Jost refused, the Union commenced a strike. The strike concluded when Jost agreed to meet with union representatives for the purpose of negotiating a supplemental agreement on behalf of the employees performing work for Respondent Leeward.

Sometime during the latter part of October 1979, Jost and his attorney, Leonard Kimmell, met at the Union's offices with Union Representative Andrew Boggia, Union Attorney Brian McCarthy, and Union Steward Thomas Sallie. During this meeting, Jost explained that he could not afford to pay the rates and benefits provided for in Respondent Air-Vac's agreement on municipal jobs performed by Respondent Leeward because the municipalities paid lower contract rates than the private corporations. Boggia told Jost that the Union would do everything it possibly could to influence the municipalities to raise their contract rates. During this meeting, all terms of a supplemental agreement between Respondent Leeward and the Union were agreed upon. After reaching an agreement, Boggia reassured Jost that he would contact the various town supervisors and exert union influence in order to convince the municipalities to raise the contract rate paid to Respondent Leeward. Jost replied that, if the rates were not increased, there was no way he could pay the new contract rate. Boggia responded that he could not help this.

The agreed-upon terms were incorporated into a written "supplemental agreement" drawn up and submitted to the Union for employee ratification and signature by Respondents Air-Vac and Leeward (by its attorney, Kimmell). The supplemental agreement submitted to the Union provided in part as follows:

> AGREEMENT entered into between Air-Vac Industries Inc. and its subsidiary Leeward Constructors Inc., 137 Oakside Drive, Smithtown, New York (herein called the Company) and Building Material Local Union No. 282, affiliated with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, 1975 Linden Boulevard, Elmont, New York (herein called the Union).
> WHEREAS, Air-Vac Industries Inc. and the Union entered into a collective bargaining agreement effective July 1, 1978 covering the terms and conditions of employment of its members employed by Air-Vac, and
> WHEREAS, the employees of Air-Vac have from time to time been assigned to work for Leeward on contracts with various public municipalities at which time they did not receive wages and fringe benefits in accordance with the contract between Air-Vac and the Union, and
> WHEREAS, such assignments of employees to Leeward to perform public work was done in good faith belief that the bargaining agreement between Air-Vac and the Union was not applicable to such

---

[3] In November 1977, Respondent Air-Vac became a signatory to the heavy construction excavating collective-bargaining agreement between Nassau-Suffolk Constructors Association Inc., an employer association, and the Union.

> employees when performing public work for Leeward, and
> WHEREAS, it has been established that the contract rates paid to Leeward by public municipalities are not presently sufficient to enable the Company (Respondent Leeward) to grant employees all the wages and other benefits under the bargaining agreement with the Union, and
> WHEREAS, the parties agree that the continued operation of the Company (Respondent Leeward) is in the best interests of the employees,
> NOW THEREFORE, it is hereby agreed as follows:
> 1. The collective bargaining agreement effective July 1, 1978 between Air-Vac and the Union shall cover at all times, all of the Company's (Respondent Leeward's) employees including such times as they are employed by the Company performing work for public municipalities except as set forth below.

Thereafter, paragraphs 2, 3, and 4 of the supplemental agreement provided for wage rates which, although below that provided in Respondent Air-Vac's agreement, were more than presently in effect for work performed for Respondent Leeward, and for contributions by Respondent Leeward into the Union's pension, welfare, and annuity funds for those employees performing municipal work for Respondent Leeward. The concluding paragraph 6 of the supplemental agreement provided as follows:

> 6. In consideration for the undertakings by the Company (Respondent Leeward) set forth above, the Union and its members employed by the Company agreed to make no claim for unpaid wages or unpaid trust fund contributions under the bargaining agreement that may have arisen prior to the date of this agreement.

There is no language contained in the supplemental agreement as drawn up by Respondent Leeward's attorney, which would indicate directly or impliedly that the supplemental agreement was in any way conditioned upon the municipalities raising the contract rate for work performed by Respondent Leeward on behalf of such municipalities.

Upon receiving the supplemental agreement prepared by Respondent Leeward's attorney, Kimmell, Boggia turned over the agreement to Shop Steward Sallie to obtain ratification by the employees. Shortly thereafter Sallie met with all employees and described the terms of the supplemental agreement to them. The employees thereupon orally ratified the agreement. Sallie returned the agreement to Boggia informing him of the employee ratifications. Boggia thereupon signed the supplemental agreement and submitted it to his attorney, McCarthy, who forwarded the agreement to Attorney Kimmell.[4]

Sometime in January or February 1980, Boggia telephoned Respondents and spoke to Jost's wife. He asked Mrs. Jost when the supplemental agreement would be signed and she indicated that her husband was out of town and she did not know whether the agreement had been signed. About 1 month later, on or about the end of February, when the agreement had not been submitted to the Union, Boggia telephoned Kimmell and asked him when the agreement would be signed. Kimmell stated that he had given the agreement to Jost and indicated he did not know when and if Jost had signed the agreement. Boggia informed Kimmell that he intended to file charges with the National Labor Relations Board.

Jost admits that he did not sign the supplemental agreement submitted to him by the Union, nor did he implement the terms and conditions set forth therein. Jost contends that the agreement was orally conditioned upon the Union being able to obtain a higher contract rate from the municipalities for work performed for them. In this respect, Jost testified, "My feeling was that if we had gotten the increase [from the municipalities], we certainly would have went [sic] along with the supplemental sgreement."

Sometime in January 1980, Jost assembled all employees and informed them that he was not going to sign the supplemental agreement between Respondent Leeward and the Union. He explained to the employees that he would not be able to go along with the supplemental agreement because he had been unable to get an increase in his contract rate from the municipalities. He informed the employees that, if he had to pay the contract benefits and wage increases provided in the supplemental agreement, he would have to close his doors and give up the municipal work and that employees would lose their jobs. He also told the employees that he would try to provide them with hospital benefits in lieu of the benefits provided for in the supplemental agreement provided he could obtain such benefits at a lower rate than that set forth in the supplemental agreement. He asked the men to think about this and to get back to him.

Sometime later, employees informed Jost that they would rather have the union contract but would not close the door to his proposal entirely.

At all times prior to January 1980, all employees who performed work for municipalities were on Respondent Leeward's payroll and received Respondent Leeward's paychecks. After January 1980, the employees who performed work for municipalities were transferred to the payroll of Respondent Environmental.

Respondent Environmental was formed in 1979. It is owned solely by Jost and his wife who are the sole officers and directors as well. Respondent Environmental operates out of the same facility as Respondents Air-Vac and Leeward and employs the same supervisory personnel. Prior to January 1980, Respondent Environmental was primarily engaged in the cleaning of oil spills on highways, stack cleaning, and the wholesale sale of various chemical cleaners and degreasers to municipalities and private corporations used for the purpose of cleaning sewers and drains. Prior to January 1980, Respondent Environmental employed on its payroll a single outside salesman who was engaged in the selling of the aforementioned chemical cleaners and degreasers to municipalities and private corporations.

[4] The record does not disclose the date ratification took place. Nor does the record disclose the date when Union Attorney McCarthy forwarded the supplemental agreement to Respondent.

Subsequent to January 1980, all those employees classified as drivers who were employed by Respondent Leeward, performing work for municipalities, were transferred to Respondent Environmental's payroll. Thereafter, these employees received Respondent Environmental checks. These employees working for Respondent Environmental, excluding the outside salesman, continued to perform the same work under the same supervision, using the same equipment as they had been performing when working for Respondent Leeward.[5]

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

A. The Single Employer Issue

A critical issue presented in this case is whether Respondents Air-Vac, Leeward, and Environmental constitute a single employer within the meaning of the Act.

The Supreme Court held in Radio & Television Broadcast Technicians, Local Union 1264, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, AFL-CIO, et al. v. Broadcast Service of Mobile, Inc., 380 U.S. 255, 256 (1965), that in determining whether enterprises constitute a single employer:

> The controlling criteria set out and elaborated in Board decisions are interrelation of operations, common management, centralized control of labor relations and common ownership.

The Board in Blumenfeld Theatres Circuit, a partnership, et al., 240 NLRB 206, 214, 215 (1979), held that a "single employer" status, for the purposes of the National Labor Relations Act, depends upon all the circumstances of the case [and] that not all of the 'controlling criteria' specified by the Supreme Court [in Radio & Television Broadcast Technicians, supra] need be present."

Turning our consideration to the instant case, it is admitted by Respondents Air-Vac and Leeward that these two entities are affiliated businesses with common officers, ownership, directors, and operators and constitute a single business enterprise, the said directors and operators formulating and administering a common labor policy. However, it is denied that Respondent Environmental is a single employer along with Respondents Air-Vac and Leeward. In this connection, the evidence establishes that all three Respondent Companies are owned by Jost and his wife. Moreover, Jost and his wife are the sole directors and officers of all three corporations, formulating and administering a common labor policy. Additionally, Respondents operate out of the same facility using the same equipment. The employees of all three Companies are supervised by a single supervisor. Additionally, and most significantly, Respondents utilize a single complement of employees.

In view of the admissions by Respondents Air-Vac and Leeward as to single employer status and in view of the evidence described above, and the above-cited authorities, I conclude that Respondents Air-Vac, Leeward, and Environmental constitute a single integrated enterprise, and a single employer within the meaning of the Act.

B. The Appropriate Unit

Although I have concluded that Respondents Air-Vac, Leeward, and Environmental constitute a single employer, such conclusion does not necessarily support a finding that a single employerwide unit is appropriate for bargaining. In this connection, the Supreme Court, following the Board's theory in a line of prior Board cases, held in South Prairie Construction Co. v. Local 627, International Union of Operating Engineers, AFL-CIO, et al., 425 U.S. 800, 805 (1976), that a determination that two affiliated firms constitute a single employer "does not necessarily establish that an employerwide unit is appropriate, as the factors which are relevant in identifying of the breadth of an employer's operation are not conclusively determinative of the scope of an appropriate unit." The Supreme Court remanded to the Board for determination of the question of whether the employees employed by Peter Kiewit Sons' Co. and South Prairie Construction Co. constituted an appropriate unit within the meaning of Section 9 of the Act.

On remand the Board in Peter Kiewit Sons' Co. and South Prairie Construction Co., 231 NLRB 76, 77 (1977), held that in determining the appropriate bargaining unit, the following factors were particularly relevant: "the bargaining history; the functional integration of operations; the differences in the types of work and skills of employees; the extent of centralization of management and supervision, particularly in regard to labor relations, hiring, discipline, and control of day-to-day operations; and the extent of interchange and contact between the groups of employees."

An examination of the facts of the instant case establish that Jost and his wife are in complete charge of all three Companies and orders are passed from them to a single supervisor utilized by all three Companies. Additionally, there is but a single complement of employees. Prior to January-February 1980, this single complement of employees performed work either for Respondent Air-Vac or Respondent Leeward. The type of work performed by the employees comprising this single complement was essentially the same work except that Respondent Air-Vac employees performed work for private companies whereas Respondent Leeward's employees performed work for municipalities. Employees were selected to perform the more desirable and higher paid Respondent Air-Vac work, based on a single seniority list. The employees having the greatest seniority received assignments for Respondent Air-Vac work while those within the same complement with lesser seniority received assignments for Respondent Leeward work. At certain times, depending upon work availability, the entire complement of employees might be performing work for Respondent Air-Vac. On other occasions, where no Respondent Air-Vac work was available, the entire complement of employees might perform work for Respondent Leeward. Most of the time those employees with greater seniority performed work for Respondent Air-Vac while those employees on the lower end of the seniority list performed work for Respondent Leeward. A single supervisor supervised the work of all employees whether working for Respondent Air-Vac or Respondent Leeward.

[5] Sometime after March 2, 1980, Respondents Air-Vac, Leeward, and Environmental moved from their 137 Oak Side Drive, Smithtown, location to 45 Terry Road, Smithtown. To date, all operations operate from this facility.

Prior to the January-February 1980 period, Respondent Environmental operated essentially as a sales corporation, employing a single outside salesman. At some point in time during the January-February 1980 period, and at all times thereafter, following the negotiation of the supplemental agreement herein, all employees performing work for municipalities and on the payroll of Respondent Leeward receiving Respondent Leeward's checks were transferred to the payroll of Respondent Environmental and received Respondent Environmental checks. The effect of this transfer was that the employees performing work previously performed by Respondent Leeward were now performing the same work for Respondent Environmental. Except for the change of payroll all else remained the same. Thus, the same employees performed the same work under the same supervision. The facts establish that Respondent Leeward and Respondent Environmental had the same management, had the same business purpose and operation, utilized the same equipment, serviced the same customers, employed the same supervision, and utilized the same single complement of employees. The Board had held that, in these circumstances, an alter ego relationship between two such enterprises exists. See Young's Metal Fabricators and Roofing, Inc. and Young's Sheet Metal and Roofing Inc., 241 NLRB 978 (1979); Crawford Door Sales Company, Inc., and Cordes Door Company, Inc., 226 NLRB 1144 (1976).

I therefore conclude that, in addition to Respondents Air-Vac, Leeward, and Environmental constituting a single employer, Respondent Environmental was an alter ego of Respondent Leeward. I further conclude that, based on all the factors recited above, including common ownership, officers, and directors, common supervision, a common facility, single complement of employees, the similar nature of the work involved, and the utilization of the same equipment, that the single unit of employees which I find to be commonly employed by Respondents Air-Vac, Leeward, and Environmental constitutes an appropriate unit for bargaining within the meaning of the Act.

C. Representative Status of the Union

The facts establish that the Union has, at all times material herein, represented the employees of Respondent Air-Vac. This is established by the existing collective-bargaining agreement between Respondent Air-Vac and the Union. In view of my conclusions, described above, that Respondents Air-Vac, Leeward, and Environmental constitute a single employer and that Respondent Environmental is an alter ego of Respondent Leeward, and in view of my further conclusion that Respondents herein employ the same complement of employees, I conclude that, at all times material herein, the Union represented such complement or unit of employees which I have found to be an appropriate unit for bargaining.

Such conclusion is further established by an examination of the language of the supplemental agreement drawn up by Respondents' counsel contained in the "whereas" provisions of the agreement, where it is set forth by way of a recitation of prior bargaining history:

> [T]he employees of [Respondent] Air-Vac have from time to time been assigned to work for [Respondent] Leeward on contracts with various public municipalities at which time they did not receive wages and fringe benefits in accordance with the contract between [Respondent] Air-Vac and the Union, and WHEREAS, such assignments of employees to [Respondent] Leeward to perform this public work was done in a good faith belief that the bargaining agreement between [Respondent] Air-Vac and the Union was not applicable to such employees when performing public work for [Respondent] Leeward.

Thus, as among themselves, the Union and Respondents recognized that, while the Union at all times material herein represented the single complement of employees employed by all Respondents herein, the contract benefits were applicable to only the employees when performing Respondent Air-Vac work. The effect of the supplemental agreement is not to expand the scope of employee coverage of the bargaining unit, but rather to increase the type of work covered by the agreement.

D. The Supplemental Agreement

The next issue presented is whether the Union and Respondents reached an agreement on the terms of the supplemental agreement involved in this case. Respondents take the position that the agreement reached was conditioned upon Respondents' receiving a higher contract rate from the municipalities for the work they performed. Respondents' contention is based on Jost's testimony that he understood the promise made by Boggia during the negotiation on October 23 that the Union would use its influence in obtaining from the municipalities such higher contract rate to be an implied agreement by the Union that the supplemental agreement was conditioned on Respondents' obtaining such higher rate from the municipalities. However, this contention is not supported by the evidence. There is no evidence that Boggia or any other union representative stated expressly at any time during the negotiations that the supplemental agreement negotiated was conditioned upon Respondents' obtaining a higher contract rate from the municipalities. Boggia affirmatively denies that such statement was made during the negotiations or at any other time. Moreover, an inspection of the terms of the supplemental agreement, including the preliminary language, fails to include anywhere within the four corners of the agreement any language, either directly or by implication, indicating that such agreement was conditional on Respondent Leeward's receiving a greater rate from municipalities. Clearly, had the agreement been so conditioned, such condition would have been inserted within the agreement itself. That this is true is established by the inclusion in the preliminary language reciting the reason for the differences in the lower rates and benefit coverage to be applied to employees performing work for Respondent Leeward where it is set forth as follows:

> WHEREAS, it has been established that the contract rates paid to [Respondent] Leeward by public municipalities are not presently sufficient to enable the company to grant employees all the wages and other benefits under the bargaining agreement with the Union.

In view of the meticulous preliminary language preceding the actual terms of the supplemental agreement, as illustrated by the above example, I conclude that, had such conditional agreement existed, it is inconceivable that such condition would not have been inserted in the agreement. In this regard, the agreement was drawn up by Respondents' counsel. I therefore conclude that the parties did not condition the supplemental agreement on Respondent Leeward's receiving higher contract rates from the municipalities.

Moreover, under the parole evidence rule, a prior contemporaneous oral agreement may not alter the terms of a written contract. The Board has consistently applied this rule in refusing to permit a party to a collective-bargaining agreement to vary the terms thereof by proving a contemporaneous or prior oral agreement or undertaking. Gollin Block and Supply Company, 243 NLRB 350 (1979), and cases cited therein.

Neither can it be argued by Respondents that its financial inability to implement the terms of the supplemental agreement because of the failure to obtain from the municipalities an increased contract rate excuses the unilateral repudiation of the supplemental agreement. Nassau County Health Facilities Association, Inc. and its Members; et al., 227 NLRB 1680, 1684 (1977).

There is no dispute but that the parties reached agreement on all substantive terms and conditions set forth in the supplemental agreement. This is established by the testimony of Boggia and Jost and reflected by the supplemental agreement drawn up by Respondents' attorney and submitted to the Union.

In view of my conclusion that there was no understanding or condition, either oral or written, whereby the supplemental agreement herein was conditioned on Respondent Leeward's obtaining a higher rate from the municipalities, and in view of my conclusion that Respondents and the Union agreed upon all substantive terms and conditions set forth in the supplemental agreement, I find that Respondents, by failing and refusing to execute this supplemental agreement and to implement its terms, has violated Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act. H. J. Heinz Company v. N.L.R.B., 311 U.S. 514 (1941); Gollin Block and Supply Company, supra.

E. The 8(a)(1) Violations

The undisputed evidence establishes that Respondents bargained directly and individually with its employees in January 1980 when Jost assembled all employees and informed them that he was not going to sign the supplemental agreement between Respondent Leeward and the Union. At this time he explained to the employees that if he had to pay the benefits provided in the supplemental agreement he would have to close his doors and give up the municipal work and that employees would lose their jobs. During this meeting he told the employees that he would try to provide them with hospital benefits in lieu of the benefits provided in the supplemental agreement provided he could obtain such benefits at a lower rate than provided in the supplemental agreement. It is also undisputed that such meeting took place without the knowledge, consultation, consent, or presence of union representatives. The Board has long held that dealing with employees directly at a time when there is a recognized collective-bargaining representative and promising or discussing terms and conditions not sanctioned by a collective-bargaining agreement and outside the presence of any union representative constitutes direct dealing with employees and interference with their Section 7 rights. Accordingly, I conclude that Jost's promise that he would try to provide employees with hospital benefits in lieu of those benefits provided in the supplemental agreement constituted direct dealing with employees and that, by engaging in such activity, Respondents thereby violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. Mountaineer Excavating Co., Inc., 241 NLRB 414 (1979); John M. Lastooka, trading as Ram Construction Company, 228 NLRB 769 (1977). I also find Jost's statement to the employees at this meeting, that if he had to pay the contract benefits and wage increases provided in the supplemental agreement, he would have to close his doors, give up the municipal work, and employees would lose their jobs, to be an unlawful threat of partial closing with an implied threat of loss of jobs, violative of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act. Henry A. Young d/b/a Columbia Engineers International, 249 NLRB 1023 (1980).

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondents Air-Vac, Leeward, and Environmental are, individually, employers engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. Respondents Air-Vac, Leeward, and Environmental constitute a single employer within the meaning of the Act.

3. Respondent Environmental is an alter ego of Respondent Leeward.

4. The Union is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

5. The Union is the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of all drivers employed by Respondents Air-Vac, Leeward, and Environmental.

6. At all times material herein, since 1976, the Union has had a collective-bargaining agreement with Respondent Air-Vac covering the employees in the bargaining unit described above in paragraph 5 of the Conclusions of Law.

7. On or about October 23, 1979, the Union and Respondents Air-Vac, Leeward, and Environmental reached an agreement as to all terms of a supplemental collective-bargaining agreement covering the employees in the bargaining unit described above in paragraph 5.

8. Respondents Air-Vac, Leeward, and Environmental by refusing to sign the agreement described above in paragraph 7 and by refusing to implement the terms of such agreement violated Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act.

9. Respondents Air-Vac, Leeward, and Environmental by bargaining directly and individually with the employees described above in paragraph 5 and by offering and promising such employees hospitalization benefits and other benefits and improvements violated Section 8(a)(1).

10. Respondents Air-Vac, Leeward, and Environmental by threatening its employees with partial closure of its business and impliedly threatening its employees with layoff violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

11. The aforesaid unfair labor practices have a close, intimate, and substantial effect on the free flow of commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondents Air-Vac, Leeward, and Environmental have engaged in unfair labor practices in violation of Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act, I shall recommend that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and take the following affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act. My recommended Order will require Respondents Air-Vac, Leeward, and Environmental to execute the supplemental agreement submitted to them described hereinabove, and to apply all the provisions of said supplemental agreement retroactively to January 1, 1980, and to further make whole unit employees as appropriate for failure to do so in the manner described by the Board in F. W. Woolworth Company, 90 NLRB 289 (1950), and with interest thereon computed in the manner and amount prescribed in Florida Steel Corporation, 231 NLRB 651 (1977),[6] making available, if necessary, records for computation purposes and posting the attached notice.

Upon the basis of the foregoing findings of fact, conclusions of law, and upon the entire record in this case, I hereby issue the following recommended:

ORDER[7]

The Respondents, Air-Vac Industries, Inc., Leeward Constructors, Inc., and Air-Vac Environmental Limited, herein called Respondents Air-Vac, Leeward, and Environmental, respectively, their officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Refusing to bargain in good faith with Local Union No. 282, affiliated with International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, herein called the Union, as the representative of its employees in the unit described herein by refusing to sign the supplemental agreement submitted to them and agreed to on or about October 23, 1979.

(b) Refusing to implement the terms of the supplemental agreement described above and effective as of January 1, 1980.

(c) Bargaining directly with employees and promising employees hospitalization benefits and other benefits or improvements in their working conditions or terms of employment.

(d) Threatening its employees with layoffs and the partial closure of its operations.

(e) In any other manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed them in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action designed and found necessary to effectuate the policies of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended:

(a) Recognize the Union as the exclusive bargaining representative of the employees in the unit described above with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment.

(b) Upon request by the Union, execute the supplemental agreement agreed upon on or about October 23, 1979, and give retroactive effect to all of the provisions in said supplemental agreement as of January 1, 1980.

(c) Jointly and severally, make whole the employees in the unit described above, in the manner and to the extent set forth and prescribed in "The Remedy" section of this Decision.

(d) Preserve and, upon request, make available to the Board or its agents, for examination and copying, all payroll records, social security payment records, timecards, personnel records and reports, and all other records necessary to analyze and determine the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order, if any.

(e) Post at its place of business copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[8] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 29, after being duly signed by Respondents' authorized representative, shall be posted immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by them for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondents to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(f) Notify the Regional Director for Region 29, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps Respondents have taken to comply herewith.

[6] See, generally, Isis Plumbing & Heating Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962).

[7] In the event no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Rules and Regulations of the National Labor Relations Board, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order herein, shall as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules and Regulations, be adopted by the Board and become its findings, conclusions, and Order, and all objections thereto shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[8] In the event that this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

Teamsters Local Union No. 574, affiliated with International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen, and Helpers of America and Lola Wheeler. Case 14-CA-14589

November 19, 1981

DECISION AND ORDER

BY MEMBERS FANNING, JENKINS, AND ZIMMERMAN

On June 14, 1981, Administrative Law Judge Walter H. Maloney, Jr., issued the attached Decision in this proceeding. Thereafter, Respondent filed exceptions and a supporting brief, and the Charging Party filed a brief in response to Respondent's exceptions.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

The Board has considered the record and the attached Decision in light of the exceptions and briefs and has decided to affirm the rulings, findings,[1] and conclusions of the Administrative Law Judge, to modify his remedy,[2] and to adopt his recommended Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 10(c) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board adopts as its Order the recommended Order of the Administrative Law Judge and hereby orders that the Respondent, Teamsters Local Union No. 574, affiliated with International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen, and Helpers of America, Cape Girardeau, Missouri, its officers, agents, and representatives, shall take the action set forth in the said recommended Order.

DECISION

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

WALTER H. MALONEY, JR., Administrative Law Judge: This case came on for hearing before me at Cape Girardeau, Missouri, upon an unfair labor practice complaint,[1] issued by the Board's Regional Director for Region 14, which alleges that Respondent Teamsters Local Union 574, affiliated with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen, and Helpers of America,[2] violated Section 8(a)(1), (3), and (5) of the Act. More particularly, the complaint alleges that Respondent discriminatorily discharged Lola Wheeler because of her union activities and her protected concerted activities, that it unlawfully repudiated its collective-bargaining obligations with the labor organization representing its office clerical and building maintenance employees and unlawfully withdrew recognition from that Union, and that it refused to reinstate unfair labor practice strikers upon their unconditional offer to return to work. Respondent insists that Wheeler is a supervisory employee who is not entitled to the protection of the Act, that the labor organization with whom a preceding administration at Local 574 had concluded a collective-bargaining agreement covering office and janitorial employees was unlawfully assisted, that the collective-bargaining agreement it negotiated is null and void, and that the strikers who requested reinstatement were economic strikers who had been replaced at the time they tendered their applications to return to work. Upon these contentions, the issues herein were joined.[3]

[1] Respondent has excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Administrative Law Judge. It is the Board's established policy not to overrule an administrative law judge's resolutions with respect to credibility unless the clear preponderance of all of the relevant evidence convinces us that the resolutions are incorrect. Standard Dry Wall Products, Inc., 91 NLRB 544 (1950), enfd. 188 F.2d 362 (3d Cir. 1951). We have carefully examined the record and find no basis for reversing his findings.

[2] In the remedy section of his Decision, the Administrative Law Judge recommended that the backpay for four unfair labor practice strikers should commence running 5 days after they first requested reinstatement. In Drug Package Company, Inc., 228 NLRB 108 (1977), the Board pointed out that the 5-day period after which backpay for an unfair labor practice striker begins to run exists to provide a reasonable accommodation between the interest of the employees in returning to work as quickly as possible and the employer's need to effectuate that return in an orderly manner. On the other hand, if an employer has rejected, attached an unlawful condition to, or ignored an unconditional offer to return to work, the 5-day period serves no useful purpose and backpay will commence as of the unconditional offer to return to work. Interstate Paper Supply Company, Inc., 251 NLRB 1423 (1980). In the instant case, Respondent ignored the offer to return to work by the four unfair labor practice strikers. In such circumstances, the Administrative Law Judge erred by imposing a 5-day period on the tolling of backpay for the four unfair labor practice strikers, and, therefore, we have modified the Administrative Law Judge's recommended remedy, and we shall direct that the backpay for the four unfair labor practice strikers shall commence from their first offer to return to work. For the reasons set forth in their partial dissent in Drug Package Co., Inc., supra, Members Fanning and Jenkins would in any event begin Respondent's backpay obligation from the date the strikers offered to return to work.

[1] The principal docket entries in this case are as follows:

Charge filed herein by Lola Wheeler against Respondent (herein sometimes called Local 574 or the Teamsters) on January 12, 1981, and an amended charge filed on February 13, 1981; complaint issued by the Regional Director for Region 14 against Respondent on February 19, 1981; Respondent's answer filed on March 3, 1981; hearing held in Cape Girardeau, Missouri, on March 23 and 24, 1981; briefs filed with me by the General Counsel, the Charging Party, and Respondent on or before April 27, 1981.

[2] Respondent admits, and I find, that it is a labor organization which represents employees in negotiating wages, hours, and terms and conditions of employment with employers located in southeast Missouri, and is an integral part of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen, and Helpers of America, a multistate labor organization. Respondent maintains its place of business at Cape Girardeau, Missouri. In the course and conduct of its business, Respondent collects from its members dues, initiation fees, and per capita taxes in excess of $50,000 per year and annually remits from Cape Girardeau, Missouri, to the International Headquarters in Washington, D.C., per capita taxes in excess of $50,000. Accordingly, Respondent is an employer within the meaning of Sec. 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act. Office Employees and Building Maintenance Employees Unit of Teamsters Local Union No. 574 is a labor organization within the meaning of Sec. 2(5) of the Act.

259 NLRB No. 37

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. THE UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES ALLEGED

Respondent is a large Teamsters local which has about 26,000 members. Its jurisdiction extends to most of southeastern Missouri. It is affiliated with the Teamsters International, the Teamsters Central States Conference, the Mo-Kan Conference, and Teamsters Joint Council 13. Like most Teamsters locals, its principal operating head is the secretary-treasurer, who is elected by the membership for a 3-year term. Other officials who are elected at the same time may or may not hold full-time positions with the Local. When they do, they are employed and paid as business representatives. These elected officials, together with three trustees, constitute the Local's executive board.

Charging Party Lola Wheeler has been an employee of Local 574 since 1956. Like all of the members of Respondent's office staff, she is a dues-paying member of Local 574[4] and reports to the secretary-treasurer. Until January 7, 1981, she was employed without a break in service under four different secretary-treasurers. Originally, she was the only employee on Respondent's clerical staff. As the Local grew in membership and activity, three additional clerical positions were added and Wheeler assumed the title of office manager. A fifth member of the office and janitorial bargaining unit is a part-time janitorial employee who performs routine cleaning and small maintenance chores.

This case arises out of the ashes of a bitter internal political dispute which racked Local 574 throughout 1980. At a referendum election conducted on December 14, 1980, incumbent Secretary-Treasurer Donald Hurst was defeated by a slim margin by David Prater, a longtime member of an insurgent Teamsters group known as PROD. With one exception, Prater's entire slate of candidates, which campaigned as "Team 80," defeated the incumbent slate headed by Hurst. Because of the issues which emerged in the campaign between Hurst and Prater, the office staff became politically involved in the election dispute. They were discharged shortly after Prater took office on January 1, 1981.

Because of her long tenure as a member of the office staff and as office manager, Wheeler was well known to the rank-and-file of Local 574 and had known Prater for many years. In 1977, in her capacity as a member of Local 574, she was involved in a floor fight with Prater at a membership meeting over a change in the bylaws which Prater had proposed. Prater sought a bylaws restriction which would have limited the wages of office personnel to $6 per hour. The net effect of this amendment would, at that time, have cut Wheeler's salary in half and would have caused substantial reductions in the pay of the other clerical employees. She was successful in defeating this proposal by an overwhelming majority.

In June 1980, after the campaign for Local offices was well underway, Prater visited Wheeler at her home and asked her to remain neutral in the campaign. She assured Prater that she did not want to become involved in the campaign. However, as the campaign took shape, Prater, who was running on an economy platform, became critical of the salaries and the performance of the office personnel.[5] The office staff became increasingly disquieted during the summer months by recurring rumors that they would all be fired if Prater were elected. Accordingly, they decided to organize.

In informal conversations among themselves, the office staff discussed various options open to them. They rejected a suggestion that they should join a union affiliated with another international labor organization, because they did not want to do anything which would jeopardize the health, welfare, and pension benefits they enjoyed as members of the Teamsters. They also rejected the idea that they should join Teamsters Local 688, which represents office clerical employees employed by various Missouri Teamsters locals. They felt that Local 688, which is located in St. Louis, was too far from Cape Girardeau to do an effective job of representing them. Their only remaining option was to form their own labor organization and this they decided to do, calling it Office and Building Maintenance Employees Unit of Teamsters Local Union 574. Because of her experience and ability, the other employees looked to Lola Wheeler to serve as their spokesperson and she did so.

Wheeler approached Hurst with the information about what the office staff intended to do. Hurst expressed the opinion that they would be better protected if they joined Teamsters Local 688 and volunteered to contact Local 688 on their behalf. When Wheeler told Hurst that the office staff was set on forming their own union, he said he would recognize and deal with it.

During the late summer months of 1980, the office staff drew up a list of proposals and secured contracts from other locals to assist them in formulating contract language. They were not at all dissatisfied with existing wages and benefits and incorporated them into their proposals. Their overriding concern was job security. Among other things they proposed a provision prohibiting Respondent from discharging clerical and janitorial employees without just cause. They also proposed a grievance and arbitration procedure resulting in final decisions by a neutral on disputed matters of contract interpretation and application. They also asked for severance pay, a benefit which they did not currently enjoy. Wheeler had several conferences with Hurst concerning the provisions of the proposed contract. As most of the proposals incorporated existing benefits, there were few disputes between them. Hurst rejected certain proposals relating to paid holidays and vacations but finally agreed to a 19-month contract which he signed on September 2, 1980. On the union side, the contract was signed not only by Wheeler but also by each member of the bargaining unit. There was addendum relating solely to the janitorial services performed by Heisserer and she signed this portion of the contract.

[4] While the collective-bargaining agreement discussed hereinafter contains a provision requiring office and janitorial employees to be members of Local 574, it is undisputed that this longstanding practice has existed in order that these employees may be eligible to participate in Teamsters health, welfare, and pension plans.

[5] The salaries paid to the office and janitorial staff were generous by any definition and were as follows: Lola Wheeler, office manager, $555 a week; Louis Borchelt, insurance office supervisor, $435; Christine Gross, dues office supervisor, $390; Linda Greer, office secretary, $300; and Delores Hemmerer, janitor (part time), $190. Included in this figure was any overtime which might be worked by the members of the office staff. They had made an agreement with Hurst in 1980 for a pay increase with the understanding that they would not receive additional compensation for overtime, except by way of compensatory time, and then only with official permission.

Hurst told the office employees that it was not necessary to submit the contract to the executive board for approval and asked the employees to keep the contract a secret since he did not want it to become an issue in the campaign. They agreed to do so. Because he did not submit the contract to the Union's executive board for approval, this omission caused some concern among the bargaining unit members as to its binding effect upon Local 574 in the event of a change of administration. On November 2, they spoke with Clyde E. Craig, the Union's attorney, when Craig was in Cape Girardeau, and asked him if he thought the contract was legal and binding. He expressed the opinion that it was binding. On December 3, Hurst sent Craig a detailed letter which had been composed by Wheeler and which asked Craig several specific questions about the legality of clerical unit contract. The contents of this letter will be discussed infra. The letter mentioned Wheeler by name as a contact person and suggested the possibility of a conference call to discuss Craig's response to the questions posed. The office staff arranged such a call to Craig on December 9 and discussed their concerns with him personally. Hurst was a party to this conversation. In response to a question posed to Craig concerning whether it was necessary to have executive board approval of the contract before it was final and binding on Respondent, Craig gave a guarded reply, saying that it was not necessary for the employees to have the contract approved by the executive board since Hurst had the authority to hire office employees and set their wage rates. However, he felt that it would strengthen their hand if such approval was obtained.

Late in the campaign, the political attacks on the office employees became so pronounced that the staff members felt compelled to reply. They drew up a piece of campaign literature defending their job performance and attempting to justify the pay they were receiving. It was entitled "We've Kept Our Mouths Shut as Long as We Can." In this open letter, they asked the membership to vote for the Hurst slate and signed it individually. It was then mailed to the entire membership by one of the Hurst-slate candidates.

The 2-week transition period between the Prater victory on December 14 and the end of the Hurst administration on December 31 was marked by considerable tension in Respondent's office, none of which was alleviated by the behavior of the defeated officers. Hurst visited the office only once or twice during this period of time. He refused to speak with Prater when the latter came to the office to discuss union business. Wheeler brought to Hurst's attention the fact that a per capita tax of $3.50 was due to the International from Local 574 on December 20 and that there was not enough money in the Union's checking account to meet the payment. She suggested that Hurst convene a meeting of the executive board to authorize the cashing of a certificate of deposit so that funds would be on hand for this purpose. Hurst refused, telling her to let Prater worry about it when he took over.

On December 16, Wheeler wrote a letter to Prater about ongoing union business, particularly the requirement of an annual audit which would soon fall due. She recommended to Prater that he continue to retain the accounting firm which had been handling the books in the past. She also informed him that Hurst would permit Prater to examine the books in the office at his convenience. Prater spoke with Wheeler on several occasions during the transition period. On one such occasion, she informed him about the delinquency in the payment of the per capita tax to the International and wrote a letter to the International, at Prater's request telling the International that the money would be immediately forthcoming after he assumed office.

On or about December 30, Hurst wrote a letter to Prater outlining the problems and activities of the Union which required his immediate attention and left it on the desk in the office which Prater was about to occupy. Attached to this letter was a copy of the collective-bargaining agreement between Local 574 and the Office Clerical Union which Hurst had signed on September 2.

Prater took advantage of New Year's Eve and New Year's Day holidays to go over the books and records of the Union. He came across Hurst's letter and with it the first information which had come to his attention concerning the clerical unit contract. On January 2, 1981, the first working day of his term of office, Prater held a meeting with the clerical staff and with incoming President Richard Griggs, incoming Vice President Wilbur Muenche, and Joseph Masterson, a newly appointed business agent. He told the assembled individuals that he intended to be boss and was told by the members of the office staff in response that he would have their full support and cooperation. He also said he wanted to eliminate some of the tension in the office. He noted that he was aware that the clerical staff had endorsed his opponents during the election but assured them that "politics is over," that the staff and the new officers were going to be friends, and that everyone should relax because no one was going to be fired. Prater criticized a claim for wages which had been made by some clerical employees for their service as poll watcher at the December 14 election and said that the claim would not be honored. He also told the employees that he had read the clerical contract and did not like it but would be bound by it, adding that if an economic pinch came about, Linda Greer, as the most junior employee in the office, would be the first to be laid off. He also outlined certain changes in the office procedure, saying that if at any time he were not in the office, employees should refer contract interpretations on grievable matters to Griggs, the new president, rather than answering the questions themselves. He also told the office personnel that he wanted them to adhere strictly to an 8-hour day and did not want them working beyond 4:30 p.m.

On the following Tuesday, Prater drove to St. Louis to confer with the Local's attorney. I credit corroborated admissions from Prater that, during this consultation, his attorneys showed him the letter of December 3, 1980, which Hurst had written to Craig requesting Craig's advice concerning the binding effect of the clerical unit contract.[6] On Wednesday morning, Prater arrived at the union office before its scheduled opening hour of 8 a.m. When Wheeler arrived for work, he told one of the business agents who was on hand to ask her to come into the office. When she entered the office, Prater informed her that she was discharged, that he could not work with her, did not trust her, and was not going to employ her any longer. Wheeler asked him what was wrong. I credit her testimony to the effect that Prater then said that he had been in St. Louis at the office of the Union's law firm and had seen the letter which she wrote to the firm concerning the clerical contract. He insisted that she had written the letter, even though it bore Hurst's signature, because he felt that Hurst could hardly sign his own name. He then told Wheeler that he did not like the letter, felt that she was working against him, and insisted that he simply would not have it. He instructed her to clean out her desk and leave the premises. He also voiced the opinion that the clerical contract was illegal.

About this time, two other office employees, Linda Greer and Christine Gross, arrived for work. They went into Prater's office and were told by Prater that Wheeler had been fired and that he was not going to recognize their contract with Local 574 because Craig had said the contract was illegal. He also said that he had seen a letter in Craig's office and it had made him very angry. He then gave them the option of working without a contract, but with no reduction in wages or benefits, or of walking out with Wheeler. Greer and Gross left the office to discuss it.

Before leaving the office, Wheeler phoned fellow employee Louise Borchelt, told her that she (Wheeler) had just been fired, and asked Borchelt to come immediately to the office. After Borschelt arrived, she and her fellow workers had a total of three conversations with Prater. In the course of these conversations, Prater told the three remaining employees that the contract was invalid but that they could work if they wanted with the same pay and benefits they had been receiving. Prater was asked to reconsider his decision to discharge Wheeler, but he refused. He told the employees that, if they walked out, their action would be deemed a voluntary quit on their part. They asked Prater what it was in the contract that he did not like. His reply was that he did not like anything about it and was not going to discuss it because his attorney told him that it was illegal. He was also asked to reconsider his disavowal of the contract but he refused. After the employees caucused briefly, Prater spoke with them again but merely to reiterate what he had said before. He argued that the contract was illegal because he could not act both as their employer and as their union representative. He also advised them, as their union representative, not to go on strike. At this point, all of the employees, including Wheeler, left the office and went to consult an attorney.

On the afternoon of January 7, they established a picket line in front of the Teamsters office and carried hand-lettered signs which read: "Teamsters Local Union No. 574 refuses to recognize Office Employees and Building Maintenance Employees Unit." They maintained their picket line in front of the union office until February 8. At the regular membership meeting which occurred on January 11, the turmoil which had erupted in the business office on January 7 came to the floor of the meeting. All the striking office employees, including Wheeler, were present and, as they were union members, they participated in the meeting. Prater described the contents of the clerical contract to the membership and said that he had known nothing of it before taking office. He said that the outgoing members of the executive board were also unaware of its existence. He assured the members that, if the office employees had transferred their membership to Local 688 in St. Louis and had negotiated a contract using the St. Louis local as their bargaining agent, the contract would have been valid, but he insisted that it was a conflict of interest for Local 574 to act both as employer and as union representative for the office staff. Prater was asked from the floor why he had discharged Wheeler. He replied that he could not answer upon advice of his attorney. Wheeler challenged Prater concerning the statement made to him by his attorneys that there was a conflict of interest on the part of Local 574 in recognizing the clerical union, noting that his attorney was telling him a different story from the one the office staff had received from the same lawyer a few weeks earlier. Prater also insisted that the contract with the office staff was invalid because it had not been approved by the executive board. The meeting wore on in a bitter wrangle over the events which had transpired on January 7. One member suggested that Wheeler be reinstated and another made a formal motion that the clerical contract be recognized. Prater refused to recognize the motion, stating that he would not allow 300 to 400 members to make the decision for the entire membership, because he had to represent all of them.

Prater began to hire replacements for Wheeler and the striking employees. On January 23, the strikers wrote Prater a letter requesting reinstatement. The letter was ignored. On February 9, their attorney wrote Prater a similar letter offering reinstatement but received no response. At the hearing, Prater testified that there were no vacancies in the office when these letters were received and none have arisen since that time.

II. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

A. The Supervisory Status of Lola Wheeler

The parties to this litigation have vigorously contested the issue of whether Wheeler was either a supervisor within the meaning of Section 2(11) of the Act or a managerial employee who lacks the protection of the Act, and they have offered a great deal of evidence and argument in support of their respective contentions. The strongest indications pointing to her supervisory or managerial status are that, as the office staff grew from a one-woman operation, Wheeler took on the title of office manager and was paid a salary at the time of her discharge of $555 per week, plus fringe benefits. On the other hand, the record establishes that her daily duties were both clerical and administrative in character. She kept the Union's books, distributed incoming mail, handled filing and typing for business agents, and performed other related chores. It is also clear from the record that she did not hire or fire anyone. On one or two occasions, she participated in the interviewing or recruitment of a couple of clerical employees, and on one occasion gave a candidate for employment a typing test at the request of Respondent's secretary-treasurer.[7] Respondent's office staff was small and was made up of capable, experienced women who required little, if any, supervision in the daily performance of their duties. There was rarely if ever any need to administer discipline. The responsibility for doing so reposed in the secretary-treasurer.[8] The only direction which Wheeler gave to other clerical personnel was to parcel out extra or overflow typing work which had been given to her by business representatives. In such instances, she would assign the work to whichever clerical employee was caught up with her regular duties and was available for additional work. Wheeler made routine purchases of office equipment and supplies and maintained a log showing which business agents were out of the office and where they could be reached. Respondent observed a policy of flextime with respect to its clerical employees, all of whom were expected to work overtime without additional compensation when their duties required. If one of these employees desired time off for a personal errand, they would inform Wheeler that they were leaving.

[6] Since the letter was in the hands of the Union's attorneys, Prater had at least constructive knowledge of its contents, but it is clear from the record that, despite protestations to the contrary, he had actual knowledge as well.

Most of the clerical employees had their own basic specialized assignments and Wheeler was not free to change these assignments. Because of their expertise in their areas of responsibility, other employees were sometimes referred to as supervisors although they had no one to supervise. This supervisory status referred to their responsibility for particular work, such as pension benefits or dues payments, rather than to any power which they might exercise over the tenure or job performance of another individual. The same was basically true of Wheeler. The difference in her case was that she had 25 years of experience in Respondent's office, was intimately familiar with every facet of the Union's activities, and could answer questions and perform services pertaining both to the work of office clericals and business representatives as well. Hence, she was called upon repeatedly for advice or assistance by other personnel relating to matters in their areas of responsibility. She excelled in English composition and was regularly relied on to write letters, provide business agents with proposed contract language, and draw up documents such as grievances, organizing literature, unfair labor practice charges, and arbitration cases. Because of this expertise and experience, she also assisted in training new employees on the rare occasions when new employees were hired.

The bargaining unit here in question was composed of five individuals, including Wheeler. It is undisputed that they all reported to the secretary-treasurer, who is the officer empowered by the Union's bylaws to employ office personnel. Most secretary-treasurers were necessarily away from the office 2 or 3 days a week, although they could usually be reached in emergencies. One or more business agents, some of whom held union office, were normally present in the office during office hours. At the time of Wheeler's discharge, all office personnel were under strict orders from Prater to refer all questions involving contractual interpretations to himself or, in his absence, to the Union's new president, Griggs, rather than answer a member's inquiry directly. It is undisputed that, before this time, Wheeler might, in the absence of the secretary-treasurer, attempt to answer a member's inquiry on a contract question if there was an applicable precedent to guide her. While Wheeler attended executive board meetings, it was only in the capacity of a clerical employee who was assigned to take and prepare minutes.

The official reports are replete with Board and court cases on the subject of what constitutes a supervisor or a managerial employee, yet no area of the law better illustrates the Holmesian dictum that "general principles do not decide concrete cases."[9] The criteria for establishing supervisory responsibility are set forth in Section 2(11) of the Act and there is ample decisional authority for the proposition that the existence of any one of these elements is sufficient to designate an employee as a supervisor.[10] However, the sporadic or occasional exercise of supervisory authority is insufficient to constitute an employee a supervisor.[11] Nor is the mere existence of a title, which may connote supervisory or managerial authority, sufficient in and of itself to warrant a finding that the holder of the title is a supervisor.[12] Hence, titles such as "assistant director of nursing"[13] "personnel manager,"[14] "assistant personnel manager,"[15] "assistant branch manager,"[16] or "office manager"[17] have been found not to be conclusive of supervisory authority. "Titles and symbols without the possession and exercise of supervisory power do not constitute a person a supervisor."[18] Hence, the fact that Wheeler bore the title of office manager at Respondent's office and used this title from time to time in correspondence or interoffice memoranda does not by itself make her a supervisor.

[7] The clerical contract has an unusual provision which entitles clerical employees to notification and an opportunity to recommend candidates to fill any vacancies which might arise in the office staff. Because of the generous pay and allowances accorded to office employees, there has been very little turnover and few vacancies have ever arisen.

[8] There is testimony that several years ago Wheeler criticized employee Soma O. Jauch because she breached office policy by accepting a phone inquiry from a member during the lunch hour. I regard this event as both remote and isolated and having little probative value as to Wheeler's power and authority as of September 1980 or January 7, 1981.

One of the principal arguments advanced by Respondent in support of its contention on this point is that Wheeler assigned work to other employees in the office. However, the record is void of proof that she responsibly directed employees in the performance of their duties or that she exercised independent judgment in making these assignments. The work in question was routine typing which she gave to other clericals who did not happen to be busy at the moment. Such assignments do not invest supervisory authority in the individual making the assignment.[19] The Board has also held repeatedly that the deferral by employees to the statements or advice of another employee because of his or her expertise, ability, or experience does not amount to evidence of supervisory authority.[20] In this case, Wheeler was certainly a talented and experienced employee and it is no suprise that others looked to her for assistance or advice in the day-to-day operation of the Union's business office. This recognition of ability should not be confused with supervisory power, which reposed in the secretary-treasurer of Respondent.

One factor which strongly supports the employee status of Wheeler is the ratio of supervisors to employees which would result if she were found to be a supervisor.[21] There were five employees in the office, including a part-time janitor, who reported to the secretary-treasurer, resulting in a ratio of 5 to 1 if Wheeler should be deemed to be a rank-and-file employee. Were she found to be a supervisor, there would be four employees to two supervisors, a ratio which suggests an inordinate preponderance of supervisory personnel. See Rexart Color & Chemical Co., Inc., supra; J. J. Newberry Co., supra. Other factors relied on by Respondent in support of its argument that Wheeler is a supervisor are comparatively minor and have been addressed by the Board adversely to Respondent's contention in other cases. The fact that Wheeler made routine purchases of office supplies and equipment does also not evidence of supervisory authority on her part,[22] nor does the fact that she had access to confidential information warrant a different conclusion.[23] Indeed, it appears that all the office clerical employees had access to confidential information as part of their daily duties.

Respondent argues in the alternative that, if Wheeler is not a supervisor in the statutory sense, she is at least a managerial employee and hence was excluded from the protection of the Act. The Board has already held that Teamsters business agents are not managerial employees, even though they are charged with the responsibility for executing union policies and representing the Union in dealings with employers and its membership. Truck Drivers, Oil Drivers, Filling Station and Platform Workers Union, Local No. 705, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America, 244 NLRB 794 (1979). It has repeatedly come to the same conclusion with respect to union field representatives, both at the International and local level, regardless of what titles might be assigned to them by their principals.[24] In the instant case, one of the principal functions performed by Wheeler and the other personnel in the Union's business office was to assist business representatives in the performance of their various duties. Since these representatives are not managerial employees, it follows that their assistants, including Wheeler, should not qualify for this designation either. Accordingly, in light of the above-recited factors, I conclude that Lola Wheeler was neither a supervisor nor a managerial employee and was entitled to enjoy the protections provided by Sections 7 and 8 of the Act.[25]

B. The Clerical Employees Union and Its Contract With Respondent

Respondent admits that Office Employees and Building Maintenance Unit of Teamsters Local Union No. 574 is a labor organization, in that it meets the statutory criteria set forth in Section 2(5) of the Act. However, Respondent insists that this Union is an unlawfully assisted union and hence the contract which it concluded with Respondent is null and void. Respondent filed no charges against the clerical union and no complaint has been issued seeking to disestablish it or to nullify the contract which it concluded. Indeed, it would appear that such an attack might well be barred at this point because of limitations. However, this contention is made by way of defense to the complaint issued against it. For Respondent to prevail on this point, it would have to make a confession of error and then ask the Board to permit it to profit from the fruits of its own wrongdoing. Such a position has few equities and less support in the record.

[21] There is little basis here for applying a standard often used by the Board in finding supervisory status; namely, the suggestion that Wheeler was in complete charge of the office during the frequent absences of the secretary-treasurer. Not only was the Union's principal official normally available by phone in the event of an emergency, but it is also clear that one or more business agents, some of whom were elected officials, were normally present in the office, even when the secretary-treasurer was absent. There was no need for Wheeler to step in and fill the shoes of this official while he was away.

[25] The General Counsel argues, in the alternative, that even if Wheeler is found to be a supervisor or a managerial employee, her discharge would still violate Sec. 8(a)(1) of the Act because of its impact on other employees who do enjoy the protections of the Act. Beginning with Better Monkey Grip Company, 115 NLRB 170 (1956), enfd. 243 F.2d 836 (5th Cir. 1957), cert. denied 353 U.S. 864, the Board has held, in an almost consistent line of cases, that an employer violates Sec. 8(a)(1) of the Act when it discharges a supervisor for union-related considerations because of the interference this discharge causes with the rights of other employees. Alamo Express, Inc., and Alamo Cartage Company, 127 NLRB 1203 (1960); Miami Coca Cola Bottling Company doing business as Key West Coca Cola Bottling Company, 140 NLRB 1359 (1963); *Murray Golub, Selwyn Golub, and Albert Golub d/b/a Golub Bro. However, because of the above finding relating to the status of Wheeler, it is not necessary to address this contention of the General Counsel and I do not do so.

The clerical union in question was formed as the result of an option which was freely and intelligently exercised by all of the members of the office staff when confronted with the situation which faced them in the summer of 1980. Prater admitted that, had they joined a sister local, the question of unlawful assistance would not exist and the contract of September 2 would be legal and binding. Indeed, Hurst expressed a similar opinion relating to Local 688 when Wheeler first approached him about the desire of the clerical staff to organize. There is no doubt that the Union, informally organized though it was, enjoyed the unanimous support of the members of the bargaining unit, as is evidenced by the signatures contained on the contract in question. There is also no doubt that the initial impetus toward the formation of this Union and the decision to take this route toward collective bargaining sprang from the desires of the employees, who came to their conclusion with no prompting or suggestion from Respondent's officers. Inasmuch as Wheeler has been found to be a rank-and-file employee, any contention of vicarious sponsorship because of her activities must perforce fail.

Respondent points to a provision in the September 2 contract which requires employees to join Local 574 within 30 days of their employment. From this premise it argues that, by joining Local 574, an employee designates Respondent as its bargaining agent. Since Respondent cannot be both an employee's employer and bargaining agent, a conflict of interest has been created which should permit the Respondent to escape the contractual obligations it undertook on September 2. The contention is frivolous.

It is undisputed that all the members of the office staff of Local 574 had long been members of that Union and had joined in order to be eligible to participate in the Teamsters health, welfare, and pension benefits. Because of the peculiar though not unique posture of this case—involving, as it does, a labor organization acting as an employer rather than as a collective-bargaining representative—the action of its employees in seeking and obtaining membership takes on a different character than it would if they were employed by a commercial enterprise and had joined the Teamsters to secure its services as their bargaining agent. For employees of Respondent's office staff, membership in Local 574 is analogous to the situation which would exist if a commercial enterprise were to ask or insist that its employees also be corporate stockholders. It was Respondent who paid the employees here in question and who asked for services in return. It was their employer and there can be no quibble on this point. Membership in Local 574 was simply a means of obtaining employee benefits, not a vehicle for obtaining collective-bargaining representation. The employees had designated their own Union as their bargaining representative and Respondent had recognized and dealt with it as such until January 7, 1981. When this representative entered into a contract with Local 574 which required membership in Local 574, it was not abridging any of the legal rights of the members of the clerical union. There is no statutory reason why such a provision might not be included in their contract under the facts and circumstances of this case. See Retail Store, Employees Union, Local 428, AFL-CIO, supra.

Respondent points to the way in which Hurst negotiated the contract with Wheeler as evidence to support its contention that the clerical union was unlawfully assisted. The question of unlawful assistance does not turn on whether a union was given a hard time or an easy time in negotiating a contract. The question of assistance goes to the manner in which a union comes into being and achieves initial recognition. What follows from that point is simply the fortunes of war. No one in authority in Respondent's organization in any way assisted in the formation of the Union or suggested that it be formed. Indeed, the contrary suggestion was made. No one in authority in Respondent's organization influenced the decision on this point on the part of any bargaining unit member. When the independent clerical union achieved majority status, Respondent had no legitimate reason for denying it recognition or for refusing to bargain with it. Accordingly, the defense that an assisted union entered into a sweetheart contract finds no support whatsoever in the record in this case.

With respect to Hurst's authority to negotiate the contract in question, it is clear that Hurst, as secretary-treasurer, had authority under Respondent's bylaws to hire office employees and to fix their compensation. This is sufficient authority to permit him to establish wages, hours, and terms and conditions of employment on a collective basis as well as on an individual employee basis. In determining such authority, the Board is not bound by technical rules of contract law or by the strictures of common law concepts of principal and agent. Adams Iron Works, Inc., 221 NLRB 71 (1975). Respondent's legal counsel informed the employees in the unit that the secretary-treasurer had authority, without executive board approval, to conclude the contract in question, and such a representation, in and of itself, should estop Respondent from reneging on the contract after it was concluded. Therefore, I conclude that Respondent was bound by the terms of the September 2 agreement. When, on January 7, 1981, it repudiated both the agreement and the underlying collective-bargaining relationship upon which the agreement was based, it violated Section 8(a)(1) and (5) of the Act. C & S Industries, Inc., 158 NLRB 454 (1966); Detroit Cabinet and Door Co., 247 NLRB 1415 (1980); Nedco Construction Corp., 206 NLRB 150 (1973); Home Roofing Co., Inc., 211 NLRB 910 (1974); Merryweather Optical Company, 240 NLRB 1213 (1979).

C. The Discharge of Lola Wheeler

Wheeler's leadership in her relationship to other office clerical employees was well recognized by Respondent. Indeed, it is an element of Respondent's argument that Wheeler was not an employee at all but a supervisor. It was Wheeler who negotiated the clerical union contract with Hurst and who also composed the letter which Hurst sent to his attorneys in early December seeking legal advice on the validity of that contract. Her name appears in the text of Hurst's letter. Prater strongly suspected that Wheeler drafted the letter and told her so at the time he discharged her.

There is no dispute that Wheeler as well as the rest of the clerical staff were political opponents of Prater during the election campaign which culminated in a "Team 80" victory on December 14. Prater had experienced run-ins with Wheeler during the time he was a rank-and-file member and relies on these events, rather than on her efforts on behalf of the clerical employee bargaining unit, to lend substance to his decision to fire her. He also points to the embarrassment he suffered by reason of the delay in transmitting the December per capita tax to the International office in Washington as a basis for her discharge, although it is difficult to see how this problem, overblown though it was, could be laid at Wheeler's doorstep. This delinquency was directly attributable to Hurst's refusal to put money in the checking account with which to meet the payment, all of which stemmed from Hurst's desire to embarrass a political opponent who had just defeated him. Given this set of facts, there was no way that Prater could have paid the tax until after he and his slate took office on January 1 and assumed the legal authority to cash the certificate of deposit which was used to pay the bill. Prater admits that Wheeler had no responsibility for paying the tax, so any problems in this regard were simply irrelevant to the performance of her duties.

However, all of these matters were well known to Prater when, on January 2, he held a harmony meeting with Wheeler and the other members of the office clerical staff for the purpose of enlisting their support for his new administration. He told them on this occasion that bygones would be bygones and that politics would be a thing of the past. He expressly stated that no clerical employee would be fired. Accordingly, any reliance on events or actions which predated this statement as a basis for discharging Wheeler is plainly pretextual. The motivating cause for his action necessarily lay in something which occurred thereafter.

Prater said that one of the reasons he fired Wheeler was that she worked overtime in violation of his instructions. The additional hours in question which she worked involved services actually performed for Respondent and did not impose upon Respondent any additional cost, unless it voluntarily elected to grant her compensatory time off. Indeed, her diligence in this regard could be attributed only to a desire to please a new boss and to get her work done. As a defense to a discriminatory discharge complaint, this pretext is probably unique in the annals of Board history. As an actual motivating cause for the events that followed, it is nonsensical, in that Prater was present at the office during the hours that Wheeler was assertedly there in violation of his instructions but said nothing to her. His afterthought—that he was just lying in wait to see if she would obey his orders—has an ominous and discriminating ring to it, if it has any meaning at all. Likewise, Wheeler's asserted slowness in getting out a mailing to shop stewards during the days immediately preceding her discharge have no standing as the precipitating cause of that decision, inasmuch as Prater testified that he had decided to fire Wheeler before learning of the alleged lateness of the mailing, something he did not discover until the morning of the termination and just a few moments before speaking to Wheeler.

The key to the discharge of Wheeler is the December 3 letter from Hurst to Craig which Prater first learned about on January 6, the day before he fired Wheeler. Upon visiting his attorney's office for the first time since becoming secretary-treasurer, Prater was shown a letter written by his bitter nemesis in an attempt to preserve the jobs of the office staff. He rightly judged that the letter originated with the discriminatee. The text of the letter is in the record. It recites a meeting between Hurst and Craig on November 2 in Hurst's office and sets forth Craig's oral opinion, rendered at that time, that the clerical contract (a copy of which was enclosed) would be binding both on Hurst and any successor who might be elected. The Hurst-Wheeler letter goes on to recite that Prater's slate had threatened to fire the office staff and that, under great provocation, the staff abandoned its neutrality. It spoke of "a great many false statements" about incumbent officers which the "Team 80" slate had circulated, as well as the threat of the Prater slate to replace them.

The letter then posed to Craig a number of specific questions, including whether it was necessary to obtain executive board ratification of the clerical contract whether such approval prior to election day would carry greater weight than approval granted after that date, and whether the office staff should inform Prater or Davis, another candidate, of the existence of the contract before or after January 1, in the event that either of them was elected to replace Hurst. The letter went on to ask detailed legal advice as to how an employee should proceed to vindicate her rights in the event that the Hurst slate lost and she should be discharged. It asked whether aggrieved clerical employees could picket the Teamsters building, whether a civil suit would lie in the event of an unjust discharge, and whether Craig or his firm could represent any clerical employee who needed legal assistance in such matters. The letter concluded with the expressed hope that Hurst would be reelected and with the request that Craig contact either Wheeler or himself to let them know when he could contact them to discuss the questions raised.

When Prater saw this letter, he became angry and decided to discharge Wheeler. It is clear from the record that it is the contents of the letter which had just been brought to Prater's attention that sealed Wheeler's fate and it is the character of this letter which determines the lawfulness of the discharge. There is a great deal in the letter which suggests partisan politics and a high degree of political coordination between Hurst and Wheeler against Prater and Prater's slate. It is understandable that Prater should have become incensed upon receiving this information, since it establishes that at least in one respect his political adversaries were plotting against him. However, the basic thrust of the letter is to protect the fruits of collective bargaining and the protected concerted activities and union activities of employees which antedated collective bargaining. The effort of the office employees, even though they were acting in conjunction with Hurst, in calling upon Craig for advice and assistance concerning their contract was in and of itself a protected concerted activity and a union activity, inasmuch as it was a collective effort to assure the continuation of their employment status. When Prater fired Wheeler for engaging in this activity, he was firing her for something more than taking part in political activity designed to prevent him from becoming her employer. He was firing her because of activities which she undertook, in conjunction with other employees, relating to wages, hours, and terms and conditions of employment and in derogation of her right to form and support the clerical employee union. Accordingly, the discharge violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

D. The Clerical Unit Strike of January 7, 1981

The precipitating causes of the strike by the office clerical unit were twofold—the discharge of Wheeler and the repudiation by Prater of their contract and their Union. Prater informed all the office staff on the morning of January 7 that he had been advised by his attorney that the September 2 contract which Hurst had signed was illegal. He also told them they could continue to work under existing wages and benefits but without the protection of the agreement. One of those protections was a grievable provision preventing discharge except for just cause. After a brief caucus among themselves, the office staff came to the conclusion that, if Prater repudiated their contract, they had no more protection than did Wheeler so they decided to strike. As noted above, the repudiation of this agreement and of the collective-bargaining relationship which gave rise to it was an unfair labor practice. Accordingly, when the office staff walked out and established a picket line in front of the building, they were acting to protest not one but two unfair labor practices. Hence, their strike was an unfair labor practice strike.

On January 23, and again on February 9, the office employees requested reinstatement, and sought it unconditionally. On both occasions, their request went unheeded. An employer is under a legal obligation to reinstate unfair labor practice strikers upon their unconditional request, and it is no defense that it has hired others to take their places. The failure to honor such a request is an unfair labor practice, in and of itself. National Tape Corporation, 187 NLRB 321 (1970); Abingdon Nursing Center, 197 NLRB 781 (1972); ABCO Engineering Corp., 201 NLRB 686 (1973). When Prater failed to reinstate the striking clerical employees in late January and early February, Respondent violated Section 8(a)(1) and (3) of the Act.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact, and upon the entire record herein considered as a whole, I make the following:

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. Respondent Teamsters Local Union No. 574, affiliated with International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen, and Helpers of America, is now and at all times material herein has been an employer engaged in commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

2. Office Employees and Building Maintenance Employees Unit of Teamsters Local Union No. 574 is a labor organization within the meaning of Section 2(5) of the Act.

3. All full-time and regular part-time office employees and building maintenance employees employed at Respondent's Cape Girardeau, Missouri, office, excluding business representatives, guards, and supervisors as defined in the Act, constitute a unit appropriate for collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(b) of the Act.

4. Since on or about September 1, 1980, Office Employees and Building Maintenance Employees Unit of Teamsters Local Union No. 574 has been the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of all of the employees in the unit found appropriate in Conclusions of Law 3 for the purpose of collective bargaining within the meaning of Section 9(a) of the Act.

5. By withdrawing recognition from Office Employees and Building Maintenance Employees Unit of Teamsters Local Union No. 574 as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of its employees in the bargaining unit found appropriate in Conclusions of Law 3 herein; and by repudiating the provisions of a collective-bargaining agreement concluded with said labor organization on or about September 2, 1980, Respondent herein violated Section 8(a)(5) of the Act.

6. By discharging Lola Wheeler because of her membership in and activities on behalf of Office Employees and Building Maintenance Employees Unit of Teamsters Local Union No. 574; and by refusing to reinstate Louis Borchelt, Delores Heisserer, Christine Gross, and Linda Greer upon their unconditional offer to return to work, Respondent herein violated Section 8(a)(3) of the Act.

7. By the acts and conduct set forth above in Conclusions of Law 6 and 7; and by telling employees, including Lola Wheeler, that Lola Wheeler had been discharged because of her union and protected concerted activities, Respondent herein violated Section 8(a)(1) of the Act.

8. The aforesaid unfair labor practices have a close, intimate, and adverse effect on the free flow of commerce within the meaning of Section 2(2), (6), and (7) of the Act.

THE REMEDY

Having found that Respondent herein has engaged in certain unfair labor practices, I will recommend that it be required to cease and desist therefrom and to take certain affirmative actions which are designed to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Act. Since the violations of Section 8(a)(1) of the Act found herein are serious and pervasive, I will recommend to the Board a so-called broad 8(a)(1) order designed to suppress any and all violations of that Section of the Act. Hickmott Foods, Inc., 242 NLRB 1357 (1979). I will also recommend that Respondent be required to offer full and immediate reinstatement to Lola Wheeler, Louis Borchelt, Delores Heisserer, Christine Gross, and Linda Greer, and to make them whole for any loss of earnings which they may have sustained by reason of the discriminations practiced against them, in accordance with the Woolworth formula,[26] with interest thereon at the adjusted prime rate used by the Internal Revenue Service for the computation of tax payments. Olympic Medical Corporation, 250 NLRB 146 (1980); Isis Plumbing & Heating Co., 138 NLRB 716 (1962). In the case of Lola Wheeler, backpay shall commence running as of the date of her discharge. Abilities and Goodwill, Inc., 241 NLRB 27 (1979). In the case of the four unfair labor practice strikers, backpay shall commence running 5 days after they first offered to return to work. I will recommend that Respondent be required to recognize Office Employees and Building Maintenance Employees Unit of Teamsters Local Union No. 574 as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of its office clerical and janitorial employees and to give effect to the collective-bargaining agreement which it concluded with this labor organization on or about September 2, 1980. C & S Industries Inc., supra; J & L Painting Contractors, Inc., 239 NLRB 867 (1978). I will also recommend that Respondent be required to post the usual notice, advising its employees of their rights and of the results in this case.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact, conclusions of law, and upon the entire record herein considered as whole, and pursuant to Section 10(c) of the Act, I make the following recommended:

ORDER[27]

The Respondent, Teamsters Local Union No. 574, affiliated with International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen, and Helpers of America, Cape Girardeau, Missouri, and its officers, trustees, business representatives, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Telling employees that an employee has been discharged for engaging in union activities and in protected concerted activities.

(b) Refusing to reinstate unfair labor practice strikers upon their unconditional request for reinstatement.

(c) Discouraging membership in or activities on behalf of Office Employees and Building Maintenance Employees Unit of Teamsters Local Union No. 574 or any other labor organization by discharging employees or otherwise discriminating against them in their hire or tenure.

(d) Refusing to recognize and bargain with the aforesaid labor organization as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of all of its full-time and regular part-time office clerical and janitorial employees, exclusive of guards, business representatives, and supervisors as defined in the Act, and refusing to give full force and effect to a collective-bargaining agreement which it concluded on or about September 2, 1980, with the aforesaid labor organization.

(e) By any other means or in any manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed to them by Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action designed to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Act:

(a) Recognize and, upon request, bargain collectively with Office Employees and Building Maintenance Employees Unit of Teamsters Local Union No. 574 as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of all of Respondent's full-time and regular part-time office clerical and janitorial employees, exclusive of guards, business representatives, or supervisors, as defined in the Act.

(b) Give full force and effect to a collective-bargaining agreement which Respondent concluded with the aforesaid labor organization on or about September 2, 1980.

(c) Offer to Lola Wheeler, Louis Borchelt, Delores Heisserer, Christine Gross, and Linda Greer full and immediate reinstatement to their former or substantially equivalent employment, without prejudice to their seniority or to the rights which they previously enjoyed, and make them whole for any loss of pay or benefits which they have suffered by reason of the discriminations found herein, in the manner described above in the section entitled "The Remedy."

(d) Preserve and, upon request, make available to the Board or its agents, for examination and copying, all payroll and other records neccesary to analyze the amount of backpay due under the terms of this Order.

(e) Post at its Cape Girardeau, Missouri, office copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix."[28] Copies of said notice, on forms provided by the Regional Director for Region 14, after being duly signed by Respondent, shall be posted by Respondent immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by Respondent for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by Respondent to insure that said notice is not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(f) Notify the Regional Director for Region 14, in writing, within 20 days from the date of this Order, what steps Respondent has taken to comply herewith.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that, insofar as the complaint alleges matters that have not been found herein to be violations of the Act, the said complaint is hereby dismissed.

[27] In the event no exceptions are filed as provided by Sec. 102.46 of the Rules and Regulations of the National Labor Relations Board, the findings, conclusions, and recommended Order herein shall, as provided in Sec. 102.48 of the Rules and Regulations, be adopted by the Board and become its findings, conclusions, and Order, and all objections thereto shall be deemed waived for all purposes.

[28] In the event that this Order is enforced by a Judgment of a United States Court of Appeals, the words in the notice reading "Posted by Order of the National Labor Relations Board" shall read "Posted Pursuant to a Judgment of the United States Court of Appeals Enforcing an Order of the National Labor Relations Board."

APPENDIX

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES
POSTED BY ORDER OF THE
NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD
An Agency of the United States Government

Teamsters Local Union No. 574 is posting this notice to comply with an Order of the National Labor Relations Board, which was issued after a hearing in a case in which we were found to have violated certain provisions of the National Labor Relations Act.

WE WILL NOT announce to employees that an employee has been discharged for engaging in union activities or in protected concerted activities.

WE WILL NOT refuse to reinstate unfair labor practice strikers upon their unconditional application to return to work.

WE WILL NOT discharge employees or otherwise discriminate against them in their hire or tenure in order to discourage their membership in or support of Office Employees and Building Maintenance Employees Unit of Teamsters Local Union No. 574, or any other labor organization.

WE WILL NOT in any other manner or by any means interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed them by Section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act. These rights include the right to form, join, or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in other concerted activity for their mutual aid and protection.

WE WILL recognize and bargain collectively with Office Employees and Building Maintenance Employees Unit of Teamsters Local Union No. 574 as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of all of our full-time and regular part-time office clerical and janitorial employees, exclusive of business representatives, guards, and supervisors as defined in the Act, and WE WILL give full force and effect to a contract which we concluded with that labor organization on or about September 2, 1980.

WE WILL offer to Lola Wheeler, Louise Borchelt, Delores Heisserer, Christine Gross, and Linda Greer full and complete reinstatement to their former or substantially equivalent positions, and WE WILL make them whole for any loss of earnings they may have suffered by reason of the discriminations practiced against them, with interest.

Fremont Manufacturing Division, The Oil Gear Company, Inc. and Local Lodge No. 31, International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, AFL-CIO. Case 17-CA-10387

November 19, 1981

DECISION AND ORDER

By Members Fanning, Jenkins, and Zimmerman

Upon a charge filed on May 29, 1981, by Local Lodge No. 31, International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, AFL-CIO, herein called the Union, and duly served on Fremont Manufacturing Division, The Oil Gear Company, Inc., herein called Respondent, the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, by the Regional Director for Region 17, issued a complaint and notice of hearing that Respondent had engaged in and was engaging in unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 8(a)(5) and (1) and Section 2(6) and (7) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended. Copies of the charge and the complaint and notice of hearing were duly served on the parties to this proceeding.

With respect to the unfair labor practices, the complaint alleges in substance that on April 9, 1981, following a Board election in Cases 17-RC-9112 and 17-RC-9122, the Union was duly certified as the exclusive collective-bargaining representative of Respondent's employees in the unit found appropriate;[1] and that, commencing on or about May 15, 1981, and at all times thereafter, Respondent has refused, and continues to date to refuse, to bargain collectively with the Union as the exclusive bargaining representative, although the Union has requested and is requesting it to do so.[2] On June 29, 1981, Respondent filed its answer to the complaint admitting in part, and denying in part, the allegations in the complaint.

On July 21, 1981, counsel for the General Counsel filed directly with the Board a Motion for Summary Judgment. Subsequently, on July 27, 1981, the Board issued an order transferring the proceeding to the Board and a Notice To Show Cause why the General Counsel's Motion for Summary Judgment should not be granted. Respondent thereafter filed a statement in opposition to the General Counsel's Motion for Summary Judgment.

Pursuant to the provisions of Section 3(b) of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, the National Labor Relations Board has delegated its authority in this proceeding to a three-member panel.

Upon the entire record in this proceeding, the Board makes the following:

Ruling on the Motion for Summary Judgment

In its answer to the complaint and its statement in opposition to the Motion for Summary Judgment, Respondent contends, in substance, that the Board's certification is invalid (1) because "line leaders" are supervisors and should not be included in the unit found appropriate; (2) because at a hearing on Respondent's objections the Hearing Officer, contrary to the Regional Director's instructions, refused to allow Respondent to present evidence with respect to the supervisory status of the line leaders; and (3) because the Board agent conducting the election failed to honor Respondent's challenge to the ballot cast by line leader Roy Rodgers, and thereby interfered with the election process, requiring that the election be set aside. Respondent also contends, assuming for the sake of argument that the certification is valid, that the Union, which requested certain information from Respondent by virtue of its claimed status as the statutory bargaining representative of Respondent's employees, is not entitled to any information concerning subcontracting without a greater showing of relevance.[3] Respondent does, however, concede that, assuming it is obligated to bargain, the Union is entitled to the requested information with respect to wages, hours, age, and sex of its unit employees, as well as a listing of unit employees on temporary

[1] Official notice is taken of the record in the representation proceeding, Cases 17-RC-9112 and 17-RC-9122, as the term "record" is defined in Secs. 102.68 and 102.69(g) of the Board's Rules and Regulations, Series 8, as amended. See LTV Electrosystems, Inc., 166 NLRB 938 (1967), enfd. 388 F.2d 683 (4th Cir. 1968); Golden Age Beverage Co., 167 NLRB 151 (1967), enfd. 415 F.2d 26 (5th Cir. 1969); Intertype Co. v. Penello, 269 F.Supp. 573 (D.C.Va. 1967); Follett Corp., 164 NLRB 378 (1967), enfd. 397 F.2d 91 (7th Cir. 1968); Sec. 9(d) of the NLRA, as amended.

[2] The complaint herein contained an allegation of a general refusal to bargain arising out of Respondent's admitted purpose of testing the Board's certification of the Union as the exclusive bargaining representative of its employees in the unit found appropriate. Thus, Respondent contends, inter alia, that its "line leaders" are statutory supervisors and that the Board erroneously included this classification in a unit of production and maintenance employees. The complaint additionally alleged that Respondent has failed and refused to provide the Union with certain requested information as being necessary for and relevant to the Union's status as exclusive bargaining representative of certain of Respondent's employees. The request for information, as well as a general request to bargain, was made on April 16, 1981, and renewed on May 4, 1981. Respondent denied both requests on May 15, 1981.

[3] Respondent filed its statement in opposition to the General Counsel's Motion for Summary Judgment on August 24, 1981, contending, in part, and as noted above, that summary judgment should not be granted with respect to Respondent's refusal to provide the Union with information regarding subcontracting. Thereafter, on September 2, 1981, the Union sent a telegram to the Board and all parties withdrawing its request for the subcontracting information. Counsel for the General Counsel then filed, on September 11, 1981, a motion to amend the complaint herein so as to delete that portion which refers to the Union's request for information regarding subcontracting by Respondent. In view of the fact that neither the Union nor the General Counsel wishes to proceed with respect to Respondent's alleged refusal to supply information concerning subcontracting, we hereby grant the General Counsel's motion to amend, but, in so doing, we do not pass on the merits of that allegation.

layoff. The General Counsel contends, with respect to all issues excepting Respondent's failure and refusal to provide certain requested information, that Respondent is raising issues which were, or could have been, raised in the representation proceeding and is precluded from relitigating them herein. The General Counsel further contends that, as a matter of law, Respondent has violated Section 8(a)(5) of the Act by failing and refusing to provide certain requested information to the statutory representative of its unit employees. We agree with the General Counsel.
